CO-OPERATION OR DICTATORSHIP NATION'S CHOICE, SAYS BUTLER

New York City, Oct. 12.—The nation must accept co-operation or dictatorship, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university, declared in a radio address here.

"Men must have confidence in the honesty and fairness of their social, their economic, their financial and their political order," Dr. Butler said in declaring the first step toward recovery was the re-establishment of confidence. "They must be able to trust their fellow men, and they must be given protection by society as a whole against exploitation, persecution and theft," he added.

Dr. Butler traced the sources of the present world depression, declaring that one of the causes was the ruthless exploitation of the masses by those in position of power over money, credit and securities.

"There are just two ways," he said, "in which recovery from these disastrous happenings may be sought. One is to be compelled to act at the dictation of an absolute authority, and the other is to be persuaded and induced to act willingly in co-operation with our fellows under the guidance and with the full co-operation, the full assistance of government." The latter, he predicted, is the course which the American people will choose.

Discussing the national recovery legislation, he urged those who carp at it to weigh the possible alternative.

Dr. Butler cited the examples of Russia, which turned to communism, and of Italy and Germany, which turned to fascism. "There are troubled spots," he said, "in a dozen other parts of the world. Our people, fortunately, are preserving order, freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assembly. Liberty is not read among us, but lives to inspire every act of our government and people."

But he warned that, in this new co-operation, "we must make every possible endeavor to move forward by consent, by friendly and frank discussion, and, when necessary, by mediation."

RAILWAY AGREES TO KEEP "HANDS OFF" OF UNIONS

Washington, Oct. 2.—Following complaints by organized labor and action by Joseph B. Eastman, federal co-ordinator of transportation, the Pere Marquette railroad has formally agreed not to interfere in any way with the formation of unions by its employes.

The Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks and the Railroad Employes' Department of the American Federation of Labor made the complaints, charging that the railroad management had exerted official influence in the formation of the Pere Marquette General Office Employes' association, both "company unions."

Eastman acted promptly on the complaints and announced the railroad had agreed to a "hands off" policy so far as labor organizations are concerned. He made public the text of orders by the railroad to officers, general office employes, mechanical department officers and shop craft workers.

The orders, issued "that there may be no misunderstanding" among employes of the railroad with respect to their rights to organize into labor unions, recited the provisions of the emergency railroad act concerning unions.

"It will be noted," the order continues, "that these provisions do not prohibit any particular variety of labor organization, but they do give the railroad employes absolute freedom of choice in joining such organizations without coercion on the part of the railway management; and they prohibit the latter from using railroad funds to maintain any labor organization."

American Federation of Labor Demands A. P. Obey NRA Code

Washington, Oct. 12.—Charging that the Associated Press refuses to recognize organized labor and is failing to live up to the conditions of the national recovery act, the American Federation of Labor condemned the press association in resolutions adopted by unanimous vote.

The resolution was introduced by Delegate Frank B. Powers, president of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of North America. It was submitted to the convention by the committee on industrial relations, whose chairman, John Coefield, told the delegates:

"There are four principal news gathering agencies in this country, three of which, the United Press, the International News Service and the Universal Service, have maintained union shop conditions with the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of North America, and one great news gathering agency, the Associated Press, has refused to enter into an agreement with the Commercial Telegraphers' union.

"Frank B. Noyes, publisher of the Washington Star and president of the Associated Press, does not come under the provisions of the national recovery act, thereby showing his unwillingness to co-operate with the president of the United States to the fullest extent in his efforts to bring about a reduction in the number of working hours as a means to increase employment without reducing purchasing power on the part of the employes of the Associated Press.

"Many of the employes of the Associated Press are members of the Commercial Telegraphers' union and more than 51 per cent of the 1,500 employes of the Associated Press have signified their desire to be represented by the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of North America, and as this is a right guaranteed to every employe under the provisions of the NRA, your committee recommends that this resolution be referred to the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to take such steps as may be necessary to bring about the application of the NRA to the employes of the Associated Press and recognition of their rights to organize and designate their representatives without coercion."

Following its adoption by the convention, the resolution was sent to the Executive Council for study and such future action as it may see fit to take.

The resolution cites that the Associated Press, despite efforts under the NRA to promote harmonious relations between labor and management, "persists in its attitude of aloofness from the provisions of the national industrial recovery act, and actual hostility toward organized labor with respect to its own employes." The resolution further "vigorously condemns the anti-labor policy" of the organization.

What Next!

A radically streamlined railroad coach, known as the "railplane," has just been built from designs by William P. Stout, airplane designer. It has a chrome-molybdenum steel tube frame and a shell of welded duralumin. It is driven by two automobile type engines and has a speed of 90 miles an hour. The car carries 50 passengers and has a weight of 25,000 pounds against the standard coach weight of 160,000 pounds.

RICHBERG DECLARES UNIONS MORE NECESSARY THAN EVER

Ottumwa, Iowa, Sept. 14.—Labor organizations are more necessary today than ever, Donald Richberg, general counsel of the national recovery administration, told a big meeting of workers here.

Richberg added that labor organization is necessary not only to advance the interests of industrial workers but to protect and promote the security of all. He continued:

"Industrial workers, transportation workers, farmers, all—must be organized so that they can express their needs, can compel recognition and satisfaction of their needs; so that no one element, no group in our civilization can dominate and exploit another group and profit unfairly out of the labor of their fellowmen."

BANK DEPOSIT GUARANTEE BOARD IS ESTABLISHED

Washington.—Organization of the board of the Federal Insurance corporation, which will set up a fund to guarantee deposits of banks which can qualify for admission, took place here.

Walter J. Cummings, of Chicago, as chairman, and E. G. Bennett, of Utah, and J. F. T. O'Connor, controller of the currency, were sworn into office.

The first step will be the preparation of regulations, following which there will be a nation-wide examination of banks to determine their eligibility.

The board issued the following statement: "The insurance deposit feature of the banking act of 1933 provides that the assets of the applying bank shall be adequate to enable it to meet all of its liabilities to depositors and other creditors."

The federal law for the guarantee of bank deposits was enacted by the last congress. It was supported by the American Federation of Labor as a necessary measure to protect millions of depositors from losing their savings through the rascality and inefficiency of the bankers.

Federal Workers See Victory on Pay Slash

Roosevelt Tells Green New Survey of Living Costs Will Be Basis of Government Wage Scale.

Washington.—President Roosevelt ordered a new survey of the cost of living as the basis for bringing the federal government within the scope of the NRA program by restoring at least a part of the 15 per cent salary reduction imposed upon government employes by the last session of congress.

The position of the president was made known to William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, who headed a delegation to the White House consisting of the Executive Council of the federation and a group representing the American Federation of Government Employes, whose convention was in session here.

Following the White House conference, Mr. Green said:

"The president expressed the hope that he could restore at least part of the salary cut soon.

"He said he had ordered a new survey of the cost of living and indicated a belief that it would show such an increase as to justify him in authorizing a smaller slash than 15 per cent in salaries and wages of government workers at an early date.

Outlook Is Promising.

"The president said he did not consider the cost of living estimate given him in July as complete because it did not take into account a number of items which enter into the every day household expenditures. He indicated he had given instructions that these important, but omitted, items be included in the new survey.

"I believe the outlook is promising for a restoration of at least part of the 15 per cent slash before long. Probably within two or three weeks the new survey will be in the president's hands and he will act shortly thereafter.

MORE ABOUT SENATOR WAGNER

convention in the history of the American Federation of Labor, I rise to extol the American worker upon a record of patient heroism almost unique in the annals of the world," Senator Wagner said in his address. He continued.

"During the four years following Jan. 1, 1929, the volume of unemployment in this country rose from approximately four million to thirteen and one-half, and the index of factory payrolls dropped from 94 to 35. These startling disparities evidence an almost incredible amount of physical suffering and acute mental anguish that spread as a plague over several million families, injuring them for a lifetime.

"In the face of this disaster, the worker, who has borne the greatest burdens, has maintained his self-control and group discipline, preserved his family ideals, and helped his stricken comrades. Despite an economic decline more sweeping than that which befell Germany, France, England, Italy or Japan, this same worker has retained unswerving faith in democratic institutions and has risen to participate equally with all others in the task of peaceful economic reconstruction.

"No such record would be possible without fine leadership. President Green and the other officers of the federation have been temperate in council despite intense grief at the plight of their people, and they are now contributing tremendously to the work of the recovery administration."

Real Battle to Come.

Senator Wagner referred briefly to business, employment and wage gains since last March, but said they have been confined to preliminary encounters with the forces of depression.

"The real battle lies ahead," he declared, "for there are over ten million men and women who are still walking the streets in an agonized search for the means of livelihood. If they are not helped quickly, our successes will be washed away in a deluge."

The speaker pointed out that satisfactory adjustment of wages is the central economic problem of today and vigorously advocated labor's program of higher wages and shorter working periods.

"Wages," he asserted, "must be paid in sufficient volume to absorb the full plant capacities of industry. We have merely scratched the surface of this problem. Payrolls are still 48 per cent below the 1926 level. They have lagged so far behind industrial activity that production, which rose 65 per cent from April to August, lost one-third of this gain in the single month following. As a matter of fact, during the past sixty days, we have had to adjust production downward to meet purchasing power. The proper cure is to raise wages up to meet production. This is the way to improve standards of living and take full advantage of our unrivaled natural and technical resources.

Wages Must Rise.

"There remains also the unsolved problem of co-ordinating wages and prices. Thus far, as I have said, there has been a gain of 17 per cent in the purchasing power of wages. But retail prices have mounted rapidly, and wholesale prices have made stupendous jumps, being 56 per cent higher in August than in March. Increases in the cost of living must be met by further increases in the wages with which goods are bought.

"In addition, the increased volume of total wages is due almost entirely to gains in employment and to rises in the minimum scales. Aside from this, there have not been appreciable changes in rates of pay, and consequently the improvements in standards of living have not been general and all-inclusive. Due to the rising prices, there have been actual declines in real wages.

"In view of these facts, it is essential to give constant attention to wage revision. Some of the minimum scales sould be higher, and perhaps it may be necessary to go further along the lines of regulating all wages. Certainly it will be necessary to change all schedules periodically so that they may conform to general economic trends.

For Shorter Hours.

"Reduction of hours of labor should continue. An average work week of less than 40 hours will be necessary to carry out the policy of absorbing the idle by spreading work."

Senator Wagner quoted figures to show that in 1929 labor received too small a share of the increased production of history.

"Wage improvements under the new deal should not be simply enough to keep factories going," he added. "Wages must be fixed with reference to a social program which intends to insure everyone a comfortable living and to give labor its just share of national wealth.

"The same thing is true of hours of labor. The time is near when increased leisure and opportunities for self-development will come to all as a product of prosperity, rather than to a few as a cure for depression. Only thus can the riddle of technological unemployment be solved."

The speaker told the convention that he did not see how there can be any disagreement about the meaning of the labor clause of the recovery act. "It cannot," he said, "be qualified by language inside of a code or outside of a code. The majority of workers in a plant may be represented by someone in the plant or outside of the plant. They may choose a union or someone else. Their rights are co-extensive with the liberties of business men in choosing directors, executives and spokesmen to deal with labor. This equality is the essence of the recovery act. Without it, the program must fail."

The senator appealed to labor to arbitrate first and use strikes only as a last resort. He said: "Any group which indulges in strikes or lockouts without first invoking the intervention of the national labor board violates every dictate of good policy and exhibits a complete oversight of the magnificent possibilities of our whole recovery philosophy and program."

In closing he expressed faith that labor will meet its obligations triumphantly and added that the nation is confident labor will retain its leading role in the great program for human betterment.

LAW SAYS BOSSES MUST DEAL WITH UNIONS, WAGNER ASSERTS

Collective Bargaining Clause Is Mandate, Not "Request," Head of NRA Board Declares—"Written Boldly" Into Recovery Act—Recognition Called Trouble Averter.

New York, Oct. 12.—Employers who refuse to deal with bona fide union representatives chosen by their workers, or who interfere, in any way, with the right of their employes to become members of labor organizations, are law violators.

That was the declaration made this week by Senator Robert F. Wagner, one of the authors of the national industrial recovery act and chairman of the N. R. A.'s national labor board, says a special correspondent to "Labor." The board has already made a formal and unanimous decision to that effect, and Wagner's declaration, made during the course of a speech here to the National Conference of Catholic Charities, was a reiteration of that ruling.

"Written Boldly Into Law.

"Under the recovery plan, co-operation between employer and employe is not merely urged," he pointed out. "It is written boldly into the law. The right of workers to select representatives of their own choosing is guaranteed. The duty of employers to bargain with these representatives is ordained.

"For the first time, labor is elevated to a position of equality with business. The dignity and worth of the working man are recognized. He is encouraged to co-operate with others of his class.

"In this way, he may check those in his own ranks who degrade standards by a willingness to work under indecent conditions. He may plan for progress instead of seeking it through random, disconnected efforts."

No Qualification of Rights.

Prior to his speech here Senator Wagner had issued a statement from his Washington office in which he said:

"It must be understood that the recovery law gives employes the clear right to choose whom they please (for representatives) either inside the factory or out. Early recognition of that fact by employers will avert many of the disputes now pouring in on the national labor board."

This statement, like his speech here, was distributed by the NRA as an official document representing the views of the administration.

The national conference of Catholic Charities was the largest in the history of the organization. Cardinal Hayes acted as host, and the delegates were an impressive cross-section of the clergy and laity of the church. Among the speakers, in addition to Senator Wagner, was Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Monsignor John A. Ryan, the famous Catholic economist, and former Gov. Alfred E. Smith.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mrs. Roosevelt were the guests of honor at the banquet which brought the conference to a close, and the president delivered a brilliant address over a national "hookup."

In its declaration of principles, the conference said:

"Catholic charities cannot be satisfied merely with the alleviation of human suffering and want. All persons who are capable of doing reasonably satisfactory work have a right to a living wage, they have a right to decent housing, they have a right to protection against the hazards of unemployment, accidents, sickness and old age.

"Catholic charities must assume the leadership in working for a new industrial order in which the rights of the wage-earner will be more fully protected."

Actors Secure Benefits Under NRA Theater Code

New York—Equity, the official publication of Equity Actors and Chorus associations, waxes enthusiastic over the gains members obtained in the legitimate theater code under the NRA. Some of the agreements embodied in the code will remedy sore spots that have afflicted the theater for years, according to the editorial, which adds:

"To have obtained the elimination of any one of them in the past would have seemed an achievement to Equity. Yet here they are, all in the code, all promised at once. Why shouldn't Equity be enthusiastic to see this fruition of years of toil on its part?"

Among advantages gained are promises not to release plays for motion pictures until they have completed their runs on the legitimate stage; the pledge of the managers to end ticket scalping; a minimum wage and abolishment of unnecessary and inhuman rehearsal periods.

Equity sees hope for enforcement of these agreements in the police powers, under the recovery act, of the legitimate theater committee, upon which both the Actors Equity and Chorus Equity are represented.

Tennessee Manufacturers' Association Communication Declares "We'll Need the T. M. A. Before We Get Through With This N. R. A. Business"—"It Will Take Organizations Like This to Free Us" From the Government and the Labor Unions—"Our First Allegiance Is to Our Home Association"—Please Send Check.

The "first allegiance" of Tennessee manufacturers is to their employers' union organization, according to a letter furnished The Labor World this week by a patriotic local employer who had received a sort of "call to arms" from an official of the state association.

"The government and the labor unions," the communication says, "will both have every plant in the country, and it will take organizations like this to free us," unless the manufacturer addressed sends a check to "help pay some pressing obligations."

"We are all going to need the T. M. A. before we get through with this N. R. A. business," the communication states, and "regardless of other organizations, our first allegiance is to our Home Association."

The letter is written on stationery of the Tennessee Manufacturers' association, "office of Frank Steffner, vice-president, Chattanooga," and is signed with Mr. Steffner's name.

The communication, which has been sent to Washington, along with other data in connection with local employers' attitude toward the program of President Roosevelt, follows:

October 12, 1933.

Gentlemen:

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, as Mr. Ripley would say, we are all going to need the T. M. A. before we get through with this N. R. A. business. The government and the labor unions will both have every plant in the country, and it will take organizations like this to free us.

Regardless of other organizations, our first allegiance is to our home association. Won't you send a check to help pay some pressing obligations?

Send what you can — it will help.

Very truly yours,
FRANK STEFFNER.

Local trades unionists, shown the above letter, expressed some curiosity as to how the "pressing obligations" referred to were incurred. The possibility that the salaries of some of the "private detectives," or "investigators," employed by certain local business men had been increased under the code was suggested by one labor official.

It is not believed, however, that a substantial percentage of Chattanooga manufacturers will approve the statement that "we are all going to need the T. M. A. before we get through with this N. R. A. business," nor that the "government and the labor unions will both have every plant in the country, and it will take organizations like this to free us."

Further, just how the Tennessee bosses' union would go about "freeing employers from the government" was a matter for considerable speculation.

Progressive Program Outlined for Workers

Convention Takes Action on Major Problems.

VOTES BOYCOTT ON GERMAN PRODUCTS

Speed in Public Works and Adequate Relief for Idle Demanded—Racketeering Denounced — All Officers Are Re-Elected.

Washington, Oct. 19. — With a broad and comprehensive program adopted to bring a better life to the wage-earners of the United States, the fifty-third annual convention of the American Federation of Labor adjourned here, with President Green and others calling it one of the greatest and most important conventions ever held by the federation.

"I feel that we can go from here to our homes inspired for new service," President Green told the delegates in declaring the convention adjourned.

"We have shown our capacity and our determination to run our own affairs," President Green said later. "We remain masters of our movement."

German Boycott Voted.

Outstanding among decisions of the convention in its closing sessions was approval of a boycott of German goods and steamship services to bring home to the German government the feeling of American workers against warfare waged by the Nazis on German trade unionism and the Jews. The boycott was voted by a shouted chorus of "ayes," after the convention had listened to stirring addresses by President Green and Selma M. Borchardt, delegate from the American Federation of Teachers.

President Green gave a moving account of the destruction of the German labor movement, which he declared was one of the finest and greatest under the sun. Pleading for more than protest by American labor against Nazi tyranny and terrorism, he said:

"It is not enough under extraordinary conditions of this kind that we merely voice our protest. That is not sufficient because it carries little weight, but I say to you, my friends, that if we declare that the people of America will refuse to buy your goods and ride on your ships, we will then strike at the heart of this terror."

Use of Boycott Defended.

Miss Borchardt said that she was rising to plead for the real Germany, the Germany which has given leadership in science and material progress, which has given a labor movement "inspired and inspiring." She told of facts she learned about the Hitler terrorism during a visit to Europe last summer, saying she had spent some time among the refugees outside Germany, because it was only from them that the truth of conditions in Germany can be obtained.

Miss Borchardt defended the use of the boycott against Germany, saying that it was a characteristic trade union weapon. "The boycott is the only message that can get across to those Germans," she said. "Censorship prevents their getting any other message."

Building Program Speed Urged.

The convention charged that the public works program is being delayed and placed much of the blame on local officials. Pointing out that hundreds of thousands of building trades workers whom the act was intended to benefit remain idle, the convention urged the utmost speed in the program and recommended that local labor bodies do all in their power to bring prompt inauguration of work.

A resolution for a federal license law, introduced by John P. Frey, was approved and the convention instructed the Executive Council to make a thorough study of the legal and constitutional aspects of such a law and to have a bill for a federal license law introduced in the coming session of congress. The bill would cover in-

Organized Labor Must Continue to Resent Injustice, A. F. of L. Head Says, in Praising Convention Record.

Washington, Oct. 20.—"Meeting in one of the most critical hours of all American history, the American Federation of Labor has made a record of which it may be proud," said President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, as the organization's fifty-third convention came to a close.

"We go forth from this convention equipped to meet the tremendous issues of the coming year. In times that are so fraught with change and with the portent of change as to sweep many from their moorings, the labor movement has appraised men and movements with logic and calmness, refusing to be swept off its feet, refusing to be swerved either to the right or to the left. Our movement remains the hope of democracy, the vanguard of its militant forces.

"At this hour the recovery administration is the great main-spring of our whole industrial existence. We have voted full support to the recovery administration, but we have refused to extend that approval to its mistakes. We have criticized as freely as we have espoused and therein lies the great value of our support. It is not the support of a 'yes man' movement.

Strike Right Upheld.

"We have invited the spokesman of the recovery administration to appear before our meetings and bring us their messages. We have listened to the president, to Gen. Johnson and to Senator Wagner. We have heard strikes repeatedly denounced, even to hearing them called 'economic sabotage.' But we have answered that as long as there is freedom in America the right to strike must be maintained inviolate and inviolable. We have urged that every other recourse be first tried and that the strike be a matter of last resort.

"There are fewer strikes today than in any other period of recovery and in this we are supported by Gen. Johnson and his statistical experts, as he himself told us. We have given notice to the nation that we will resent injustice and if there is to be condemnation let it be visited upon those who perpetrate injustice, not upon those who seek to correct it. We ask Americans to be fair in judging American wage-earners, ten million of whom remain jobless as the penalty for the terrible maladministration of employers.

Real Representation Is Demanded.

"We have demanded a rightful representation on all of the boards, committees and commissions of the recovery administration and we shall press for that representation. It must be representation of our own choosing, not of the choosing of others. We want and demand real representation, not a shadow that merely looks like it.

"We have a magnificent program for economic action and a sound program of political action. We are moving in both fields in the direction of a better life for those who are dispossessed, for those who toil and those who would toil if they but had the chance. We constitute the movement of the masses and our concern is for them. I am for myself proud of the record of our convention. Our work has been in the open where all might see.

"Those who foresaw scandal and internecine strife have been, of course, disappointed. We have had differences within our ranks as to policies in a few matters and we have differed like men. But like a disciplined movement, we have taken our votes and the majority rules for all of us.

Labor Will Make Good.

"We are happy that we were able to announce during our convention the fact that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers have been brought into our federation. It strengthens our movement with a splendid body of men and women. We never have had such complete unity, such a fine idealism, such a glorious opportunity. Our pledge to our common country is that we shall make good, that we shall strive on for a better life and a better America, that we shall give of our strength and our will and our services in the cause of human freedom, that this nation may lead all others as a nation great in those things that make for a high and noble human destiny. If we are practical in our methods, we shall the sooner achieve our aims, the sooner materialize our aspirations."

ATLANTIC ICE AND COAL CO. DISTRIBUTOR LION PILSENER IS PLACED ON 'UNFAIR LIST'

Atlantic Ice and Coal company, local distributors of Southeastern Brewing company products, was formally declared "unfair to organized labor" by executive committee of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Friday morning, acting on authority given by the body some time ago when it appeared that the company would refuse to employ members of organized labor in the construction of a plant to take care of products in connection with the distribution of "Lions Pilsener," manufactured by a New York brewery.

Action was taken following seven weeks of effort on the part of local working men, during a large part of which time the building work was progressing with non-union men employed.

All products of the Atlantic Ice and Coal company, including, of course, the Lions Pilsener beer, are included in the list declared "unfair," according to members of the Central Body's board.

Van Heusen Products To Carry the Label

News comes from Washington this week of the complete unionization of the Van Heusen company, one of the largest manufacturers of shirts and collars in the country. The advices stated the union label will be placed in future on all products of the company.

FEDERAL EMPLOYES REJECT OVERTURE FOR MERGER TALK

E. Claude Babcock, president of the American Federation of Government Employes, announced that the proposal from his organization for a conference looking toward merger with the National Federation of Federal Employes had been rejected by Luther C. Steward, president of the latter organization.

Officials Deny Reported Peace With 'Home Stores'

Recall McDonald's Cheap-Labor Declarations and Operation of Non-Union Advertiser.

Strong denial of a reported truce with Roy McDonald, operator of the so-called "Home Stores,' baker, dairyman, printer, publisher, tire dealer, druggist, individualist, etc., was made this week by officials of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council.

"If and when any agreement with McDonald is made," an officer of the council said, "we will notify trades unionists and their friends immediately. However, there can be little hope of friendly relations so long as the grocer, baker, dairyman, printer, publisher, tire dealer, druggist, individualist or what have you, holds to his expressed philosophy regarding working people, and operates his various enterprises on a foundation of such reactionary ideas."

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

Unionists to Confer With Valley Officials

Representatives of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council and of each of the local building trades unions will go to Knoxville Saturday morning to confer with officials of the Tennessee Valley Authority concerning employment at the Cove Creek dam project. It is hoped that the development will soon be at a point where many skilled craftsmen will be needed, and that the unemployment situation locally may be benefited thereby.

Labor Calls for Fight To Save Public School

Cuthbert Charges False Propaganda Against Bakers

Stories allegedly emanating from the Colonial Baking company plant, calculated to check the progress of organization work among local bakery workers, were roundly denounced this week by T. R. Cuthbert, secretary of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council and volunteer organizer for the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. Cuthbert recalled that the bakery workers have been in the process of organization for several weeks, and that at the beginning bakers at the Colonial plant were much enthused. This enthusiasm, however, was suddenly and for some reason as yet unexplained cooled, and at succeeding meetings no representative from the Colonial attended the meetings. Conferences with the management, the organizer declared, failed to develop the reason for sudden "laying down" of the Colonial workers.

Visit from Dalton last week, Mr. Cuthbert said, declared trades unionists there were told by representatives of the Colonial that the bakers were told that the initiation fee was "$2 now and $25 later." Also, he declared, it was stated that Representative Ollinger had told the bakers if they joined the union they would immediately begin receiving $60 per week.

The utter ridiculousness of the alleged statements, Mr. Cuthbert said, makes comment superfluous. He stated, however, that in other plants in the city the new organization is progressing well, two of the larger plants being almost 100 per cent organized, with no apparent effort on the part of the management to interfere with the progress.

Mr. Cuthbert stressed the fact, however, that no employe of the Colonial is a member of the new union.

Budget Slashes Must Stop, Convention Says.

FEDERAL AID FOR SYSTEM ADVOCATED

Teachers' Right to Organize for Collective Bargaining Upheld — Short Week in Federal Service Urged — Support Pledged.

Washington, Oct. 17.—The free public school system must be maintained intact, the American Federation of Labor convention here declared in adopting by unanimous vote a group of reports submitted by its committee on education.

The convention took the strongest possible stand in support of public school education, deploring "economy moves which have curtailed school facilities and declaring that the time had come to call a halt on the reckless slashing of school budgets. Federal aid for the schools was advocated and the right of teachers to organize was vigorously upheld.

Action on many resolutions was taken as the convention drew toward a close. A proposal submitted by John L. Lewis for enlargement of the Executive Council from the present eleven to eighteen was rejected by a roll call of 14,133 to 6,410, after lively debate. A decision by the Executive Council that teamsters, firemen and engineers employed in breweries belonged under the jurisdiction of their craft unions instead of the United Brewery Workers' union was concurred in by a vote of 13,872 to 5,859.

30-Hour Week Urged.

Resolutions were adopted urging a congressional fight for a 30-hour week for government employes, as well as the same work week for all labor, if demands to the NRA for shorter code hours fail to produce desired results. Shorter weeks for firemen were urged, in condemning "false economy" in fire departments.

Sol. A.. Rosenblatt, deputy NRA administrator, told the convention that "if we are to progress, men must receive a living wage, which is an adequate wage."

President Green declared that NRA codes must provide a shorter work week, else the nation shall be forced to "maintain a standing army of unemployed."

In submitting its reports on the public schools, the committee on education pointed out that no agency of public service has suffered more during the depression than have the public schools. Curtailment and closing of the schools was condemned as a menace to industrial recovery.

Schools Must Be Saved.

"To concern ourselves alone in the present emergency with industrial forces alone," the committee said, "is to disregard those basic forces of intelligence and general education which have made possible our material welfare. Of more than a million teachers, all of whom are required in the general movement for recovery, it has been estimated that 25 per cent are unemployed. The country cannot recover with this situation untouched.

"We believe that the time has come for the nation to call a halt on the destructive activity of undermining the essential security of our basic social industry—public education—due to the effort which selfish interests have been making to perpetuate their economic control and to continue piling up profits, indifferent to the fate of the social services.

"Before it is too late we call upon all friends of education to give ample consideration to the emergency which faces the public schools of the country and we appeal to the federal government, all state governments, and local authorities to bend every effort to protect and promote the welfare of the schools.

Labor Will Respond.

"Organized labor has already manifested its concern about the schools, and will, as always, respond valiantly to such a need, for nothing less is to be expected from that body of work-

Plenty for All Is the Goal

Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, chairman of the National Labor board, is often spoken of as the father of the National Industrial Recovery act. If not the father, he undoubtedly took a leading part in drafting it. Therefore what he says in connection with the act is significant.

In a fine address before the American Federation of Labor convention in Washington, Senator Wagner said that wages under the NRA codes must go higher and hours of work be further reduced to assure the success of the recovery program. This is what organized labor is contending. He went on to say:

> "Wage improvements under the New Deal should not be simply enough to keep factories going. Wages must be fixed with reference to a social program which intends to insure everyone a comfortable living and to give labor its just share of the national wealth."

Senator Wagner, in the foregoing, looked toward a new age, an age of plenty for all, in which the common good shall be paramount. He foresees not only recovery from the present depression but the coming of a new day in which there shall be no poverty and hunger in the midst of plenty.

Right to Strike Fundamental

Labor cannot give up its right to strike as a last resort in the fight against wrong. It is true that all other means to secure adjustment of grievances should be tried before a strike is called. Agencies are now provided under the Recovery Act to settle disputes with justice to the workers. Full use should be made of them but it is nonsense to say that labor must give up its strike weapon. As President Green of the A. F. of L. said: "The right to strike is fundamental. The workers cannot and must not be called upon to surrender the right to strike."

A Foolish Policy

In its annual report, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor declared that the policy of establishing an age limit for hiring workers is a grave menace to the older worker.

"Developments of the last few years have brought no relief," the report says. "In fact, this policy is, if anything, becoming more widespread. . . . The practice is so general that workers over 45 in many localities find it virtually impossible to get a job, and workers of 40 and even 35 are also finding age limits applied against them."

The report points out that discrimination against older workers is not only unjust to the worker concerned but is a loss to industry.

"Experience and responsibility," the report says, "are essential in any work where the quality of the product is concerned. . . . The employment or retention of workers should be based upon competence to perform work, and not on an arbitrary age limit."

The executive council's criticism of discrimination against older workers is thoroughly justified. Such discrimination is a foolish policy from every standpoint and only evil can come from it.

Officers to Press New Legislative Program and Boycott of German Goods—Employers Who Refuse to Meet With Workers' Representatives Declared Forcing Many Strikes.

Washington, Oct. 19.—Meeting to conclude the work of the fifty-third annual convention here, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor took steps to carry out instructions of the convention.

Plans were made to send broadcast to the trade union family of twenty millions the convention action calling for a boycott of German made products and of the product of German services, such as shipping lines.

"We found fresh justification for our action in announcement of German's withdrawal from the league of nations and the disarmament conference," said President William Green at adjournment of the council's session, held at convention headquarters in the Willard hotel.

"Hitlerism seems as mad as the old imperial autocracy ever was and perhaps more so," he said. "Reason constitutes no argument with such a regime, but if the civilized world demonstrates its horror by a refusal to touch the products of the Hitlerized third reich it may have an effect. It is our one weapon of hope and Hitler may be sure we sall use it to the full."

The council likewise had under consideration the question of strikes and compliance with NRA code provisions. "I think we have made it plain many times recently that the American Federation of Labor is seeking to curb hasty judgment in the matter of strikes and that the strike should be used only as a last resort," said Mr. Green. "As a first step in reaching agreement by negotiation and discussion, employers must meet with representatives of workers. In all too many cases employers are refusing to do that.

> "The national labor board is doing all it can do with its present personnel, but it is unable to be everywhere. Employers are refusing to meet workers right and left and the workers, generally with real and acute grievances, are left no recourse except to cease giving service.

"We join gladly and wholeheartedly with the desire to avoid stoppages of work and we call attention to the fact that the primary prerequisite is a willingness to negotiate. We cannot fail likewise to call attention to the fact that some indignation is due against those who have caused stoppage of work for a vast army ranging from ten to thirteen millions of workers over the past three years."

President Green announced that organizers who have been attending the convention have departed for their posts throughout the country, to carry forward with renewed vigor the organization of new unions everywhere. "Many applications for charters are today awaiting action and more will come in. We are moving now toward the ten million mark as the next goal in the creation of a constructive, organized force for the establishment of real order and cooperation in American industry under NRA codes," he said.

"We shall proceed at once to the work of drafting legislation for the new congress. One of the measures to be prepared is a bill calling for a general 30-hour work-week, to be introduced and pushed to enactment in the event that re-employment is not accomplished through the action of the NRA. Re-employment must be accomplished and if one method will not do it, then another must be tried. That is the president's own method and it is our belief that his open-mindedness will lead him to espouse our proposal.

"We shall take up at once with Gen. Johnson the matter of more nearly adequate labor representation on NRA boards, committees and commissions, with much hope that the justice of our position will be appreciated.

To Fight for U. S. Employes.

"Legislation in the interest of government employes will be a matter of first consideration. We shall begin work in their behalf at once in carrying out the convention's declared purposes. Our work in their behalf has never ceased or even been slowed down, but the convention has given us a new mandate in very definite directions.

"We discussed also the question of jurisdictional disputes and we have hopes of moving toward some method of preventing them from disturbing work operations. It is difficult for the public to understand the causes of such disputes, or their extreme seriousness to the men involved. It is difficult at times to make clear the extent to which employers are responsible for such disputes. And it is difficult, too, to impress upon the public mind the fact that at no time have there been any great number of such disputes. Never are more than a relatively few involved in such difficulties, but their position is dramatied out of proportion to the importance of the case, as a rule. However, jurisdictional disputes ought not tie up operations and penalize those who are not involved.

Labor Prestige High.

"It is our desire that the American Federation of Labor shall be in every respect above and kind of reproach. We shall have traducers always, or at least as long as there is greed in the world, but we have built dignity and integrity and thorough Americanism into our government. I believe its prestige is today at its highest point. We shall lift it higher.

"We are participating in the world's greatest industrial experiment, carrying a vast responsibility, performing our full duty and occupying a high and important place in the councils of the nation. The opposition we encounter from those employers who still believe in the employment relations of a half century ago not only makes our course more difficult, but works against the best interests of the nation. We call upon employers everywhere to realize these facts and to join in co-operation for American recovery."

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

What's all this talk about too many strikes? Look it in the face and see.

In the first place, the newspapers are exaggerating strikes. There haven't been over two really sizable strikes. The rest have been small affairs. But labor is lectured and told not to strike—it "rocks the boat."

Whose boat does it rock? Think that over.

Now it is true, as President Green has said, that strikes should be the last resort. Try other things first. Try conciliation, mediation—talk it over, if you can get the chance. But just why everybody, including the New York Times, should jump all over labor because it resents being walked on and kicked around and cheated, isn't quite as clear as some other things.

A great many strikes have been out of resentment against violations of code provisions by employers. Just why are employers free to go on chiseling, cheating and violating codes?

One simple reason is that, until industries are licensed, there is nothing anybody can do about such violations that is really effective. There can be no punishment until a case has been made out in a federal district court and that is not such an easy thing to do.

Cheating has been on a grand scale. Codes have been violated with freedom and impunity. Workers stand that for a while and then they decide that they have had enough. They strike and then they are told they have done wrong.

Some way must be found to stop the first wrong—the cheating by bosses.

Labor supports NRA and it is the most powerful force there is in support of NRA. But that doesn't change the fact that there are sections ofthe country where workers have already lost their faith in NRA because of the wholesale violations of code provisions by employers.

It would be nice to discover that the newspapers of the nation had banded together to denounce these violations and nice to read that the National Association of Manufacturers and the United States Chamber of Commerce were going to enter into a campaign to stop violations.

NRA is the hope of America today. It can remain a hope only by remaining on the level and by seeing to it that codes are obeyed by bosses.

Almost everyone agrees, in theory, that codes should be obeyed, that code wages should be the minimum and all that sort of thing. But, performance is something else, as thousands will agree.

Complaints to NRA get exactly nowhere at present. That may be changed and possibly will be changed. But that's how it is today. You can complain and get in return a nice form letter.

Of course, if you know your way around and file a complaint with the national labor board you will get action and you'll get it quickly.

Senator Wagner isn't standing for monkey business. But up to this hour his machinery isn't extensive enough to grab all offenders by the neck and shake them into common sense.

Striking, on the part of the unorganized and the newly organized, is a mighty serious business. Too often it leads to quick defeat.

But why pile on labor's head the blame for a condition that is the creation of greed in the ranks of bosses who don't yet know that a new deal is on the boards? Let's keep the record straight.

Code Violation Brings Hosiery Plant Strike

Ashboro, N. C.—A complete walkout of the entire staff of the Bossong full fashion plant here occurred after the manager, Charles Bossong, violated NRA commandments. He refused collective bargaining, intimidated the committee elected to represent his workers and ran three shifts daily for two weeks after the hosiery code went into effect.

When he finally reduced the shifts to two, he replaced experienced knitters who were pioneers in organization work with inexperienced learners, and threatened a committee sent in to protest by the workers. A new committee was sent to protest, and Bossong retaliated by firing all the leggers.

A strike was called, and a picket line placed around the mill. So complete was the strike that even the sweepers and the night watchman walked out.

The Bossong workers voted to stay out until the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, their union, is recognized. They also demanded a 25 per cent wage increase and reinstatement of all those laid off.

WHY PUT IT OFF?

HOW many times has someone in your family made the remark, "I wish we had a telephone?"

Very likely your friends, too, are wishing you had a telephone. For in doing without it you are making it difficult for them to include you and your family in their social activities. If there are children in the family, they, too, feel the loss of the friendly contacts a telephone affords.

Why put off enjoying the satisfaction and protection of telephone service in your home, when you may have it for less than ten cents a day?

Any telephone employe will be glad to tell you about party line and other classes of service. Why wait? Order your telephone today.

ers which was the first social group to give its whole-hearted support to public schools in their infancy one hundred years ago."

The committee's report went on to refer to the Executive Council's report, in which attention was directed to the "destructive tendency incidental to the entire retrenchment movement" affecting the schools.

The committee deplored the situation and said: "We believe that only misfortune can come from the continuance of this policy." It approved a resolution on the preservation of the schools, offered by Selma M. Borchardt and Florence Curtis Hanson, delegates from the American Association of Teachers.

Unswerving Support Pledged.

The resolution, unanimously adopted by the convention, declared that the slogan, "Balance the Budget," had been used as the excuse for the reckless slashing of vitally necessary expenditures, "many of which are the only social guarantee we have for the maintenance of standards in education and in health and in safety." It continued:

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor reaffirm its position of unswerving support of public education, the necessary elements of which entail:

(1) Truly professional standards in and for the classroom.

(2) Small classes taught by trained teachers.

(3) An enriched curriculum.

(4) Opportunities for growth and cultural advantages for adult workers.

(5) An equitable wage for all teachers. All employes of the school system shall be assured an equitable wage, security of position, and decent working conditions.

(6) Security of tenure for all educational workers.

(7) Decent working conditions for teachers.

(9) Opportunity for culture and professional study for teachers.

(10) Maintenance of educational standards.

(11) Provision for old age pensions for teachers.

(12) Opportunity for teachers to participate in formulating educational policy; and, be it further

Resolved, That it renew its pledge of utmost endeavor for the protection of education from kindergarten through university, and that it call upon all affiliated state and local central bodies to fight to the utmost to maintain intact our free public school system in this country.

The committee strongly emphasized the organization of teachers into unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and declared that, teachers, like other workers must be assured of the right to establish unions. It advocated payment of salaries to provide teachers with proper living conditions, economic security and opportunity for professional improvement.

On the question of federal aid, the report said:

"Your committee approves a liberal policy of federal aid to the schools of the nation supplementary to the community appropriation and not in any sense as a replacement fund for local tax support."

MORE ABOUT CONVENTION

dividuals, firms and corporations engaged in interstate business.

Federal Workers Championed.

The convention demanded betterment of working conditions in the federal government service, including 30-year optional retirement, restoration and liberalization of sick and annual leave provisions, and expressed opposition to consolidation of federal agencies and to cost of living as a basis for fixing wages. The A. F. of L. was commended for its efforts on behalf of federal employes and the Executive Council was directed to continue efforts to bring restoration of the full pay of government workers.

Representation of labor on all boards created under the national industrial recovery act was demanded, the convention insisting that labor must insist on "thoroughly adequate representation." Dissatisfaction with the working out of the recovery act was expressed by building trades delegates, who charged that attempts were being made to lower wages already agreed upon in negotiations between the unions and the employers.

Adequate Relief Demanded.

The report of the Executive Council recommending adequate care of the unemployed was approved. The recommendations include a demand that congress make adequate relief appropriations immediately upon convening in January.

The non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L. was again approved, the convention rejecting a proposal for the formation of a labor party.

The convention condemned discrimination against older workers, declared that the right of collective bargaining under the NRA must be vigorously protected, protested against further cuts in the pay of city fire fighters, condemned false economy practices in city fire departments, asked that "just and reasonable" minimum wage rates be established for highway work financed in whole or part by federal money and urged a congressional investigation of the American Telephone and Telegraph company.

Racketeering Condemned.

Action aimed at the transportation of strikebreakers was taken, the convention voting to ask congress to investigate the activities of strikebreaking organizations and enact such legislation as may be necessary to prevent practices which have been an important factor in causing industrial welfare.

Racketeering and gangsterism in the trade union movement was strongly condemned, the convention declaring that the A. F. of L. stands "firmly and boldly against racketeering and gangsterism of all forms." It was declared to be the particular duty of all trade union executives to use every means within their power to prevent the entrance of racketeering in the trade union movement.

One of the highlights of the convention's closing sessions was announcement by President Green that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America had received a charter from the Executive Council. President Green said he was pleased that the long jurisdictional dispute between the Amalgamated and the United Garment Workers' union in the men's and boys' clothing industry had been settled. The terms of the agreement were contained in a supplementary report made by the Executive Council.

All Officers Re-elected.

President Green and the entire roster of officers were unanimously re-elected. The other officers are: First vice-president, Frank Duffy; second vice-president, T. A. Rickert; third vice-president, Matthew Woll; fourth vice-president, James Wilson; fifth vice-president, John Coefield; sixth vice-president, Arthur O. Wharton; seventh vice-president, Joseph N. Weber; eighth vice-president, G. M. Bugniazet; treasurer, Martin Francis Ryan; secretary, Frank Morrison.

Edward Flore, of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers' union, and Michael J. Colleran, of the Plasterers' union, were elected fraternal delegates to the British Trades Union congress. Joseph P. McCurdy, of the Maryland State and District of Columbia Federation of Labor, was elected delegate to the Canadian Trades and Labor council.

San Francisco was selected as the 1934 convention city.

Oil Code Boosts Gasoline Cost $450,000,000 Per Year

New York.—Competent authorities estimate that the cost to consumers of gasoline in the United States from the recent increase in prices of crude oil under the NRA code will reach $450,000,000 annually, which is a boost of about 33⅓ per cent over recent prices. It is believed that those who own and control the oil industry will be able to realize reasonable profits under the new oil prices.

The increased cost of labor under the code to the oil industry, both directly and indirectly, are estimated at $150,000,000 yearly.

SILK STRIKE APPROVED.

Pawtucket, R. I.—The strike of 2,000 silk workers in this vicinity was approved by the Rhode Island Textile council, meeting here. Francis J. Gorman, international vice-president of the United Textile Workers of America, took charge of strike operations. He said he would seek a conference with manufacturers and try to induce the National Labor board to bring about a settlement.

NRA Unconstitutional Says Richmond Head

Mill Official Disapproves Recovery Program.

WORKERS CONCEDED VERY FEW RIGHTS

Labor Representatives Hear Strange Philosophy Expressed by Textile Employer—Won't Recognize Employes' Committees.

"WE DO OUR PART"

An enlightening incident was reported from the Richmond Hosiery mills Thursday, indicating the "co-operation" which that institution is extending to the government through the recovery act.

On a committee which called on Harvey Wilson, unannounced, were two union officials who had been discharged from the mill. Following their visit a "straw boss" is said to have gone through the mill and announced the union officials had urged the employer to reinstate them and let out other members of the organization. "I told you what this union would do to you," the mannekin is alleged to have said to the workers still employed.

Incidentally, the two union officials referred to stated they would not have their jobs again unless conditions were established which would guarantee their rights as American citizens, including recognition of the union formed by the workers.

The NRA is "unconstitutional," and if the Richmond Hosiery mill "goes along" it will have to be forced to do so.

That, according to a committee which visited Harvey J. Wilson, unannounced, this week, is the position of the high cockalorum of the sock mill. Although the recovery act guarantees the right of all workers to form a union of their choice, Wilson said, according to the committee, that he would not recognize a union in his mill even though an election was held under government supervision and his employes voted for it. Pressed for a particular reason for his antipathy toward organizations, Wilson said if his plant was organized he could not cut wages, which he was compelled to do in order to compete with other mills. Prices are too high, he is reported to have said, and prosperity will not return until everything is lower, including wages. Other mills can pay higher wages because they have a better product, and spend more for advertising, the committee quoted Wilson as saying.

Wilson denied intimidating employes, but maintained his right to close the mill if employes organized. He declared he did not consider the workers had anything invested in the business, even though they might have given many years of their lives in the "service." An army, he stated, according to the committee, would not go far if the officers did not have the right to discharge. He was reminded, incidentally, that even army regulations provided for a fair and impartial trial for accused persons.

Ten additional employes were discharged at the Richmond plant this week, all of whom, strangely or not, were members of the United Textile Workers, and who included the president and secretary of the newly-organized union. Another worker is alleged to have been let out recently because the postman inadvertently delivered his Labor World to the mill.

An indication that Wilson's expressed preference for low wages is being carried out in his mill was seen this week when T. R. Cuthbert, organizer for the United Textile Workers, displayed a pay envelope which he said had been brought in by a young woman employed at the Richmond, which showed earnings of 56 cents. The woman declared this princely sum was paid her for sixty hours' work. This, however, was before the code went into effect, and it is possible the wage has been increased somewhat. The young lady, Mr. Cuthbert said, asked that her name not be divulged, as she is the sole support of a large family.

A threatened strike at the Richmond plant was averted this week, at least temporarily, when the national labor board, to whom a number of matters concerning the activities of the Richmond management have been referred, requested that no such action be taken pending an investigation by that body, Mr. Cuthbert said.

Nick-A-Jack Mills Urges Employes to Use City Clinic

Hosiery Mill Advises Workers Charity Institutions Will Save Money.

An entirely new plan which might save money for local employers in figuring their pay rolls is advanced by the Nick-A-Jack Hosiery mills, according to a "bulletin" supplied The Labor World this week, which it is alleged has been posted for some time in the work-room at that institution. Employes of the sock mill are urged in the bulletin to visit the city clinic in case of accident which requires medical attention, and the information is offered that "if the city clinic is not in position to do the work, they give an order to have the work done at Erlanger hospital."

One employe of the mill, discussing the bulletin, declared attention of the employes should also have been called to the Associated Charities and the various emergency relief boards, where food, clothing and fuel might also be secured to care for workers in the local hosiery mills.

The bulletin reads as follows:

NOTICE

The city clinic is maintained for your and our use. In case of an emergency, broken bones, etc., same can be taken care of at the city clinic. Or, if the city clinic is not in position to do the work, they give an order to have the work done at Erlanger hospital.

In case of emergency, use the city clinic. It will save you large emergency doctor bills.

Recently one of our employes had a large emergency doctor bill of about $40.00 for setting broken bones, and if the city clinic had been used, there would have been no charge.

NICK-A-JACK HOSIERY MILLS.

Write Your Own Head on This One

A statement of strikers at the Profile mills, at Jacksonville, Ala., published in the Piedmont Journal, which weekly, incidentally, is rendering yeoman service to the cause of labor, contains the following, which will give a further idea of what mill workers of the chivalrous south have been forced to endure. The "Mr. Greenleaf" referred to is evidently owner of the Profile mill:

> For four years we have gone half naked and undernourished. Mr. Greenleaf says we are living on charity and the taxes of the people. It is not the first time. We worked last year what little time we could get in the mill, and we had to eat Red Cross flour then. In all Mr. Greenleaf's talks we have yet to hear him say anyhing worth listening to. He says we have made a good living. But we are the ones that have gone hungry, not Mr. Greenleaf, with all his automobiles, airplanes and other luxuries. The truth is, we have been only one degree removed from a group of pauperized slaves, but we could not help ourselves.
> In 1932 Mr. Greenleaf let us have $2 a week while the mill was down. We were rated at 19 cents per hour. When the mill started up he cut us to 15 cents per hour, but took every cent we made until our debt was paid, not allowing us anything to live on. Do you call this fair?

The workers are battling to enforce compliance with the president's recovery program.

COURT HOLDS THREAT TO CLOSE PLANT 'INTERFERENCE, COERCION AND RESTRAINT' OF EMPLOYES

Milwaukee Judge Declares Workers Need "Outside" Representation and Holds Recovery Act Makes Mandatory Recognition of Freedom of Organization.

Milwaukee, Wis., Oct. 26.—By securing a court injunction restraining the Simplex Shoe company from interfering with and using intimidation to prevent organization of its employes the Wisconsin organized labor movement has achieved a significant victory and made a definite contribution to the labor movement of the entire country.

The decision of Circuit Judge John J. Gregory in granting the petition of the Wisconsin state federation of labor, the Boot and Shoe Workers' union and members of the local union of the latter organization for an injunction against the shoe company has nationwide significance because it is the first court action defining the language of Section 7-a of the National Recovery Act granting the workers the right to organize free from intimidation and interference by employers.

Declaring that "substantial and irreparable injuries to the workers' rights will follow unless the injunction is issued," Judge Gregory in clear-cut language convicted the firm of violating the labor provisions of Section 7-a of the NRA and of established law in Wisconsin that "if a person makes a contract with another for the benefit of the third person (signing the president's national blanket agreement) the latter may enforce it at law." He went further and declared for the need of the collective bargaining and representation outside of their own ranks for employes because of their usual lack of information which makes bargaining with their employers on any kind of an equal basis a fallacy unless they have the aid and protection provided for them in Section 7, namely: the right to representation of their own choosing.

Judge Gregory also established a significant precedent when he specifically declared that workers also have "property rights" in industry when he declared: "The court discards as too narrow any limitation to mere tangible, physical property. The spirit and context of the labor code permit of a much broader interpretation."

The establishment of this precedent and the legal recognition of the importance of the right to representation of their own choosing in the collective bargaining clause in Section 7 appears even more significant than the upholding of the right of workers to organize free from interference, which is so plainly stated in the recovery act. Commenting on the moral as well as legal right of workers to "outside" representation, Judge Gregory said:

"It must be apparent that bargaining individually the worker is at a great disadvantage. The employer is, naturally, better trained by knowledge and experience in the field of bargaining than the average employe. The handling of facts and figures is a large part of the employer's regular occupation, while the average worker has neither the education nor the experience to enable him to drive a good bargain unassisted.

"The individual worker, compared with the employer, has not the knowledge of the whole field of wages and working conditions upon which to base his conclusions as to what is a just or even a possible wage for the employer to pay."

The decision declares that "the NRA has not only sanctioned in principle but made mandatory upon the employer recognition of the workers' rights to organize freely." It points out that when the employer, following a visit to the factory by Charles J. McMorrow, organizer of the national union, stated to his employes that he would be "forced to close our plant indefinitely in the event we have any interference from the union or any outside organization" such action "could not be construed as anything but a definite threat and was an attempt on the part of the defendant to deny the right of its employes to organize freely and to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and an interference, restraint and coercion in the designation of such representatives."

The decision is expected to give a great impetus to organization work in Wisconsin, as well as elsewhere, among workers who up to now have been fearful of losing their jobs because employers refused to recognize the meaning of the plain language of Section 7.

PRESIDENT RULES MERIT CLAUSES HAVE NO PLACE IN RECOVERY ACT CODES

Washington, Oct. 26.—No interpretation of the collective bargaining clause of the national industrial recovery act should be included in codes, President Roosevelt ruled in a letter to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, recovery administrator.

The president reasserted the right of workers to organize for collective bargaining under the recovery act and said that "merit clauses" have no place in NIRA codes. Such clauses have been bitterly opposed by organized labor. The president's ruling is expected to result in ending attempts to write "merit clauses" into codes and may bring elimination of the clause in the automobile code, now in effect.

"Following our recent discussion of various misunderstandings and misinterpretations of Section 7 (a) of the national industrial recovery act, I wish to advise you of my position.

"Because it is evident that the insertion of any interpretation of Section 7 (a) in a code of fair competition leads only to further controversy and confusion, no such interpretation should be incorporated in any code.

"While there is nothing in the provisions of Section 7 (a) to interfere with the bona fide exercise of the right of an employer to select, retain or advance employes on the basis of individual merit, Section 7 (a) does clearly prohibit the pretended exercise of this right by an employer simply as a device for compelling employes to refrain from exercising the rights of self-organization, designation of representatives and collective bargaining, which are guaranteed to all employes in said Section 7 (a)."

Deplores Passing Of Loyal Brother

Resolutions of respect to the memory of H. R. Gray, long-time member of Local 226, Painters, were passed by the local in session this week. Mr. Gray passed away at a hospital at Oteen, N. C., on Oct. 14, and funeral services wehe held here last Wednesday.

The resolution, prepared by a committee consisting of J. A. Farmer, C. H. Thurston and E. M. Baker, follow:

> Whereas, Almighty God, in His infinite wisdom, has seen fit to remove from our midst our brother and fellow craftsman, H. R. Gray; and,
> Whereas, Brother Gray was a loyal and consistent member of this organization for ten years or more; therefore, be it

Wagner Points Out Labor Board Power

Washington, Oct. 26.—Any group which flouts the decisions of the national labor board, of which Senator Robert F. Wagner is chairman, will be made to conform to a code containing the board's provisions, Senator Wagner said in a radio address.

"The question is frequently raised," Senator Wagner said, "whether the national labor board has any power of compulsion over those who are reluctant to appear before it or to abide by its decisions. I do not like to answer this question, because when you talk about compelling a man to do something you make him forget that it is to his best interest to do it voluntarily. Compulsion is necessary only when there is opposition, and there should be no opposition to a board which has demonstrated its willingness and ability to assist every group.

"At the same time I want to stress the fact that the board has power. It is an essential part of the recovery program and is working hand in hand with the recovery administration. Any group which flouts the decisions of the board may be placed under a code embodying the conditions approved by the board.

"If the code is violated, the licensing provision and the other penalties of the recovery act may be invoked. There will be no escape for the misguided minority who arise to interfere with every constructive program."

Central Body Backs Protests of Teachers

Reported Changes Include Closing Of 'Home Stores'

Rumor Says "Sole Owners" Fired If They Fail to Make Grade Set by McDonald.

Stories of changes in the "Home Store" chain this week included a report that at least two of the stores have already been closed, with others possibly to follow.

C. E. Hudson, of the Sanitary barber shop, called attention to the fact that a store in his neighborhood had "moved, consolidated or something," some thee weeks ago, and when censured for not reporting the matter sooner Mr. Hudson declared "nobody missed it for at least two weeks." Unit at Dodds and Willow is also said to have a "moved" sign in the window.

Another rumor tells of the discharge of at least one of the "managers" to whom the various units of the chain were "sold" when the code went into effect, because said "manager" could not make the grade as set by Roy McDonald, grocer, baker, dairyman, printer, publisher, druggist, tire dealer, individualist.

McDonald is still printing his weekly throw-sheet "Home Store" advertiser, doubtless for the "benefit" of the "sole owners," which contains his grocery, bakery, dairy, tire, drugs and other ads.

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

Several Changes Are Reported by Barbers

Several changes involving local barbers and barber shops are reported to The Labor World this week.

Cochran's, which has been at 912-A Market street for many years, has moved across the street to new and larger quarters at 915 Market street. The new shop is modern in every respect, and six chairs are presided over by well-known members of Local 415.

The Ridgedale Barber shop, which has been operated by M. E. Brown at 1406 Dodds avenue for several years, has consolidated with O. H. Haygood, at 1412 Dodds, and here also members of Local 415 to the number of a half-dozen are serving old and new customers in a high-class and up-to-date atmosphere.

B. L. Handy ("Andy"), formerly at the Park, announces his removal to the Sanitary shop at 13 East Seventh, and promises a newly-sharpened razor and shears to all friends in need of expert tonsorial work.

W. L. "Dock" Hardee, who had almost been regarded as a fixture at the Provident shop, has taken up new duties at the Broadway, 830 Broad street.

Lowry and Belcher Form Partnership

A new business institution made its bow in Chattanooga this week when "George's Barbecue" stand at 124 Market street was taken over by a company consisting of J. Burson Lowry and W. C. Belcher, members of Local 259, Movie Operators.

Mr. Lowry said Friday morning that the institution is specializing on palatable sandwiches and drinks, including Schlitz draft beer. A plate lunch is served at noon, he stated, and the doors are open every night until 1 a.m.

Labor Demands 'Fair Deal' for Public Schools.

SELFISH INTERESTS SEEK DESTRUCTION

Resolutions Adopted by First Fall Meeting of Local 246 Unanimously Approved by Central Body Monday Night.

Ringing protests of Chattanooga-Hamilton county school teachers, holding their first general fall session last Saturday, against various injustices permitted by the city government, were reflected at Monday night's regular meeting of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, when unanimous approval of the attitude of Local 246 followed general discussion of conditions which have been imposed on the teachers, as well as "mass attacks" on the system in general.

Attention was called to repeated warnings issued by national school authorities and the American Federation of Labor, who have counseled friends of the public schools to resist in every possible way the inroads to those who would destroy the system.

"The public school system of America is in danger, and in many places has been almost destroyed by the demand of powerful and selfish interests," the teachers point out. "The abuses appearing elsewhere have made their appearance in Chattanooga." Various of the abuses referred to are cited by the organization, and it is charged that "all efforts of the federation to co-operate with city authorities have been flatly and consistently ignored."

Experience with county officials, the teachers recite, have been somewhat different, although "there have been several incidents in the county situation which have not been pleasing."

"Had we been organized five years ago, or even two years ago," a committee report points out, "some of the things which have happened to our co-workers could not have happened."

After unanimously indorsing the teachers' position, Central Body instructed its executive board to continue to work in co-operation with committees of Local 246 to the end that the schools be defended and the rights of teachers, patrons and children be protected.

Attitude of the teachers was expressed in reports of committees and resolutions, which follow:

ASKS FAIR DEAL FOR THE CHILD.

The past summer has been filled with occurrences having a vital effect upon the welfare of the teachers. They have served to illustrate to the teachers the absolute and vital necessity of concerted action on our part if we are to attain a professional standing and a measure of security, which are so essential to effective teaching and efficient schools. Had we been organized five years ago or even two years ago some of the things which have happened to our co-workers could not have happened.

As you will see from the reports of other committees the board of directors is busy with plans and proposals which will prevent such injustices as the indiscriminate dismissal of teachers in mid-summer. The Teachers Welfare committee, however, is not through with this particular incident and plans are now under way by which we hope to obtain further action in this matter. For the present it is necessary for the sake of the plan itself that it is to remain of an unrevealed nature. You will hear more of this later.

As for the so-called salary readjustments, that was another example of what can happen when those in authority refuse to recognize that the teachers too have rights. They did not consult our committee in this matter, although abundant opportunity to do so was offered. All efforts of the federation to co-operate with the city authorities have been flatly and con-

He had suffered distress after meals, but by taking Thedford's Black-Draught he was relieved of this trouble, writes Mr. Jess Higgins, of Dawsonville, Ga.

"I had sour stomach and gas," Mr. Higgins explains, "and often I would have bilious spells. I read about Thedford's Black-Draught and began to take it. It relieved me of this trouble. I keep it all the time now. I consider it a fine medicine. I take a pinch of Black-Draught after meals when I need it. It helps to prevent sick headache and to keep the system in good order."

Veterans Live to See New Day

If Frank Morrison had time to remember—between his multiplied tasks of keeping the record straight and making necessary announcements during the A. F. of L. convention—his mind doubtless reverted to the "times when"—

For instance, there was the time when the bosses in the Danbury Hatters' strike were trying to put Sam Gompers, John Mitchell and Frank Morrison in jail.

Then, there was that other occasion, when a man named Baer declared that God had, in His infinite wisdom, committed the coal business to Baer and his associates, thus winning for himself the sobriquet of "Divine-Right-Baer."

Later days must have been easy to remember, when the war profiteers were calling all members and leaders of organized labor by the handy term of "bolsheviks."

Against this background, going back almost half a century, he saw and heard Senator Robert A. Wagner in warm, friendly and sympathetic terms, giving credit to the labor movement for its accomplishments during the Great Depression; and the brusque but not unfriendly declaration of Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, that there is no need now for strikes.

And there was the impressive moment, when William Green accepting the re-election to the office he has so honorably filled for years, accepting the responsibility for making a success of the campaign of N. R. A. for the benefit of the nation's peaceful continuance, and giving notice to the foes of the new industrial and social order, in the spirit of the guardians of another Verdun, that "They shall not pass!"

It was worth fifty years of labor and battle, to the veterans of the labor movement, to have lived to see the new place accorded to their organization and its leaders, in the most vital affairs of the nation.

Press Freedom Not Endangered

Some newspaper publishers are all excited over the alleged danger to freedom of the press in the N. I. R. A. They profess to see the death of press freedom in the act and are even conjuring up the bogey of press censorship by trade unions.

"The application of press censorship by organized labor is possible if the newspapers submit to the demand of unions as expressed in the N. I. R. A.," said E. H. Harris, secretary of the American Newspaper Publishers' association, in attacking the recovery act as a peril to the press.

Mr. Harris and others are talking sheer nonsense. Unions have never threatened the rights of free speech and there is no danger they will. Neither is there any danger to press freedom in the recovery act. Secretary of Labor Perkins emphasized this in rebuking a labor department conciliator accused of threatening an Alabama editor on the ground he was printing articles in violation of N. I. R. A. Said Miss Perkins to the conciliator: "Please keep in mind that you have no right to tell any editor what he may or may not print in his news or editorial columns. There is nothing in the N. I. R. A., or any other federal statute, which gives you such a right."

An Argument for the N. R. A.

N. R. A., with whatever faults it may have—and faults seem inseparable from the human race—is plowing along, working a change in the affairs of men, women and children that perhaps lose some of their visibility because, looking for trees we are in the midst of a forest which obscures our vision.

During the American Federation of Labor convention in Washington, President Thomas F. McMahon, of the United Textile Workers, told the convention he had 1,500 complaints of code violations. That is a lot of violation and it betokens a situation not to be condoned, but to be corrected as rapidly as possible.

But there are two sides to every plate of ham and eggs and so there are two sides to this one. On one side the violations.

> This shirt, and tens of thousands like it, were made and sold just a few months ago when the country was not as sound as it is today.
> The man that grew the cotton for it lost money. His cotton pickers were not paid with cash . . . they received canned goods and groceries so that they could eat and have strength to work. The workers in the mill where the cotton was spun into yarn and in the mill where the yarn was woven into fabric received starvation wages—$4 and $5 a week. The girls that fashioned it into a shirt tried to keep the wolf from the door with $5 a week, and in many instances, even less. Their employer lost money. Cut-throat competition, together with curtailed buying power, forced the retailer to sell it at a price which would attract you to buy it, but which netted him a loss.
> At 89 cents it was a bargain. A bargain built on misery, distress, losses and suffering, all along the line. A bargain that threatened the very structure of this country.
> Here is another shirt, manufactured under the code of the N. R. A. Looks just like the other one, but it's different.
> True, the cotton is the same, the machine-made material is the same, but—the workers now receive at least $13 a week. The workmanship, however, is different. Girls that are now receiving a living wage do better work than they did with hungry stomachs and with fear in their hearts.
> Yes, it's a different shirt. They will all tell you that—from the cotton picker to the one who sells it to you. Thanks to N. R. A. it is different—and not a single child labored in its making.
> At $1.09, it is a real bargain, a sound bargain, sound for your welfare and sound for the welfare of our country. Which one do you prefer to wear?

The argument is as old as the hills. How many times union men have offered that argument can never be known. With it they have battered at the doors of prejudice and sought to bring vision to eyes afflicted with blindness.

Now a nation is committed to the ideals so long preached by labor. Through decades it seemed that labor was preaching in a wilderness. Really, it wasn't a wilderness. Finally the seeds sprouted and grew.

Department stores have been regarded as the outlets for all of the bone-grinding "bargains" that a bone-grinding industrial world could produce. Like a breath from a world of new growing plants and flowers comes this advertisement by a department store, actually telling you why it is decent and right to pay a little more so that those who create the merchandise may live like human beings.

N. R. A. has its faults, but N. R. A. has justified itself over and over already. Read the advertisement again. It is true. It is filled with promise of even more.

True, there are the violations. Rome took a long while to build. No society can be remade into decency by the waving of a wand, with complete eradication of old abuses. The violations must be corrected.

Meanwhile there stands a monument of achievement—tremendous achievement. America actually is producing something like a miracle.

Woman, Long Idle and Facing Eviction, Tries to End Life

Durham, N. C., Oct. 26.—When sheriffs came to the home of Mrs. Bertha Jones here with eviction papers, they found her dying.

The starving woman, unemployed for months, had taken poison. At the hospital, where she was taken, doctors said she may recover.

Ever since she was a tot of nine, she worked in Durham textile mills. Then, several months ago, she was laid off with the usual, "We don't need you any longer."

The plight of her hungry family drove her from mill to mill in a fruitless search for work.

Finally she applied to the welfare board for help. Next came an eviction notice. She scurried from house to house, but landlords turned a deaf ear to her plea for rooms.

She told a friend an hour before the sheriffs came, "This is as far as I can go. I will end it all."

"FREEDOM OF PRESS" TALK SMOKE SCREEN TO HIT NIRA

Publisher of Chicago Tribune, "Open Shoppers'" Chief Mouthpiece in Middle West, Sets Up Straw Man to Batter Around in General Attack on Recovery Act Program.

By JOSEPH A. WISE

Chicago, Oct. 26.—"Freedom of the press" and the daily newspaper code were the major topics at a meeting of the Inland Daily Press association, held in Chicago. The newspaper code, said to be the worst filed by any industry, was discussed at a secret session.

"Freedom of the press" was publicly discussed in a Pecksniff manner as a means of raising a smoke screen to hide the real objective of a major attack on NIRA now in preparation.

Robert R. McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Daily Tribune, was the bellwether and chief Pecksniff of the meeting. He disclosed that he was the author of the "freedom of the press" paragraph in the newspaper code as submitted to Washington. He shed bitter tears over the dangers he said threatened the liberties of the people through curtailment of the freedom of the press by the national industrial recovery administration. He said he was afraid of the designs of the politicians.

McCormick Long in Politics.

It is to laugh when McCormick expresses fear of the politicians. He has been in politics up to his eyebrows ever since he became publisher of the Tribune. He will excuse and palliate any crime committed by one of his political henchmen regardless of party affiliation. McCormick's political platform could be summed up and expressed with a huge dollar mark.

One of the most scandalous things that McCormick has been identified with was the notorious whoopee era of the Chicago sanitary district. It was a Tribune gang in charge of the district when millions upon millions of the taxpayers' money was squandered in a riot of extravagance and waste. Following years of delay the trustees were brought to trial and given prison sentences, but none of them has begun to serve time as yet.

These McCormick controlled sanitary district trustees built a cinder path along the drainage canal, through which flows Chicago's sewage, which is said to have been the most expensively constructed roadway in the world's history. This cinder path, which cost a million dollars a mile, was named and is still known as McCormick boulevard, in honor of the publisher of the Chicago Daily Tribune. The lamp posts along this modern Appian way cost a thousand dollars each.

McCormick and his fellow-publishers are not really concerned over the freedom of the press. That is all poppycock. What they really fear is the rebirth of the nation is going to interfere with their long established and well entrenched grafts.

Straw Man Set Up as Blind.

The insinuation contained in the "freedom of the press" paragraph of the newspaper code is an insult to the intelligence of the American people, and was written by McCormick as a set-up, a straw man, to be battered around in a general attack upon the entire NIRA program. When it is clearly understood that the Chicago Tribune is the mouthpiece of the "open shoppers" of the middle west, then a true conception of the "freedom of the press" cry which is going up over the land can be had.

McCormick is going on a speech-making tour over the country. On this tour he will lambast NIRA and all of its works, always hiding behind the "freedom of the press" bogey man.

McCormack never appears before a meeting of the general public. This "big, bad wolf" of the newspaper world always plays safe by addressing select, sympathetic audiences where brickbats are barred. The daily newspapers in each city feature the text of his speeches, and in that way he gets his propaganda across to the public.

NRA PLANS CUTS IN HIGH SALARIES OF MOVIE STARS

Washington.—The national recovery administration has drafted a code to reduce the alleged excessive salaries of movie stars. The code proposes an "assessment" of $10,000 as the maximum penalty for employers who are found to have paid "an unreasonably excessive inducement" to any person to enter into their employment. The code would also apply to the salaries of motion picture directors.

GLASS WORKERS WIN STRIKE.

High Point, N. C.—The new organization spirit in the south is reflected in the strike won by the glass workers here.

Their agreement calls for abolition of the stretch-out, and the firing of all strikebreakers. The workers agreed to return to work pending arbitration by the national labor board of controversy over wage rates.

That is the practice of assembling professional strikebreakers, transporting them from one state into another, sometimes for the purpose of displacing citizens of the state who have their homes established there, and at other times with no thought of employing them in the industry, but for the purpose of affecting scale negotiations and forcing the workers to accept settlements they would otherwise not accept.

Time for Inquiry Here.

"It appears to me the time is propitious, when in many cities of this country campaigns are being made against crime, that there should be an investigation of this activity.

"We are confronted with a condition where the employes in industry are to be more effectively organized under the NRA. If the practice of assembling professional strikebreakers and transporting them throughout the country is continued, it will never lead to industrial peace, but the opposite. I am sure the trade union movement desires industrial peace. No men or women desire to be confronted with a condition under which they find it necessary to leave their employment. Tactics of this kind can only lead to strikes and lockouts, and owing to the fact that some of the employers' agencies control the avenues of information by which the people are reached, it is becoming more and more of a menace to national and international unions."

Convention Mourns Passing of Hillquit

Washington.—The death of Morris Hillquit in New York during the progress of the American Federation of Labor convention here came as a profound shock to officials and delegates, many of whom were intimate personal friends as well as sincere admirers of this distinguished exponent of the rights of labor and versatile antagonist of all who undertake its exploitation.

President Green voiced his personal sentiments and those of the delegates generally, in a touching tribute as he appointed Delegate Dubinsky, of the Ladies' Garment Workers, to whose success the deceased leader had so greatly contributed, head of a committee to draft the formal resolution of condolence which the convention unanimously adopted, standing, as follows:

"Whereas, in the death of Morris Hillquit the organized labor movement of America has lost one of its staunchest adherents and life-long supporters; and,

"Whereas, Morris Hillquit, throughout his public career of a half century, contributed generously and constructively of his great girts to the cause of the workers as industrial adviser, speaker, writer and peerless defender before judicial tribunals; and,

"Whereas, we recognize that Morris Hillquit incessantly championed the battle of the wage-earners for higher standards of living, for the abolition of sweatshop work conditions and for economic and social justice; be it

"Resolved, That the Fifty-third convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in Washington, D. C., express deep sorrow over the demise of Morris Hillquit and unanimously tender its deeply felt condolence to his wife and family in this hour of their bereavement.

Banker Advocate of Wage Cuts Didn't Take Any Cuts Himself

Albert H. Wiggin's Annual Salary Remained at More Than $200,000 Through Depression Years and Still Received $100,000 Yearly, Though Retired.

Washington, Oct. 26.—Albert H. Wiggin, big Wall street banker, who was one of the earliest and most vociferous advocates of wage cutting after the depression began, took care to line his own pockets while the getting was good.

Mr. Wiggin still lined them, to the tune of more than $200,000 a year, though he had retired from active business.

These facts were made public when Mr. Wiggin was called to testify before the senate banking committee. The testimony revealed that:

In four and a half years as head of the great Chase National bank, Wiggin received about $1,500,000 in salary and bonuses from the bank and other corporations.

When he retired last winter, Wiggin received from the executive board a salary for life of $100,000 a year.

Wiggin's salary from the Chase National was $175,000 in 1929, $217,750 in 1930, $250,000 in 1931, $220,300 in 1932 and $52,970 in the first six months of 1933. His salary was thus shown to have been actually higher in the depression years of 1930, 1931 and 1932 than in 1929. While the income of the great mass of the population was steadily falling, Wiggin's was rising.

A wise old trainer, asked for some advice on winning races, said, "Well, sir, the thing to do is get out in the front at the start and improve your position from there on."

ARGUMENTS ON PRISON LABOR CASES ARE SET FOR JANUARY 8

Washington, Oct. 26.—The supreme court has set Jan. 8 for the beginning of argument on the Alabama action against states that have excluded Alabama's prison made goods or required that they be conspicuously labeled. Under the Hawes-Cooper act, nineteen states have already passed such laws.

The Alabama authorities are seeking to have these state laws nullified on the ground they constitute discrimination against the state and are an infringement of sovereignty. The federal government is involved in the action because Alabama contends that her prison made goods move in interstate commerce and cannot be molested by the laws of other states.

The argument will present a direct issue between the advocates and opponents of prison labor. Prison administrators generally favor the extension of penal labor. Organized labor, on the other hand, vigorously opposes the shipment of any prison products in competition with free labor.

Alabama prisoners were paid 15 cents per week in 1932, a survey by the U. S. labor department revealed. In addition, workers in the prison cotton mills were paid overtime for all hours above ten a day.

SILK STRIKERS ASK HIGHER MINIMUM PAY

Washington.—Striking silk workers from Paterson, N. J., and other silk centers told the national labor board that minimum wage provisions for weavers under the silk code are too low and asked revision of the rate from $22 to $27. They said that the industry can solve other matters at issue if the weaver pay provisions are changed.

The workers were mostly members of the Silk Workers' Union, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The action of the workers was the first time since the national recovery administration began functioning that labor has asked upward revision of minimum wage provisions of a key industry.

"DURING THIS YEAR THE INTERSTATE HAS MADE THE LARGEST INCREASE IN INDUSTRIAL BUSINESS IN ITS HISTORY"

—DR. JOSEPH W. JOHNSON
President Interstate Life and Accident Co.

INTERSTATE HAS LARGE INCREASE, JOHNSON STATES

President of Local Insurance Company Reports Industrial Writing Gains Steadily.

That the NRA program has increased the purchasing power of the industrial class is evidenced by the record being made by the industrial insurance organizations of the country, Dr. Joseph W. Johnson, president of the Interstate Life and Accident company, stated Tuesday that his company is now receiving each week applications for three times as many new industrial policies as the company received each week in 1928.

"If conditions continue as they are at present," said Dr. Johnson, "the Interstate Life and Accident company will make the largest increase in industrial business that it has ever made in its history. A great many people who formerly carried regular life insurance, paying the premium on it annually, are now seeking the protection afforded by the weekly premium policy.

"The present conditions have driven home the importance of paying for this protection in small weekly installments. Last October I told our field force I would give them a trip to the Century of Progress fair in Chicago if certain records were made. Since that time, our premium income in the weekly premium department has increased on the basis of a quarter of a million dollars per year. Our regular life department also shows a substantial gain in insurance in force.

"We are, therefore, celebrating the wonderful record made by our agency force by a convention in Chicago this week-end."

One hundred and sixteen agents of the Interstate have won the trip. The N. C. & St. L. railroad has added four Pullmans to its Dixie Flyer, leaving Chattanooga at noon Thursday, to take care of these men and their wives from the Georgia and East Tennessee territory. An extra Pullman has been added to the train from Memphis to take care of the men from West Tennessee, Mississippi and Arkansas.

The officers of the Interstate Life and Accident company are: Dr. Joseph W. Johnson, president; F. L. Underwood, treasurer; G. K. Henshall, vice-president and manager of agencies; J. R. Leal, secretary; C. S. Gwin, assistant secretary, and James F. Finlay, general counsel. They will attend this convention and deliver addresses. J. W. Lancaster, the manager in Chattanooga of the industrial department, will be accompanied by seven of his men who have won the trip. L. W. Rhodes, manager of the life department, men in Chattanooga, has also won the trip to the fair.

Dr. Johnson was among the first men in Chattanooga to sign the President's code agreement and secure the Blue Eagle. In supporting the President in his new deal, the home office of the company is now working on a five-day week basis and has added a number of new clerks to its payroll.

DR. JOSEPH JOHNSON.

At noon Thursday, the Dixie flyer on leaving Chattanooga for Chicago will carry four extra pullmans. They are the sign and symbol of improved business conditions, according to Dr. Joseph Johnson, president of the Interstate Life and Accident Insurance company, for they are carrying many insurance men to Chicago as a prize for writing a certain amount of business.

Dr. Johnson states that if the present industrial business of his company continues to increase at its present rate, all records in the history of the company will be broken.

That conditions have materially improved is evident in the fact that the Interstate Life and Accident Company are now receiving each week three times as many new industrial policies as received each week in 1928.

This significant record proves two things: First, that the NRA has bettered conditions, and second, that people generally have learned the true protection value of insurance.

Probably no time in the history of the modern world has afforded such an excellent opportunity to test the worth of insurance as during the past four years. That it has emerged the surest, safest and most convenient form of permanent investment and protection assurance is shown by the record of the Interstate.

TEXTILE WORKERS' STRIKE WINS UNION RECOGNITION

High Point, N. C., Oct. 26.—Unionism's greatest victory in the southern textile trade was scored at the Bossong Full Fashioned mill at Ashboro, near here.

The spirited stand of the Bossong workers during their strike won them a 25 per cent increase in wages; and, besides that, union recognition. This victory makes them the first textile workers to win union recognition through a strike.

The shop committee at the Bossong mill is still battling the bitter opposition of mill management which persists in breaking agreements.

All through this section of the south, spirit is strong for organization and unionization of the workers. The workers clamor for organizers; the only difficulty is lack of time and of organizers trained to cope with southern conditions.

The manufacturers are redoubling their efforts to suppress unionism with anti-union literature, violations of codes and agreements, the encouragement of company unions, the use of detectives to bore into the unions from within, and other underhanded and bold attempts to curtail and kill organization.

Nevertheless, in Ashboro, at McCrary's Full Fashioned mill, workers received 10 per cent wage increase because of efficient and effective work on the part of the shop committee. And at High Point, the shop committee of Branch 52 of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers pushed through a 10 per cent increase in wages in all departments of the Diamond Full Fashioned plant, and won a 10 per cent increase for the leggers of the Adams mill.

Googe Fears Trouble If Rights Of Workers Are Not Protected

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 26.—George L. Googe, A. F. of L. representative in charge of the southern trade union campaign, expressed fear that "serious labor trouble" was threatened throughout the country if the federal government does not immediately "protect the rights of the workers under the national recovery act."

In a statement issued from headquarters of the southern campaign here, he said strikes will spread not only in textile mills, but in other southern industries operated by reactionary employers. He charged workers were not being given the right to organize and those joining unions were being discharged.

NATIONAL LABOR BOARD BACKS AWARD FAVORING BRICKLAYERS

Washington, Oct. 26.—The national labor board has sustained the award handed down Aug. 5 by an arbitration tribunal in New York City dealing with wages and hours for union bricklayers and the question of sub-contractors. The employers had challenged the award, contending a so-called earlier award should supplant it.

The labor board had before it only the question of which award to uphold. The award approved gave virtually everything to the bricklayers which they sought. The board's action means they will receive wages of $13.20 a day instead of the $9 wage demanded by the contractors. About 14,000 men are affected.

The decision is expected to have a big influence on the wages of 125,000 building workers in New York City and vicinity. A majority of the crafts are now receiving $12 a day.

Pending final determination of the controversy, many thousands of dollars have been held in escrow, which will now be paid in wages to the bricklayers.

Governor Refuses to Commission Private Guards for Strike Duty

Charleston, W. Va.—Gov. Kump has refused a request of the Pennsylvania Railroad company for the wholesale issuance of commissions to so-called special officers in the employ of the company to do guard duty in the steel strike zone of the northern panhandle.

The governor pledged the full cooperation of the deputy sheriffs, the state police and other regularly constituted public officers, but made his position clear on the private guard system, declaring that he will oppose placing "law enforcement in the hands of private individuals or corporations."

The governor's action is unprecedented in this state, as for many years former governors have on the slightest pretext commissioned armies of these so-called private guards during strikes and organizing campaigns.

This assures the workers of West Virginia that the present state administration proposes to give them a new deal.

Green Charges Undercover War On Recovery Act

Labor Head Says Influential Groups Fight NRA Program, Which He Declares Must Not Be Permitted to Fail.

New York City, Oct. 26.—"Undercover efforts" are being made by "influential groups of industry" to defeat the purposes of the national recovery act, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, charged in speaking before the convention of the Cloth Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers' union here. Delegates from the United States and Canada attended the convention, called to consider proposals for amalgamation of the union with the United Hatters of North America.

"We cannot permit this great economic experiment to fail," Mr. Green declared. "We cannot permit it to be sabotaged. It must succeed and it will succeed. I shudder to think what will happen to our country if it fails. Labor must see to it that it shall not fail."

Says Labor Has Co-operated.

Asserting that from the beginning organized labor has co-operated fully with the government in its recovery program and that "most of industry" has done the same, Green declared that he regretted to observe, however, that "there are strong evidences of failure on the part of influential groups of industry and individuals to give to the NRA program the support which it should have."

"Undercover efforts are being made to defeat the purposes of this act," he said. "This is responsible for the failure to make more progress than has been made. If we have not succeeded as far as we should it is because of the counteractive efforts put forth against those who have tried honestly to make the great experiment a success."

Stresses NRA Gains.

President Green hailed with satisfaction achievements under the NRA, stressing the abolition of child labor, elimination of sweatshops, raising of wages in many industries and cutting of hours.

The speaker appealed to labor for strong support of the recovery program and said:

"We have not realized all our hopes and ideals and ambitions under the national recovery act. Many workers in many industries have been disappointed because in the working out of codes labor has not realized all that it had hoped for and expected. But we take all that as part of our general experience. I believe the codes must be revised, the hours reduced still further if unemployment is to be taken up and a market created for our manufactured goods."

MORE ABOUT

sistently ignored. Since it takes both sides to make co-operation we do not see what we can do about that particular matter other than to continue our efforts until recognition comes.

Our experience with county officials has been of a different nature, and we find there a recognition that after all the teachers have a right to raise their collective voice. We appreciate this attitude and are confident that by co-operative effort many of our problems can see a happy solution.

There have been several incidents in the county situation, however, which have not been pleasing.

First: The committee which made the agreement with the county authorities about the two weeks' donation of time by county teachers, although composed largely of federation members, was not a committee of the federation. We feel that the authorities should have consulted the organization, which truly represents the teachers. This is a goal for which we are working. A certain amount of time is necessary to accomplish these things.

Second: Three teachers were notified of dismissal within two weeks of the opening of school. Our protests brought forth the reply that they were unsatisfactory teachers, a charge which we are not yet satisfied—in at least one case—is altogether true. Moreover, the time of dismissal branded the action as unjust and deleterious to the welfare of the profession.

The superintendent and chairman of the board of education have given us the promise that this will not occur again and that inefficient and unsatisfactory teachers will receive notice by the close of school year. This of course does not eliminate the unsatisfactory condition under which a teacher must submit to judgment without recourse, but it does afford some measure of protection until a more satisfactory solution can be worked out.

On the whole, we feel that we have made progress and that the future of teaching in Chattanooga and Hamilton county depends upon concerted, united action by the teachers.

We must not permit carefully laid schemes to drive any wedge into our organization. There are evidences of a conclusive nature that this is being done.

Be not deceived into thinking that all is well by the fact that some of you received a slight increase over last year.

This present situation illustrates the words of an early American: "We must hang together or we shall hang separately."

BOARD OF DIRECTORS CONTINUES BATTLE.

The public school system of America is in danger and has in many places been almost destroyed by the demand of powerful and selfish interests, the promotion of which makes prey of the defenseless children of the nation. The public schools are the property of the people of the republic and must be preserved even in times of stress like the present. The policies of inequality and injustice which are begun will break down the morale of the teachers and destroy the schools, if pursued. All teachers condemn them, and all intelligent thinking citizens must condemn them. The inarticulate child cannot complain, but it is unfair to mistreat him. We ask for a fair deal for the child, due regard for his health, his mind, and his training.

The abuses appearing elsewhere have made their appearance in Chattanooga. The allowances for the schools have been reduced in this city to the lowest sum ever spent directly by the authorities from the actual city taxes. There is in the department of education of Chattanooga no standard for the qualification of teachers. Neither is there a salary standard. Today, the average teacher receives about half the annual salary paid the employes of the city fire department.

Many of the school buildings are in a deplorable condition as is shown by the recent survey made by local architects and by the Chattanooga Safety Council of fire prevention. Some schools are crowded, and not a school in the city has standard equipment.

Such conditions we protest. It is time for the public to know of them and to bring pressure on the city authorities to correct them. The matter is not altogether a matter of finance. It is largely a matter of the distribution of finance.

In view of the crisis which public education generally is facing and which the schools of the Chattanooga system in particular are experiencing, we, members of the Chattanooga-Hamilton County Teachers association in regular assembly, present the following protest:

"Whereas, the mayor and commissioners of the city of Chattanooga have seen fit to reduce the budget of the department of education from approximately $890,000 to approximately $821,000, of which sum only approximately $61,000 is contributed from the actual taxes of the city; and

"Whereas, the city schools are not guaranteed a standard nine months term for the school year of 1933-34, and are returning to other policies not known in the Chattanooga schools since 1907; and

"Whereas, some teachers in the schools have received contracts calling for salaries hundreds of dollars less than the pay of employes in other departments, less than half of the salaries paid teachers of similar training by the other cities of the state, approximately half of the salaries paid by Hamilton county for teachers doing similar work, and less than half the median salaries for the entire country; therefore, be it

"Resolved, that we protest the inequality of placing the main burden of necessary economies upon the schools and upon the teachers and demand a fair deal for the children, for the schools, and for the teachers."

MANIPULATION OF TEACHERS' JOBS CHARGED.

"Whereas, those in authority have seen fit to dismiss a large number of our fellow workers without due notice, at a time that was most unjust, and without giving a reasonable or satisfactory basis for said dismissals; and

"Whereas, those same authorities have seen fit to replace a large number of those teachers with new teachers and to make trades and transfers between the county and city systems and in so doing to refuse to recognize the prior claim of the teachers let out; therefore be it

"Resolved, that we, the Chattanooga-Hamilton County Teachers association, Local 246, American Federation of Teachers, deplore such action and hereby enter our vigorous protest and demand that in the future the welfare of the teachers receive consideration and that dismissals be only for just cause and at a proper time."

OFFERS CO-OPERATION TO CITY-COUNTY HEADS.

"Whereas, those in authority have seen fit to indiscriminately readjust salaries of teachers without regard to experience, qualifications, or service; and

"Whereas, this action may have served in some cases to partly rectify previous injustices, it has at the same time created new ones; and

"Whereas, the manipulation of salaries was carried on in such secrecy and without consulting authorized representatives of the teachers; be it

"Resolved, that we, the Chattanooga-Hamilton County Teachers association, Local 246, American Federation of Teachers, do respectfully petition the commissioner of education and the superintendent of schools that our co-operation be accepted in working out standards of qualifications for teachers and an equitable salary schedule based thereon; and be it further

"Resolved, that we desire that in the institution of such changes the welfare of those already serving as teachers and principals be given due consideration to the end that they shall be given proper opportunity to meet those requirements in such cases as they do not already do so."

Kansas City.—The salary of George Washington Hill, president of the low-wage American Tobacco company, was criticized by Representative Joseph B. His salary and commission last year totaled $1,600,000—too much for any man—while others starve."

I grew nervous over my condition—this was unusual for me, for I am very cheerful when I am well and don't easily get nervous. I knew I ought to take something. My aunt told me I ought to try Cardui, which I did. I began to feel better. I kept it up until I had taken three or four bottles. My side quit hurting and I was soon feeling strong and well."

R. F. C. WORKERS REMOVED FROM CITY SCHOOLS

Reported Unfair Practice Is Discontinued.

PROTEST OF LABOR BRINGS RESULTS

Central Body Officials Rap School Head at Commission Meeting.

Appeal direct to the city commission, in regular session Tuesday, resulted in a statement Friday morning that employment of R. F. C. workers for repainting city school buildings had been stopped, at least temporarily, and it is believed the practice will be permanently abandoned.

A short time ago it became known that laborers were performing skilled craftsmen's work at Chattanooga High school, and were being paid out of government relief funds. An immediate and vociferous protest was raised, and it was explained that the city had furnished paint and the Parent-Teacher association had employed the relief workers to "use the brush." Executive officers of Central Body were instructed to make strong protest, and, in co-operation with officials of Local 226, Painters, injustice of the incident was pointed out not only to city officials but to officials of the Painters' International and to Senators Bachman and McKellar, each of whom was wired a request to investigate the matter.

At Tuesday's regular meeting of the city commission President Kamin and Secretary Cuthbert, of Central Body, brought the matter officially to the attention of the board, and a sharp verbal tilt with the commissioner of education resulted. Mr. Kamin explained that the matter was brought to the commission because appeals to Judge Wilkerson had failed to bring any action, and pointed out the injustice of placing the R. F. C. workers on skilled craftsmen's work, thereby forcing the craftsman to meet the "relief" scale or join the "bread line" in some other capacity.

Commissioner Wilkerson explained that the Parent-Teacher association had employed the relief workers, the city having furnished only the paint.

At this point Mr. Cuthbert accused the commissioner of "hiding behind the skirts" of the Parent-Teacher association and using that body as a "subterfuge" to avoid paying fair wages to skilled mechanics. "He has wrecked the schools," Mr. Cuthbert said, "and now he is attempting to wreck established wage scales of skilled workers."

Mayor Bass then remarked that a private session might be able to iron out the differences, and the incident was closed.

"Action of the Parent-Teachers," Mr. Cuthbert told The Labor World, "was doubtless taken in good faith, and their interest in the schools is commendable. As a matter of fact, with the situation such as it has been since the present commissioner was appointed to administer the school affairs, the work of the P. T. A. has been invaluable. It has sponsored numerous activities which should have been carried on by the department, and has added to its normal program continually in its determination to protect the physical properties as well as the welfare of the youngsters. I think the blame for the recent unfair incident should be properly placed on the commissioner of education, who is supposed to see that ways and means are provided for keeping the buildings in proper repair, as well as for actual operation of the schools."

Officials of Central Body expressed confidence that there will be no further employment of relief workers on skilled craftsmen's work by any city department.

Secretary Ickes Warns Against School "Economy"

MILLION RURAL CHILDREN SCHOOL ECONOMY VICTIMS

Washington, Nov. 2.—The National Educational association estimates that 1,025,300 rural children are suffering seriously reduced educational opportunities during the present school term. Of this number, 110,800 children were said to have no schools at all, 35,750 less than three-months' school, and 914,500 less than six months.

The association estimated that 209,573 teachers received less than $750 a year and 84,036 less than $450 a year.

Washington, Nov. 2.—The schools "ought to be the last to feel the pinch of economy," Secretary of the Interior Ickes said in a radio address here.

He charged some persons are taking advantage of present conditions to strike at the future of education.

"I do not deny that of necessity some economies must be made in our schools," the secretary said, "but we are going too far in that direction." He added that some pruning might be necessary, but advised that it be done by experts and not without regard for the dangers of cutting into a vital spot.

Contending that every individual should have as much education as he is capable "of receiving and of using to advantage," Ickes said that was essential to the good of the nation, since "the intelligence of a nation is the sum of the intelligence of all its citizens."

SETTLEMENT STOPS POLICE TERRORIZATION SUGAR BEET STRIKERS

Santa Barbara, Cal.—Following vigorous action by Attorney A. L. Wirin, a police reign of terror, in which Oxnard, Cal., sugar beet workers were arrested, beaten and shanghaied across the country border has been ended, charges against strikers dropped, and an agreement reached guaranteeing all the rights of the workers.

The beet workers have returned to the fields with a substantial increase in wages, their right to a union of their own choice has been recognized, and the Sugar Beet Growers association has agreed that there shall be no retaliation against strike leaders. The agreement was reached after Attorney Wirin had filed suit for damages of $25,000 against the Oxnard chief of police for beating up a striker. Writs of habeas corpus and prohibition were pending and investigation of violations by employers of federal laws had been begun. In the settlement reached all charges brought by the strikers and their representatives were dropped.

July Relief Total in Cities Drops 9 Per Cent Under June

Washington—The children's bureau, department of labor, reported that relief expenditures from public and private funds were 9 per cent lower in July than in June of this year. The report was based on data from 120 cities and city areas.

The July relief expenditures totaled $34,157,843. This was 19 per cent less than the amount spent in March, when relief demands reached their peak, but it was far above the $20,901,016 expended by the reporting agencies July of last year.

Norwegian Labor Party Gains.

Oslo, Norway.—The labor party made big gains in the Norwegian parliamentary elections, winning 20 additional seats from the conservatives, liberals and agrarians. Labor, which will have 70 seats in the new storting, won wide public support through its extensive program of unemployment relief.

MILL BARONS DEFY UNION AND GOVERNMENT

Refuse Labor Department Arbitration Plan.

HARRIMAN STRIKE IS MADE STRONGER

Arrogant Attitude of Bosses Indicates Combination, Says Workers' Official.

That hosiery manufacturers of Tennessee are working hand-in-glove to defeat the purpose of the national recovery act is indicated by the activities of the mill owners, according to Fred G. Held, vice-president of the Full-Fashioned Hosiery Workers, who returned to Chattanooga for a few days this week after numerous futile attempts to secure arbitration for the striking workers at the Harriman Hosiery mills, where nearly 600 workers walked out last week to enforce compliance with the president's program.

J. Harvey Wilson, official of the Richmond and other local hosiery mills, is said to have been among those present at Harriman after the strike was called, and it is said to be the belief of workers there that Wilson is interested in the struck mill.

Mr. Held told The Labor World Thursday that according to his information there are "about a dozen" mills in this section which apparently are determined to defeat the NRA, and efforts on the part of the workers to act collectively to assure compliance with the act have been met by organized opposition, arbitration in any form being consistently refused and the spokesmen for the "sock foundries" maintaining an arrogant attitude both toward the workers and the government agencies charged with enforcement of the act.

The Harriman case was cited as an instance, where, according to Mr. Held, representatives of the workers and of the United States labor department were alike given to understand that there would be no compromise or arbitration on the part of the textile barons.

This attitude, however, the union official declared, has had the effect of greatly strengthening the morale of the strikers, and their determination to secure justice is greater than ever.

Discussing the situation with a representative of The Labor World Thursday, Mr. Held said:

"The strike of hosiery workers at the Harriman Hosiery mills, caused by the dismissal of union workers, continues in full force. The morale of the strikers was strengthened by the arbitrary attitude assumed by the officials of the company Monday, when a committee of workers, accompanied by a representative of the department of labor with the national labor board, interviewed the entire board of directors of the company. The representative of the government presented a plan whereby the workers were to return to work the following day, while an impartial board was to review the cases of discharged employes and render a decision on each. The workers, who are all members of a local union of United Textile Workers, contend they were discharged for their affiliation, while the management claims they were discharged for a good cause. Despite this fact, they absolutely denied them this fair trial, proving the fact that these workers were discriminated against. The officials of the firm were told that if they refused this request they were violating the purpose of the NRA, also the hosiery code, and that this would be immediately reported to that body, but despite this fact they absolutely rejected the proposition.

"This arbitrary attitude by the company only goes to prove more clearly each day that there must be a concerted movement on foot by the entire hosiery manufacturers of Tennessee to combat to the fullest extent the organization of their workers. To the best of my knowledge there are about a dozen hosiery mills in the Tennessee valley financially connected and it is therefore safe to assume that no one mill of this group or chain can concede one point in regards to an attempt on the part of their employes to organize into a legitimate trade union. After reviewing this entire situation, it is clearly brought out that this strike in Harriman does not only involve their right to organize but the entire group of hosiery workers in the Tennessee valley.

"These workers are putting up a splendid fight for every worker in these parts and therefore each and every one should give them their moral and financial support. Many of these workers have been receiving starvation wages for a long period of time and need aid immediately, therefore any contributions will be greatly appreciated. Send such contributions directly to J. K. Crawford, 1002 Roane street, Harriman.

"This strike situation has now been turned over to the regional mediation board of the national labor board in Atlanta, Ga., and we will see what can be accomplished by them or whether the company will also defy this board."

Organized Labor Hails Decision Milwaukee Judge

Wisconsin State Federation Says Judge Gregory's Ruling Decisively Upholds the Workers' Rights.

Milwaukee, Nov. 2.—Circuit Judge John J. Gregory's decision granting an injunction restraining the Simplex Shoe company from violating the labor clause of the nattional industrial recovery act is hailed by the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor as not only a great victory for organized labor but a notable gain for human welfare.

In a letter to organized labor, the federation expresses its satisfaction with the decision and points out its import. The letter says in part:

"Labor does not express elation because of the victory in winning the case. It rather expresses solemn satisfaction that the NRA is construed in the light intended, namely, to promote human welfare in these times of emergency. The right guaranteed to every employe to join a recognized labor union without interference on the part of employers—the right to collectively bargain through representatives freely chosen by such employes is now made as sacred and binding as any other provision in the American constitution.

"Organized labor is glad that the much-disputed and misinterpreted Section 7-A has been given clear and definite construction by a court of competent jurisdiction. The organized workers found it necessary to secure a determination from the judicial department of the government so that employes and employers would thoroughly understand their respective rights and obligations.

"It remains now for the workers of this state and nation to understand fully the import of this decision. Employers may no longer interfere with the rights of the workers to join honest and regular labor unions. No longer may an employer, directly or indirectly, threaten to discharge or punish employes for organizing and joining unions. And the law now protects the employes in their right to have regular unions and union representatives bargain collectively for them and secure for workers decent wages, proper hours and humane living conditions."

Wergin and Sivley Form Partnership

Foundation for one of the greatest institutions in America (possibly) was laid this week when it was announced that W. L. Wergin and W. D. Sivley, veteran members of Lodge 56, Machinists, have formed a partnership and are now soliciting general repair work, brazing, welding, etc. The work is now being done at the Hamilton Machinery company, 204 Market street, and anyone having knowledge of a "job" of any character in this line is assured of a first-class product by calling 7-3447 in the daytime, or 6-7860 at night.

Western Kentucky Mines To Allow Vote on Union

Washington.—The West Kentucky Coal company has notified the national board that it has no objection to a vote of employes to decide their labor affiliation as between the United Mine Workers of America and a company union. The voting will be under supervision of the labor board.

NEWSPAPER OWNER FIGHTS RECOVERY PLAN

Chicago Tribune Attacks President's Program.

CORRESPONDENT RAPS McCORMICK

Says Publisher Has Gall to Address Taxpayers and Citizens Anywhere.

By JOSEPH A. WISE

Chicago, Nov. 2.—Robert R. McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Daily Tribune, has started on a speech-making tour over the country in an effort to wreck the recovery plans of President Roosevelt.

Hopping into his private airplane, the Tribune publisher made a quick trip to Los Angeles, Cal., where he bitterly assailed the "new deal" in an address before the eleventh annual conference of the Western States Taxpayers' association.

As a further contribution to the plans of the enemies of the present federal government, McCormick has assigned Arthur Evans, one of his star reporters, to work with the power companies of Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee in a publicity campaign designed to wreck the Tennessee Valley Authority. Evans was wiring an attack on the Muscle Shoals project from Birmingham, Ala., on the same day that his boss was assailing the government at Los Angeles.

A. P. Carries Poison.

These activities would not be of major importance except for the fact that the poison thus made is carried over the wires of the Associated Press, of which McCormick is a dominant figure, and through the medium of the Chicago Tribune Press service which not only serves newspapers throughout the United States, but has world-wide connections as well. McCormick, therefore, is indeed a "big bad wolf."

"McCormick had better come back to Chicago and square up for the huge sums of money that the Chicago Tribune has robbed the school children of this city out of over a long period of years," said E. N. Nockels, secretary of the Chicago Federation of Labor. "McCormick has an immaculate gall to address a taxpayers' gathering anywhere at any time. He would not dare to address a general taxpayers' meeting in Chicago, because he would be hooted off the platform.

Chicago "On" to McCormick.

"It is a magnificent gesture for McCormick to go to distant cities and pose as a patriot and a noble citizen, but we here in Chicago who have to live with him know him for what he is. He is wholly without public or political morals and scruples. If the Tribune under his guidance has ever espoused any cause in a disinterested, unselfish spirit I would be pleased to have some one point it out. The policy of McCormick and the Tribune has an eye single to the almighty dollar, and they will attempt to ruin any one who stands in the way.

"It is a matter of public record," continued Mr. Nockels, "that the Chicago Tribune company, through political manipulation and legal skullduggery and chicanery of the worst kind, for many years occupied school land in the heart of Chicago at a rental of about one-third of what a fair appraisal of the property showed that the board of education should have received.

"This matter has been a burning issue with the people of Chicago for more than four decades, and is a burning issue today.

"Gorged with wealth and drunk with power, it now has set out to destroy the president of the United States, because the president is endeavoring to work out a square deal for the common people against the desires of predatory big interests of which the Tribune is the mouthpiece.

McCormick Joins Conspirators.

"McCormick has joined a band of desperate men who would wreck the republic to gain their unholy end. These conspirators are located in all parts of the United States, but they have made Chicago their meeting place to hatch their plots against the honest, law-abiding, decent citizens of this country and against the government of the United States."

Mr. Roy McDonald "Makes Good" as An Ad Solicitor

Investigation by Committee Brings Interesting Story From Coal Dealer.

Mr. Roy McDonald, merchant prince, grocer, baker, dairyman, druggist, tire dealer, printer, publisher, individualist, has added another title to his already long list, according to report of a committee which this week called upon a merchant who had innocently placed an advertisement in McDonald's "Home Store" throw-sheet. McDonald, according to this committee, accompanied by the manager of the "Don Cherry Tire company," called on this business man and urged him to place an advertisement in the throw-sheet, and, being an old friend of the tire company "manager," the merchant, a coal dealer, finally succumbed to the wiles of the solicitors and allowed them to have their way. The labor committee, however, was assured that the error would not occur again. Another small "ad" appeared in the non-union advertising sheet last week, but the committee stated there was no such number as the address given.

McDonald has thus scored again, demonstrating his versatility by successfully soliciting an advertisement for his throw-sheet. Mr. Don Cherry, his assistant in the project, told a committee which called upon him a few weeks ago that the "Don Cherry Tire company" advertised in the throw-sheet because the "Home Stores" traded with him, and that he would "think over" discontinuance of his patronage of the circular. It had been rumored, even before the tire company was established, that it was another "dream" of McDonald, whose partiality for visions has been exemplified in his statement when he first organized his throw-sheet and employed an out-of-town operator, that he was casting "wistful eyes" at the daily newspaper field, and, later, when he placed into effect a "dream of years" by "selling" his grocery stores to their respective managers. This latter dream "came true" shortly after the code went into effect, which provided certain hours and a minimum of $35 per week for "executives."

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

Glassblowers Indorse Camp

Branch 92, Glass Bottle Blowers, at a regular meeting Oct. 10 indorsed the candidacy of Clifford E. Camp for county judge. A communication, signed by President J. E. Bird and Secretary William Bland, calling attention to the action, was received this week by The Labor World, and is here noted in accordance with the policy of this paper. The resolution recites that Mr. Camp has been a member of Branch 92 for twenty-seven years.

SUPREME COURT SETS DATE FOR PRISON LABOR CASE

Washington.—The United States supreme court has set for argument on Jan. 8 the application of Alabama for permission to file complaint against nineteen states and the United States to present enforcement of state laws excluding or requiring the conspicuous labeling of its prison-made goods. The Alabama authorities are seeking to have these laws nullified, on the ground they constitute discrimination against the state and an infringement of sovereignty.

The federal government is involved because much of the Alabama goods move in interstate commerce, which the Alabama authorities contend cannot be molested by the laws of other states.

UNION OFFERS SUBSTITUTE FOR BUILDERS' CODE

Provides Higher Wages and Shorter Workday.

THIRTY-HOUR WEEK, FAIR PAY IS ASKED

Master Code, Proposed by Bosses, Seeks 48 Hours, 40c Minimum Wage.

Washington, Nov. 2—A substitute code, providing for the 30-hour week, has been prepared by representatives of organized building trades workers for presentation to the recovery act administration in place of the master code for the industry proposed by the employers and now before the NRA deputies.

The code, approved by the building trades department of the American Federation of Labor, provides for higher wages and shorter hours, as compared with those set in the master code. The form of code administration also provides for labor representation, which was omitted in the code authority set up by the master code.

Instead of an average 40-hour week, with a 48-hour week permitted at times, as provided in the master code, the union code calls for a 30-hour week of five work days of six hours each. Persons employed more than six hours a day "shall be paid twice the normal rate" for overtime.

While the master code would fix a wage of 40 cents an hour for unskilled labor, the union code proposes 40 cents for the southern zones, 45 for the central zones and [illegible] cents for the northern zone.

No provision is made in the master code for the rates of pay of skilled and semi-skilled men. The union code proposes 65, 75 and 85 cents an hour, respectively, for semi-skilled workers in the three zones and $1, $1.10 and $1.20 an hour for the skilled mechanics in the three zones.

The master code proposes clerical wages of $12 and $15 a week, depending upon population. The union code would raise these minimums to $15 to $16.50 a week.

The minimum age for employment is placed at 18 years in the union code, compared with 16 in the master code.

MUSICIANS SUE TO STOP POLICE BAND PLAYING AT PRIVATE FUNCTIONS

New York City, Oct. 18.—Unemployed union musicians have brought suit to stop the New York City Police band from playing at private functions. They charge that the police band, giving its services free, has taken engagements that regular musicians otherwise would have had at ball parks, parades, social functions, picnics, athletic events and the like.

The suit, brought against Commissioner Bolan, alleges that the use of the police band at other than official municipal affairs is not only a direct blow at 17,000 members of the American Federation of Musicians, who are now idle in New York, but also is a misapplication of public funds because it takes policemen from the duties for which they are paid.

Commissioner Bolan has been ordered to show cause why he should not be permanently enjoined from permitting private use of the band.

It is indicated similar action may be taken against fire department and other municipal bands.

RICH RAILROAD COMPANY DENIED TAX DISPUTE REVIEW

Washington.—The supreme court has refused the wealthy Delaware & Hudson company a review of a dispute with the commissioner of internal revenue over the deduction of losses alleged to have been sustained by it and thirty-one affiliates in making federal income tax returns.

Consolidated income tax returns were filed by the Delaware & Hudson company and thirty-one affiliated companies for 1922 and 1923. In 1922 they showed a net loss of $6,063,315, of which the government contended the proportionate share of the Delaware & Hudson company was $3,025,677.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—What motto was recently suggested to express the American worker's point of view toward the purchase of German goods?

A.—President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, said: "Our motto must be, 'We will not buy German goods until German workers are free.'" The motto is in line with the boycott of German goods called for by the 1933 A. F. of L. convention.

Q.—Will labor push its demand for a 30-hour week?

A.—The 1933 convention of the American Federation of Labor declared in favor of pressing a fight for passage by congress of a 6-hour day, 5-day week, if the national industrial recovery act program fails to achieve its purpose of re-employment.

Q.—When was the last convention of the American Federation of Labor in San Francisco?

A.—In 1915.

What Next!

A new British steel house, designed to meet the competition of German steel houses, will soon be on the market. Two men can put up the house of three rooms in sixteen hours, using only a few simple tools. There will be an outer and an inner sheet, the space between being filled with a non-conducting material which makes the house warm in winter and cool in summer and renders it damp-proof, fire-proof and vermin-proof.

A TONIC Laxative

CONSTIPATION, with the annoying symptoms that usually come with it, cuts down organic force and disturbs normal health and well-being. A thorough cleansing of the digestive tract is of great assistance in the removal of sickening constipation symptoms.

When excessive accumulated waste matter disturbs and strains the muscles of the large intestines, rendering them temporarily unable to perform their wave-like evacuating movements, Thedford's Black-Draught is useful in stimulating them to activity, which, again started, should continue regularly until some future disturbance interferes. In this way, Thedford's Black-Draught is one of the TONIC laxatives, tending, as it does, to establish a regular habit of evacuation.

No Place for "Interpretations"

President Roosevelt's ruling on "interpretations" of the collective bargaining section of the recovery act should end "merit clauses" in codes and other attempts to modify or nullify Section 7-A.

The president points out that Section 7-A means just what it says, that it guarantees the rights of free organization, designation of representatives and collective bargaining and that it clearly prohibits attempts to limit these rights. He declares "interpretations" have no place in codes and lead only to controversy and confusion.

Gen. Johnson and other high officials have said the same thing as the president but the efforts to insert "merit clauses" in codes have persisted. Now that the president has spoken, in words that cannot be misunderstood, the issue, if issue it ever was, has been settled. Employers who seek to "interpret" Section 7-A will be only wasting their time and will have themselves to blame if they head into trouble.

Who Is Forgotten Now?

Who is the forgotten man now? There are claims for that doubtful distinction and undesirable position.

The aging worker who has been discharged with short notice, with a younger man at half the wage on his job, is one of the disinherited who makes a rather feeble and inarticulate appeal for help.

Since the cotton textile code became a law the national recovery administration has received hundreds of complaints from workers. Of the complaints, nearly 200 come from those who have lost their jobs, "the aged, the slightly incompetent and those who are naturally slow and unable to produce a volume of production sufficient to justify their being paid a minimum wage."

And so we find that our job is only half done when we as a government have intervened to secure decent living wages for the main body of workers. The aged, the slightly incompetent and those others who are not worth $12 and $13 a week to their employers while better workers can be had for the same price, must be taken care of.

If the young and vigorous workers were receiving wages large enough to care for those others the problem would not be a serious one. But they are not. Some other way has got to be found either to make these folk self-supporting or to care for them. Old age pensions would be the answer for part of the group. For the others—what? This business of bringing about real recovery is indeed a terrific problem in social inventiveness.

Final Victory Certain

Attacks on the child labor amendment by newspaper publishers and their attempt to line up the public against ratification indicate that labor and other forces favoring the amendment are in for a hard fight.

Next year and 1935 will be the crucial years in the fight for the amendment. In 1934 eight states which have not acted favorably will meet in regular legislative sessions and others will very likely call special sessions. In 1934 most state legislatures will be in session.

Pointing out the necessity for every friend of the amendment to bestir himself or herself and work as never before for final victory, the American Child, organ of the national child labor committee, says:

> "If the goal of thirty-six ratifications is reached in 1935 it will make possible federal legislation in time to replace the child labor restrictions in industrial codes which will expire that year, according to the terms of the recovery act. If it be not ratified—then we must expect a return to old conditions of child exploitation. For previous experience indicates that when a period of unemployment begins to abate, the number of children entering industry tends to increase."

There is no doubt that the child labor amendment will be ratified and made part of the federal constitution, however hard a fight is made to defeat it. That is settled. Labor has made up its mind child labor must be permanently abolished and will see that this is done by ratification of the amendment.

THE AMERICAN IDEAL

Editor's Note—The following splendid article was written by Irvin D. Shapiro for the Rockmart Journal. Mr. Shapiro, member of the Rockmart bar, is a son of B. I. Shapiro, active member of the local Bakers' union.

President Roosevelt in his recent talk to the American public, stressed the fact that he wants to create better living conditions for the farmer and the working man. The government is making an effort to hold the dollar at a steady level and yet give it a good purchasing power. The farmer is going to receive more money for his products if there is any humanly possible way for the government to bring it about.

If the present experiment should prove successful, it will go down in history as the greatest feat ever accomplished by the human mind. For thousands of years, it has been the dream of great men to bring about ideal conditions under which every man would have good living conditions and without fear of poverty. Throughout the centuries men have experimented with the ideal form of government. Cities and countries have tried to create conditions that would do away with destitution and bring peace and prosperity to all people on an equal basis.

History is full of failures to accomplish this deed. Just as the United States was the first large nation to bring democratic principles to its citizens, with the power of vote, and the power of religious worship, and the right of personal liberty; so is this the first nation to see success in a plan which has brought failures to others.

The United States is an ideal country for such an experiment. Its industrial power has been brought about by the privilege given to every man to build and develop himself. It stands as a great nation because it was the first civilized country to dedicate itself to the principle that "all men are created free and equal." It was the first civilized nation to give to the world a democratic constitution. Speaking of "democratic" here, we mean a government established by all people who are politically and socially equal. Our government represents capitalism, labor and agriculture. We have all essentials of an ideal government if the people are so minded to bring it about.

All great movements are brought about by the leaders who have the imagination and vision to strive for an ideal. The man who thinks only of himself and cannot see into the future is not a builder. The man who sees the world and his neighbors as only something of which he is the center, is not one who progresses. The man who can be contented in the midst of poverty and starvation among his fellowmen is useless as a human and a citizen. The man who lacks vision might as well be replaced by a tree.

After many decades of indifferent government, we have leaders who have caught a vision of a strong United States where all citizens will really be free, equal and prosperous.

The appeal made by President Roosevelt should be an inspiration to those who really think of this country as something big and great. It has been proved time and again that the selfishness of citizens can soon bring destruction to a nation. A country is only as strong as the individuals who forms its foundation. Weak citizens mean a weak nation. Builders and pioneers create a government that is thriving.

The citizens of today can be pioneers just as those who first cleared the forests of this country and paved the way for future generations.

We have reached the stage of civilization unknown in the past. Ours is now the power to build or destroy. The last ten years of American history will mean the rise or the fall of the American people. We cannot turn back nor can we detour.

The road lies before us. We can follow our leaders in their struggles for an ideal republic, or we can fail them and bring destruction upon ourselves to such a degree and hideousness as ever conceived by man. The great civilization that we have will only make destruction that much worse if it fails. Our high level of living will carry us into a low stage of barbarism through neglect and indifference.

We are now facing a great age of progress, or the absolute collapse of those principles and institutions upon which this country was founded and created.

LABOR BOARD'S DECISION BLOW AT WAGE CUT MOVE

Washington, Nov. 2.—The decision of the national labor board sustaining the $13.20 per day wage of bricklayers in the New York City area comes as a blow to the group of deputy administrators and advisers surrounding Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, recovery act administrator, who have been urging a slash in wages in the building trades. For several weeks the contention has been made that wages in the building trades should be sharply reduced as a stimulant to new building and general recovery in the construction industry. In the front of the campaign has been the construction League of America, while Deputy Administrator Malcolm Muir, president of the McGraw-Hill Publishing company, has been a leading proponent as well of a wage slash throughout the building industry.

PRESIDENT FORCES STEEL TO MAKE PEACE WITH STRIKING WORKERS IN "CAPTIVE" MINES

Washington, Nov. 2.—President Roosevelt has forced the steel companies to make peace with the miners employed in steel-owned coal mines.

As a result of an all-day White House conference, attended by leading steel men and representatives of the NRA, the steel interests agreed to a tentative settlement under which the United Mine Workers of America is to be recognized, the check-off conceded and the terms of the Appalachian coal code go into effect.

The agreement is expected to end a strike of 30,000 men employed in the "captive" mines of the steel companies in Western Pennsylvania. The strike, called to win union recognition and other concessions, has been on for weeks.

Under the agreement the men, represented by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, will return to their jobs; the operators will accept them without discrimination as to their union membership, and machinery will be established for the writing of a formal contract.

As a preliminary to formal recognition of the union and writing of a contract, an election will be held under the direction of the national labor board for the election of representatives of the workers. The steel companies agree to abide by the result of the election.

The concessions by the steel men looking to union recognition are said to be the first such concessions in thirty-three years. The steel interests have always been bitterly anti-union and have long fought organized labor.

At the same time President Roosevelt brought the steel men to terms, he won an agreement from them to cut the price of steel rails from $37.75 a ton to $36.375. The steel companies recently quoted the higher price and Joseph B. Eastman, federal rail co-ordinator, charged that the bids were the result of collusion. The rail orders are to be financed by the federal government, the railroads obtaining federal funds to buy them at the specific price.

The steel order, already put under way as the result of the price reduction, will keep the steel rail mills working at capacity production for at least three months. The order put across at the White House conference is for approximately 800,000 tons. Tie spikes and straps will raise the total, however, to more than 1,000,000 tons.

Cincinnati.—Secretary Bob Hesketh, of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' and Beverage Dispensers' International Alliance, says:

"We added thirty new locals during August and fifteen more during the first two weeks in September. And still the good work goes on.

"Repeal is in sight now, which means some fifteen or twenty thousand additional members to our organization. We are out to make it 100,000 members in the next few months."

PRISON LABOR CODE READY FOR SUBMISSION TO NRA

Atlantic City, N. J.—The American Prison association, at a meeting here, approved a fair practice code governing prison labor and manufacturing for submission to the national recovery administration at Washington. The code proposes a maximum 40-hour week, provides that the sale price of prison-made goods shall include the same labor price as in free industries and prohibits the sale of such goods at less than production costs. The code exempes cases in which the "state-use" system of producing goods only for state institutions is in effect.

JUDGE REFUSES WRIT TO HALT PICKETING

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—Supreme Court Justice Graham Witchief refused to issue an injunction to stop picketing of the Rosenthal, Ettlinger Clothing company by members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. He held the strikers could peaceably picket the plant, but prohibited them from carrying signs charging the company had violated the NRA code.

The employes of the company struck some weeks ago, asserting the concern had refused to deal with the union and had violated the NRA code by refusing to meet with representatives of the workers.

Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other low to look out for your interest, you are doing an injus- e both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be repre- nted in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your or- nization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your rt is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion ter a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to ncur in what has been done and work in harmony with officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others do the same, because one important thing to remember the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

EMPLOYES GET WRIT ENJOINING BIG PUBLIC UTILITY COMPANY

New York, Nov. 2.—A temporary injunction restraining the big New York Edison company from interfering with the right of its employes to organize under the collective bargaining section of the national recovery act was issued by Federal Judge Robert P. Patterson.

The injunction was obtained by the Brotherhood of Edison Employes, an independent labor organization. The injunction upheld the right of the Brotherhood to organize the 33,000 employes of the Edison company and restrained the activities of the Esso- ciation of Employes of the New Edison company, characterized as a "company union."

In its complaint, the Brotherhood of Edison Employes accused the Edi- son company of engaging in a con- spiracy with John H. McNulty, head of the "company union," to violate the terms of the president's re-em- ployment agreement.

The Brotherhood alleges the com- pany and its officials were about to "intimidate, influence and coerce" their employes into accepting a com- pany union plan contrary to the NRA.

After reciting that the president's re-employment agreement, which the company signed on August 1, gives employes the right to organize and bargain collectively through repre- sentatives of their own choosing without interference, the Brother- hood's complaint declares:

That the company is engaged "in a conspiracy with the officials of the alleged association of employes to deprive the employes of the Edison company of the right to organize and bargain collectively, and fraudulently interfere with, restrain, coerce and influence the employes of the dison company in designating their own representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining."

HIT AT N. R. A. LOSES "AL" MANY CHICAGO FRIENDS

By JOSEPH A. WISE

Chicago, Nov. 2.—Alfred E. Smith, former governor of New York and presidential aspirant, lost many friends in Chicago by his veiled at- tack on NIRA in a speech which he made before a small audience at a Century of Progress exposition.

Reading from a prepared state- ment, the former "happy warrior" assailed "dictatorship in government" and the "heavy, cold clammy hand of bureaucracy." Pointing to the world's fair as a monument to the success of "rugged individualism," Mr. Smith said, in part:

"Whether you point to progress in industry, science, invention, transpor- tation or the arts, what you see here is the triumph of the mind and the hand of free men, without dictator- ship.

"It may be and will be urged that private industry often labors for pri- vate gain. It may be that its aims sometimes are selfish. It may be that there are times when it needs the curb and the bit of govern- mental regulation.

"But it is still vastly superior to government planning and govern- ment control of business and of all human effort."

A prominent trade union officer, who in the past has been a strong rooter for the former New York gov- ernor, said:

"Smith was brought here for a pur- pose other than to see the world's fair. I want no more of Smith."

Another former Smith admirer said:

"Al has made himself eligible to join the Hoover wing of the repub- lican party. Hoover also came here "to see the fair," but was more adroit than Al.

"Hoover had little to say publicly, but attended conferences where it was determined that the house of NIRA must be blown down."

Stevenson Praises A. F. of L. Policy

Chairman of Federal Home Loan Board, Former Congressman, Declares Labor's Standards Are Just.

Washington.—A glowing tribute was paid to the policies and stand- ards of the American Federation of Labor by William F. Stevenson, for- mer congressman, now chairman of the federal home loan bank board and the Home Owners' Loan corpora- tion, in an address before the 1933 convention of the A. F. of L. here.

Gompers' Patriotism.

"It is both an honor and a privi- lege to be permitted to address this very representative assembly of American industrial life," Mr. Stev- enson said.

"I have been familiar with the op- erations of the American Federation of Labor since I entered congress at the beginning of the World war.

"It was then headed by Mr. Sam- uel Gompers whom I came to con- sider one of the greatest living Americans of that period. His pa- triotism, his energy and his wise counsel were a tower of strength to the administration then facing that great contest, and I am glad to see that recognition is to be given to his memory by the erection of a monu- ment in this city, where as head of your organization he labored.

Supported A. F. of L. Legislation.

"My experience throughout sixteen years of service in the house of rep- resentatives gave me an extensive in- sight into the principles and aims of a district organization. Coming from a district in which there was no con- nection of this organization, when I was first elected to congress, natur- ally I had no preconceived opinions as to its purpose, policies or strength.

"As time went along through the years, I found myself voting for the aims which it advocated in legisla- tion. In all that time I never dis- sented from the program which was offered by the American Federation of Labor on more than one issue and that was one upon which there was not a great effort made at that time.

Always Fair and Right.

"My support and advocacy of its views in great contests like the con- test over the Esch-Cummings bill, which, in many respects, was unfair to labor, and the contest over the Howell-Barkley bill which was aimed to remedy, to a certain extent, that unfairness, was always the result, not of lobbying, because no representa- tive of the federation of labor ever asked me to support or oppose any measure, in my recollection, but it was because the things this organi- zation stood for were, in my judg- ment, fair and right.

"So much for my past relation to your great organization.

"My observation is that your pol- icy has been the maintenance of standards that are fair and right, as applied to all persons and classes; because if the laboring population re- ceives a just deal the entire country is benefited thereby."

Employment Gain In Trade Unions During October

Increase Reported for Seventh Consecutive Month, With Lat- est Figures Showing Upward Trend Continuing.

Washington, Nov. 2.—Gains in em- ployment during October reported by trade unions to the American Feder- ation of Labor show that re-employ- ment is still continuing.

The October figures revealed a gain in trade union employment for the sevnth conscutive month. The gain was not as large as in September, but federation officials say that this is to be expected as industry made its greatest adjustment for the presi- dent's re-employment program in the month just before September figures were collected.

In September 1.3 per cent of the membership went back to work (re- vised figure), in the first part of Oc- tober, 0.5 per cent (preliminary fig- ure). With 21.9 per cent out of work in October, trade union unem- ployment is now back almost to the December, 1931, level, when 21.8 per cent were idle. The October figure of 21.9 per cent without work (pre- liminary figure) compares with 22.4 per cent in September (final), 23.7 per cent in August and 26.6 per cent in March, when unemployment was at its worst.

The trade union reports show em- ployment gains in building, metal trades, printing, theaters, clothing and textiles, manufacturing, rail- roads, water transport and the pro- fessions. Of twenty-four cities re- porting, thirteen make employment gains.

NEW PLAN TO RELEASE MONEY IN CLOSED BANKS

Washington.—Depositors in closed banks, who are largely in the wage- earning class, may soon get part of their money. A deposit liquidation board will release at least half of the money tied up in closed banks by ad- vancing cash to closed banks, accord- ing to present plans. The amount of loans will be governed by assets of individual banks, with a maximum of 50 per cent of the individual bank's deposits. Where assets are worth less than 50 per cent of deposits, only that amount will be loaned and depositors will get only their propor- tionate share in the remaining assets. Release of the frozen assets is ex- pected to give purchasing power a big boost and be a powerful help to recovery.

Green Charges Undercover Enemies Retard Progress of NRA Program

A. F. of L. President Says "Influential Groups" Are Fighting to Defeat Purposes of Recovery Plan and He Calls on Labor Not to Permit Failure of Great Economic Experiment—Hails Gains Made Under Codes and Criticizes Employers.

New York, Nov. 2.—Labor cannot permit the national industrial recovery act to fail, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, told the convention of the Cloth Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers' union here.

President Green charged that "undercover efforts" are being made to defeat the NRA and he called upon labor to fight the recovery program's enemies and give the program its unqualified moral and material support.

After stressing the abolition of child labor, elimination of sweatshops and other benefits under the NRA, President Green said:

"We cannot permit this great economic experiment to fail. We cannot permit it to be sabotaged. It must succeed and it will succeed. I shudder to think what will happen to our country if it fails. Labor must see to it that it does not fail."

Efforts to Defeat NRA.

President Green said there are "strong evidences of failure on the part of influential groups of industry and individuals to give the NRA program the support it should have."

"Undercover efforts are being made to defeat the purposes of this act," he continued. "This is responsible for the failure to make more progress than has been made. If we have not succeeded as far as we should it is because of the counteractive efforts put forth against those who have tried honestly to make the great experiment a success."

"We have not realized all our hopes and ideals and ambitions under the national recovery act. Many workers in many industries have been disappointed because, in the working out of codes labor has not realized all that it had hoped for and expected. But we take all that as part of our general experience.

Codes Must Be Revised.

"I believe the codes must be revised, the hours reduced still further if unemployment is to be taken up and a market created for our manufactured goods."

He criticized employers who have attacked labor's organizing activities under the NRA.

"The facts are that the workers themselves have taken advantage of the opportunity given them under the NRA and have come to us clamoring for organization," he said. "They responded to the opportunity, they asked to come in and we have helped them and intend to continue to help them with all the resources at our disposal."

LABOR BOARD ASKED TO BAR CODES WHICH BRING STRIKES

Washington, Nov. 2.—Intervention of the national labor board to prevent the drawing of NRA codes which are so unjust to the workers as to cause strikes is asked by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in a letter to the board's chairman, Senator Robert F. Wagner.

The letter, signed by International President D. W. Tracy and International Secretary G. M. Bugniazet, of the union, says:

"We are aware that the purpose of the national labor board is to apply the 'rule of reason' to industrial ills, especially those that take form as strike protests. Its function in reference to NRA is patent. Yet it appears to us that to allow codes to be drawn that are on their face unfair, inequitable and unjust to workers, and then to seek to head off strikes which these very codes induce, is hardly an application of the rule of reason . . . codes which are destined to goad a large group of otherwise patent, orderly, an intelligent workers to strike are a menace . . .

"We refer to impending codes for the building construction industry, in particular the code of fair competition for the electrical contracting division.

"We have repeatedly protested features of this code. We have marshaled facts, figures and principles, and we have warned that if the proposed minimum wage rate of 60 cents an hour, and certain other features of this proposed code were actually instituted, only one result could be expected: namely, wholesale strikes. Please allow us to enumerate certain features of this proposed code:

"1. A minimum wage of from $18 to $24 a week for 'the finest craftsmen in the world'—the same men who made from $50 to $75 a week in 1929.

"2. A 'shady' clause that will be used by unscrupulous employers to break building trades unions.

"3. Clauses that set a premium upon the anti-social employer, and which will penalize the fair employer who has always paid good wages, and granted good conditions.

"We urgently request the intervention of the national labor board at this time, on the ground it is better to prevent strikes than to try to adjust them, after incensed workers walk out in protest against intolerable and impossible regulations."

STATE LABOR BODIES PLAN UNIFORM ACTION ON PROGRESSIVE LAWS

Washington, Nov. 2.—Representatives of state federations of labor, who had been in session here during the American Federation of Labor convention, adjourned after having perfected organization, laid plans for a larger convention next year, and agreed upon a program for pushing labor legislation in states.

The principal function of the meetings of state federation of labor representatives was to plan uniform action in support of uniform legislation in states. The delegates, all of whom are delegates to the A. F. of L. convention, had before them, among other things, plans for promoting the following legislation:

"Workmen's compensation laws; unemployment insurance laws; laws to restrict hours of labor for women and minors; ratification of child labor constitutional amendment; safety legislation; old age pension laws; anti-injunction laws.

Thomas J. Donnelly, chairman, who is secretary of the Ohio State Federation of Labor, declared that the prospects for progressive legislation in states is bright this year. "We have laid plans for uniform action so that our state federations may promote uniform bills in all states," he said. "We are, we believe, opening a vast new field of usefulness, bringing together a new and really strong unit within the family of the American Federation of Labor. Our meeting next year will be larger. It can be said now that this organization of state federations of labor is a fixture in the structure of the American Federation of Labor."

DECLARES UNIONS NECESSARY.

New York City.—Preaching in St. Patrick's Cathedral, the Rev. Thomas L. Graham declared that workers have every right to organize to protect themselves and labor unions are "absolutely necessary in the industrial world today."

"The employer who puts a blue eagle in his window, takes on a dozen new hands and then fires them, after he has impressed everybody with his patriotic support of the president's act, is a hypocrite—the kind of hypocrite Christ denounced to the Pharisees," he said.

Employers' Groups Plan Mass Attack On Recovery Act

Twenty-six Organizations Band to Fight National Recovery Program.

Policies of National Labor Board Assailed by Committee Formed by Manufacturers' Association---Object Is to Eventually Seize Control of Administration---Some Get Cold Feet.

Washington, Nov. 9.—Organized employers have launched a great scale attack on the recovery program, with the object of scrapping many functions of the national recovery administration and seizing control of the administration.

Twenty-six leading national trade organizations banded for the attack, by forming an advisory committee of the anti-union National Industrial Council of the National Association of Manufacturers, to "formulate policies on the problems of industry resulting from the recovery program of the federal government."

"Industrial codes, the uncertainty of monetary policies, the difficulty of securing capital under the national securities act, and the disrupting of present relations of employers and employes, are creating grave problems and united action by American industry is needed to support basically sound policies of recovery," the committee said, in announcing its organization.

Some Get Cold Feet.

Later some of the twenty-six organizations lost courage and denied they had taken an active part in the formation of the committee. Statements were given out by the American Paper and Pulp association, the Edison Electric institute, the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers and the American Iron and Steel institute taking issue with the report they had voted for, approved or sanctioned a resolution adopted by the committee or were a part of the "wrecking campaign" of the manufacturers against NRA. The Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, Associated Grocery Manufacturers of America, and Lead Industries association "expressed surprise" at inclusion of their names.

The committee was formed under the direction of officials of the National Association of Manufacturers, long a foe of organized labor. Conferences were held at the Washington office of the association to perfect the formation and complete plans for a systematic national attack upon NRA.

Unified Action Sought.

Certain provisions of the resolution adopted by the committee follow:

"Whereas, recent rulings and instructions relating to the administration of codes and agreements under the national recovery act and the agricultural adjustment act provide for districting the country for governmental administrative purposes, thus involving threatened eliminations of industrial self-government; and,

"Whereas, sound employment relations must be established and maintained by mutual agreement between employer and employe in the light of local plant and community conditions; and,

"Whereas, the policies of the national labor board tend to prevent the prompt and peaceful local settlement of industrial disputes and to prevent the development of sound systems of employment relations, thus increasing the number of such disputes; and,

"Whereas, in the light of the foregoing there is demonstrated necessity for greater co-operation between the manufacturers' trade associations of the United States, in order to secure more unified action by industry in the interests of the whole people, in support of basically sound governmental policies and in constructive co-operation with the administration in the interpretation of the national industrial recovery act, the agricultural adjustment act, and other emergency legislation; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That there is hereby established an advisory committee of the National Industrial Council of the National Association of Manufacturers, composed of the presidents and managing executives of national trade associations of manufacturers; this committee shall consider and take appropriate action upon matters outlined in this resolution and any other national industrial problems which may from time to time arise, future meetings to be held upon the call of the chairman, who shall be the president of the National Association of Manufacturers."

The following "fish story" is told us by Paul Aymon. He vows that not long ago while on a fishing expedition he spied a snake which had just caught a frog. Desiring the frog for bait, he tried unsuccessfully by plodding and other means to make the snake release its prey; finally he pulled out a flask and poured a little liquor in the snake's mouth. The snake dropped the frog and slithered away.

Some time later the fisherman felt a tug at his trousers, and found the snake, looking up expectantly—another and larger frog in his mouth.

Action by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council in declaring the Atlantic Ice and Coal company and its subsidiary, the Southeastern Brewing company, "unfair to organized labor" was backed by similar action on the part of Local 79, Brewery Workers, at a special meeting Tuesday night, following notice that members of the local employed by the brewery had been summarily discharged.

It was said that the reason for discharge of the union members was the fact that beer sales had practically stopped since Central Body's action several weeks ago, although non-members are declared to have replaced those let out.

The Atlantic and Southeastern concerns were declared "unfair" by Central Body only after efforts covering several weeks had failed to convince the management that organized labor should be employed in the preparations for installing a brewing plant locally.

Executive board of Central Body, together with representatives of several building trades, reported they had been put off from time to time while the building operations progressed with non-union workers. The brewing company distributes Lions Pilsener beer.

Machinists 1450 In Social Session

Lodge 1450, Machinists, held forth Thursday night at Central Labor hall with an open meeting, at which music, speeches and a "Dutch lunch" were the principal features for the entertainment of the members and a few invited friends.

A string band and a male quartet were enjoyed in several numbers between talks, and "a good time was had by all."

Drinks and sandwiches were served at the conclusion of the program, which was presided over by C. W. Pfeifer.

Another Court Holds NRA Pledge Binding Contract

New York, Nov. 9.—Justice James Fitzgerald in the municipal court in The Bronx upheld the president's re-employment agreement under the NRA as a contract binding upon an employer and gave judgment to a waiter who sued for wages.

The waiter, Samuel Hoffman, filed suit against Elias Zervos, restaurant proprietor of Jackson Heights, Queens, for payment of wages which he claimed were due him at the rate of $15 a week, as prescribed in the president's agreement and which he alleged Zervos had refused to pay.

Hoffman told the court that when Zervos signed the president's agreement in August and posted the Blue Eagle insignia in his windows he asked for an increase to $15.

He said he had read that that was the minimum wage to be paid by a restaurant proprietor who flew the Blue Eagle. All he got, he charged, was $4 and $5 a week, until a total of $16 had been paid him.

When he insisted on his $15 a week, Hoffman said, Zervos threatened to discharge him if he persisted in the demand. His discharge followed and Hoffman sued for $59 back pay, covering five weeks.

Justice Fitzgerald decided in Hoffman's favor, ordering Zervos to pay the $59. He ruled that in the case of the waiter an agreement had been made between an employer and the president of the United States and that Hoffman was the beneficiary.

"Although it may be true that to pay this man $15 a week may entail a hardship upon the employer," the court ruled, "this should have been taken into consideration before the agreement was signed. Now that the agreement has been entered into, the defendant is liable for what he contracted to do."

Local Typos Lose A Valued Member

Chattanooga Typographical union, No. 89, lost a sincere and valued member last Sunday, when Frank J. Weber, 71, passed away at a local hospital following an illness of several weeks.

Mr. Weber had been connected with the composing-room forces of the Chattanooga dailies for more than thirty-five years, most of which time was spent as proofreader, at which he was unusually proficient. He was of the "old school" in that art, and was known by travelers throughout the country as one of the most accurate and thorough newspaper readers. At the time of his passing he was connected with the News.

Mr. Weber came to Chattanooga from Louisville, Ky., where two sisters still reside. He is survived also by one son, Homer S. Weber, of Atlanta.

Funeral services were held Tuesday at Chapman's funeral home, conducted by the Rev. T. S. McCallie, a long-time personal friend of the deceased. Pallbearers were F. T. Carter, J. Martin Peyer, W. L. Gardner, Wayne Headrick, C. A. Carpenter and F. C. French.

In the passing of Brother Weber the typos lose an able advocate, and the editor of The Labor World feels keenly the demise of a valued personal friend.

California Cotton Pickers Strike Ended by Compromise

Fresno, Cal.—A compromise settlement ended a strike of cotton pickers in the San Joaquin valley. The workers accepted pay of 75 cents for 100 pounds, an increase of 15 cents. The strike involved about 12,000 men.

MINE STRIKERS WIN.

Warsaw, Poland.—When mine owners agreed to hunger striking miners' demands against pay cut, ninety-six miners, who had been underground at Boryslaw for three days, returned to work.

A man stepped up to a grocer's cigar counter and bought two ten-cent cigars. A Scotchman who was waiting to be served pushed forward:

Scotchman: You sell those cigars three for a quarter, don't you?

Grocer: Yes.

Scotchman: Well, here's a nickel. I'll take the other one.

LOCAL TYPOS LIKE TASTE OF UNION BREAD

Ask Colonial Why Plant Not Organized.

REPLY TO LETTER FROM MANAGEMENT

History of Efforts to Unionize Bakery Recalled by President Peyer.

Chattanooga printers "like to eat bread baked by union bakers," according to a letter sent this week to Manager Hugh Wasson, of the Colonial bakery,. and the hope is expressed that the Typos may soon learn that the Colonial has been organized.

The letter, ordered sent by No. 89 at the regular meeting last Sunday afternoon, was in reply to a communication from Manager Wasson, who called attention to the fact that he had on occasions favored certain local unions, particularly in the erection of the Colonial plant. Members of No. 89, however, pointed out that the letter from the bakery manager failed to mention the recently organized Bakers' union, which has proved very successful in other large local bakeries, but which for some reason was stopped so far as Colonial employes are concerned.

50,000 Weavers Win Strike for Higher Wages in Paterson

Washington, Nov. 9.—Labor's fight to revise fair practice codes for higher wages won its first point when the national labor board decided that striking silk workers in Paterson, N. J., and various towns in Pennsylvania and New England return to work immediately at piece work rates averaging $25 for a 40-hour week. The decision affects between 40,000 and 50,000 workers who have been striking for an agreement whereby they would be guaranteed fixed wages in the codes.

Opposition of Mill Owners.

Chairman Robert F. Wagner, of the labor board, said he had reports that in some southern communities weavers have been receiving as low as $14 a week.

He and NRA officials have been striving to increase the wage to $25 in plants affected by the strikes, but were handicapped by the refusal of the mill owners to pay that wage unless they were protected against unaffected mills paying less.

According to the decision the strikers will be reinstated without discrimination, weavers' rates will be fixed so that they will average $25 a week, and the rates of wages of other workers will be "fairly adjusted" to those of the weavers.

Mr. Wagner said the rates would probably be written into the codes and that it would be necessary for the NRA to help raise the pay to the figure agreed upon during the board's arbitration proceedings.

"What is the NRA for," he said, "if it is not to eliminate the inequities and raise wages to meet American living standards?"

GOVERNMENT FINDS BOSSES MAINLY AT FAULT FOR PRESENT WAVE OF STRIKES AND LOCKOUTS

Secretary Perkins and Senator Wagner Rap "Chiselers" and Declare Labor Is Fighting for Its Rights —No Cause for Alarm.

Official statements issued by two high government sources emphasized that the great majority of current industrial disputes have been caused by employers flouting the labor provisions of the recovery act, says the current issue of "Labor."

"An analysis has been made of the first hundred cases coming before the NRA's national labor board," the paper quotes Senator Robert F. Wagner, chairman of that tribunal, "and in 70 per cent of these cases the point involved has been recognition of the right to collective bargaining as granted to labor in Section 7-A of the national recovery act."

Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, discussing approximately 900 strikes and lockouts which have occurred during the last six months, said:

Blames Employers.

"If employers had in all cases accepted without struggle the requirement of the law that collective bargaining is permitted and required where desired there would have been a reduction of from 50 to 75 per cent in the number of disputes in the last few months."

Miss Perkins, like Senator Wagner, decried all attempts to read anti-strike provisions into the recovery act. Both officials believe that employers and employes should negotiate their problems, using the national labor board or the federal conciliation service to settle points on which agreements cannot be reached by the bosses and the unions.

But both have agreed that strikes are necessary and desirable when there is no other means left to correct injustices.

No Cause for Alarm.

Senator Wagner and Miss Perkins feel that there is "nothing alarming" about present strikes. They pointed out that the number of conflicts now are much less than in comparable periods following other industrial depressions.

More than 200,000 wage-earners have been returned to work as a result of the operations of the national labor board, Senator Wagner said. The board has taken jurisdiction over a total of 110 industrial disputes, 75 of which were strikes and three lockouts.

Out of the 110 cases, 66 were successfully settled by the board, he said. Twenty-eight are pending and 16 have been referred to the department of labor or local NRA bodies.

A total of 128 industrial disputes have been filed with the board, and Senator Wagner gave a detailed tabulation of the nature of the grievances. They are:

Discharge for joining an organization, 23; lockout for joining an organization, 1; refusal to recognize employes' representatives, 10; refusal to sign any agreement, 4; union activity prevented, 8; refusal to recognize a union, 40; refusal of collective bargaining, 5; forced into company union, 4; refusal to reinstate, 2; union jurisdictional disputes, 3; nonpayment of code wages, 4; reduction in weekly earnings, 4; demands for higher wages, 12, and miscellaneous, 8.

"These figures speak for themselves," said the senator, "as do those giving the total number of settlements achieved by the board. The analysis is worth the consideration of those who want to get at the causes of labor unrest and who wish to gauge the success of the means of adjusting them."

There are 14 "counts" in the foregoing table. At least 11 of them are based on the employers' failure to go along with the spirit and letter of the recovery act.

A farmer was asked the other day how he found the weather out at his place. He replied, "Oh, I just looked outside the house, and there it was."

Federation's Survey Indicates Business Making Progress

Fundamental Gains Noted by Statisticians of American Labor Movement.

Public Works Program, at Last Getting Under Way, to Be Big Aid in Steady Climb of Nation Back to Prosperity---More Buying Power Pressing Need---Business Still Close to 1931 Levels.

Washington, Nov. 9.—Fundamental progress has been made under the NRA and other government recovery measures, the American Federation of Labor says in its monthly survey of business.

"We have only to look back to the chaos of February and March to see how much progress has been made to date," the survey says. "If defiation has run its course, half our population might be starving today. It is well to remember that such basic changes cannot be completed in a few months. We hear of five and ten year plans for recovery in other nations."

The survey says, however, that "NRA wages have not brought higher living standards to the average worker. A 6 per cent increase in wages has been eaten up in an 8 per cent increase in living costs and he finds his real monthly income in September actually below March by 2.3 per cent.

Some Lose, Others Gain.

"Some codes have reduced minimum wage rates below those actually in force in the industry, as in silk; in other cases, employers have reduced their higher paid workers to raise the low paid group. Thus better paid workers where there were no unions have lost under codes, while the minimum group have made progress. Other benefits are more general. Hours are shorter, men are going back to work.

"The worker knows, however, that wage and hour scales are not permanent for wages must be adjusted upward as prices rise, hours downtime. Most important of all, both for the worker and for industry as a whole, is the provision in every code that workers may organize in trade unions. Thus machinery for collective bargaining is being set up in industry so that hours and wages may be adjusted and the balance kept between producing and consuming power."

Decline Checked in October.

The review stated that the rapid business decline was checked in October and although there was still a slight slackening the drop was only 1.4 per cent last month, as compared with 8.5 per cent in September. Adjustment for last spring's speculative boom, the federation said, seemed to be largely completed with business still close to 1931 levels and 27 per cent above March.

The review stated that the public building program was at last getting under way with building contracts for the first three weeks of October above the same weeks of the previous year for the first time since the depression began.

"According to October estimates," the report set forth, "over 1,000,000 persons were already at work from the $3,300,000,000 fund, including NRA staff members and similar groups. In the next few months, when a large volume of construction work will be released from the $2,107,000,000 already allotted, orders for materials will stimulate the heavy industries.

Sound Progress Made.

"When workers are sure of their status," the report continued, "the new buying power will come into effect. Opening of closed banks and guarantee of bank deposits will release further buying power.

"These developments mean far more for sound business progress than the spectacular rise we had last spring, but do not make nearly such good publicity. For these fundamentals will not appear in our business indicators until they have actually caused greater business activity. Expansion will come when large numbers of business men see results in increased orders and have confidence to go ahead."

Furniture Workers Call Open Meeting Saturday Morning

General Executive Board Member To Be Guest of 1882

J. L. Bradford, member of the general executive board of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, will be a guest of members of Local 1882 at a special open meeting Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. Several local labor officials will also be present.

Committee arranging for the meeting desires that all possible publicity be given the fact that all furniture and wood mill workers in the Chattanooga territory are cordially invited to attend and hear the message which Mr. Bradford will bring.

Progress of the NRA will be one of the main points to be discussed by the Brotherhood official, who has had a wide and varied experience in dealing with matters concerning the various codes in woodworking plants, and undoubtedly will have an interesting story to tell.

The committee urges all members of Local 1882 to contact furniture and woodworkers and invite them to attend the meeting, which will be held in Roosevelt Hall, Seventh and Market streets.

"Cap" Hardee Given Brand-New Title

W. L. "Cap" Hardee, well-known member of Local 415, Barbers, has a brand-new title, given him by The Labor World's linotype operators. Recently "Cap" moved his shears and razor over to the Broadway shop, and in noting the change The Labor World, through a typographical error, referred to him as "Doc." Cap protested, but the office boy insists that the old-timer is a "doctor of tonsorial art," whatever that is.

MOVIE HEAD RECEIVED MILLION IN INCOME

New York.—Adolph Zukor, president of the bankrupt Paramount-Publix corporation, received a fat income in the years when millions of persons were on the verge of starvation, a referee's hearing revealed. Zukor testified that his salary and bonuses for 1927 to 1932 amounted to $1,608,500.

Zukor said he received $858,000 in salary, $750,500 in cash bonuses, and, in addition, approximately 10,000 shares of stock.

He admitted in the examination by Samuel Zirn, attorney for a group of creditors, that he had owned approximately 100,000 shares of the company's stock in 1930, having a market valuation of about $7,000,000. Zirn sought to show negligence and incompetence of officials of the corporation.

What Next!

A 328-foot experimental section of a steel-surfaced highway has been opened to traffic in Germany. The steel surface consists of zigzag-shaped, high-edged grate rods running crosswise of the road, prepared in the factory in sections 6 meters long and 1 meter wide. The sections are solidly anchored and fastened together with bolts or by welding, and the voids are filled with macadamized tar, which insures a level surface not subject to waves or depressions as normal traffic presses the tarred gravel into the grating. The metal sections are laid on a basaltic gravel foundation, and rest on a longitudinal wide base on which they are welded or bolted.

Sales Tax Fallacy

William Randolph Hearst is a deep-seated enemy of the federal income tax and insists on substituting the sales tax for it. The income tax is levied, as its name implies, on the amount of net income received by the individual or corporation. The sales tax is levied on the price of the articles purchased—food, clothing, drugs, and all the things which go up to make a living.

The inequity of Mr. Hearst's position is clearly shown by the senate banking and currency committee's investigation of the financial affairs of Albert H. Wiggin and his three family corporations for the five-year period 1928-1933. Mr. Wiggin frankly admitted that he had resorted to practically every device possible to evade the income tax. Nevertheless for the five years he surrendered to Uncle Sam $2,288,049.15 in income taxes. His wife and daughters during the same period contributed $1,203,978.55 to the federal exchequer.

If Mr. Hearst had his way, the Wiggin family would not have paid a dollar of this tax on their incomes into the federal treasury, but would have limited their contribution to a very modest amount from a tax on the things they ate, drank, wore and otherwise used in their daily lives.

Opposition to the sales tax is fundamental with the American Federation of Labor. It opposes the sales tax "because it represents an attempt to transfer the burden of taxation from wealth and those who are able to bear it"—the Wigginses, for example—"to the masses of the people and to those who are least able to bear the burden of taxation."

But with the striking illustration of the justice of the income tax and the injustice of the sales tax exhibited by the revelations regarding the Wigginses, Mr. Hearst continues to harp about the desirability of letting the rich go practically free of taxation and piling it all on the backs of the already oppressed masses.

Propagandists against the interests of the people have frequently referred to the income tax as an attempt to "soak the rich." That cannot be said regarding the sales tax. It is openly and avowedly a movement to "soak the poor."

It is regrettable that Mr. Hearst should ally himself with those who are opposed to the welfare of the masses.

The Nerve of Wiggin

Testimony of Albert W. Wiggin, Wall Street banker and advocate of wage cutting, before a senate committee reveals as a veritable King Midas. Everything he touched turned to gold, which he was careful to hang on to with a firm grip.

Wiggin is shown to have derived fat profits from dealing in the stock of the Chase National bank, of which he was the head until this year, and to have formed private corporations to dodge or reduce income taxes on his profits. In 1929, shortly before the great stock market crash, he sensed trouble ahead and sold Chase stock short, to the great profit of himself and his associates.

All the time he was making money hand over fist by speculative activities, he was drawing down more than $200,000 yearly from the Chase bank in salary and bonuses. Apparently he let no good thing slip by. Yet this was the man who had the consummate gall to urge wage cuts for the workers of America!

Through at 40?

Announcement of the United States civil service commission that it has set an age limit of 40 for applicants for government employment has raised a storm, as well it might.

If the government is going to refuse to hire men or women over 40, except in "executive" positions, it is taking a backward step which is bound to cause all sorts of trouble. It will be the worst kind of an example for private industry, which has been justly condemned for setting age limits for employment. If workers over 40 are to be denied an opportunity to earn a living, the nation will have to give serious thought to providing old age pensions for all over 40. The cost of such a program would be staggering.

Labor points out that employment or retention of workers should be based upon competence to perform work and not on an arbitrary age limit. That is the only fair and workable test of employment.

During a time of unparalleled trade depression and great unemployment the British co-operative movement actually increased the number of workers on its payroll from 263,037 in 1931 to 265,865 at the end of 1932, an increase of nearly 3,000. When it is recalled that virtually all these workers are trade unionists in receipt of at least the recognized trade union rate, it is realized that the co-operative movement is making a practical contribution to the alleviation of a terrible problem.

The British co-operative movement started the current year with a retail membership of 6,760,432, as compared with 6,590,020 in the previous year. This means that after full allowance has been made for all withdrawals, deaths, etc., there was a net increase of 170,412 members, a percentage advance of more than 2½ per cent on the previous year.

Since 1928 co-operation has gained a net increase of a million members.

Boston, Nov. 9.—The relief of the unemployed needy makes a great social, moral and economic task which must be faced by all who desire to avert the collapse of modern society, Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, chairman of the national labor board, told a Boston audience.

The depression, Senator Wagner said, has changed the nation's attitude toward poverty and has done away with the notion of individual responsibility for poverty.

"In the first years of the depression," he said, "we continued to blame the unemployed for unemployment, and to tell them that if they wanted help, they must help themselves. Every forthright effort to satisfy contemporary needs was hampered by the persistence of political passwords and economical dogmas that were suited to the times of Queen Victoria.

"Today, however, the constant pressure of disaster has swept away the last vestige of pretty fictions, and has forced us to face realities. The volume of poverty and suffering has become so great that it indicts the system of economic life under which we have been living. No longer can the blame be placed upon the individual. The rising tide of unemployment has swept without discrimination over the strong and the weak, the willing and the shirkers, the old and the young."

San Francisco.—Tom Mooney's long fight for freedom will be carried to the United States supreme court, the Mooney defense committee announces. He will base his appeal on the contention that he has been deprived of his constitutional rights through continued imprisonment.

The acquittal last May of Mooney on an old murder indictment growing out of the Preparedness day parade bombing in 1916 is expected to be used in the new appeal.

The indictment on which Mooney was convicted after the bombing charged him with the death of Hetta Knapp, one of those killed in the explosion. He was acquitted in May on the charge of murdering another victim.

"Mooney is either guilty of all deaths or guilty of none of them," the defense committee says.

Those who desire better living and working conditions must do their share to secure them. Demand union made goods and service.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Now comes the thunder of the irreconciliables—those pompous gents who just a few months ago were pleading for anything in the world to help them out of their economic sickness. Now that they think America is on the road back they begin to strut once more.

Funny, how sick these gents were just a few weeks ago and how well they think they are today. When the devil was sick he was doggoned sick and when he began to get well—oh, well, what a devil of a monk is he!

Today the land reverberates with the righteous wrath of these erstwhile sick ones, telling all the sundry how terrible is this medicine which has saved them!

Comes now Col. McCormick, of the Chicago Tribune, which nobody ever really heralded as progressive; comes now William R. Hearst, who is for Hearst first, last and tomorrow; comes now Congressman James M. Beck, who thinks to scare us because he has been called "a great constitutional lawyer," whatever that is; comes now Al Smith, once the peerless leader but lately the loose-tongued scold—these and others, telling us how horrendous is NRA.

It's all very interesting. It's also amusing to observe the yowlings of these opponents of the medicine they sought so eagerly so recently.

And it is interesting to observe the foot tracks of the National Association of Manufacturers as they meander in and out of the scheming to put the rollers under NRA. Do they think, perchance, they are unobserved?

The bald truth seems to be that the days of clear sailing are over—the profit-takers and their spokesmen and those who can be clubbed into line are on the warpath. They think the time has come to let loose the thunderbolts of opposition.

How come that judgment can be so bad is one of those funny mysteries of life that await the answer of some future day, or the wisdom of some oracle. For it is bad judgment. The American people are for NRA because they know of nothing else to put in its place as a means of saving America from destruction.

Those who come with brickbats should hunt something better before they step forth to deal death to the one hope of the day.

But there are, as had been said before, always those who will not learn.

The whole scheme has its faults, some of them of good size.

Gen. Johnson has his faults. Some of the deputies ought to be sent home. But faults in detail are no basis for condemnation of the whole great plan.

Men are going back to work. Lives are being saved. Wages are being raised and hours are being reduced. That may mean little to Wall Streeters and their errand boys, but it means everything to workers.

It may mean nothing to a Wiggin—gosh, what a sight!—but it means everything to the workers who get jobs.

It may mean nothing to Al Smith, but it means everything to that great multitude which so recently thought Al was the candy kid.

NRA is going to live just as long as it is the nation's best bet for recovery and it would be better service if critics kept their silences just a little longer. What a time to get high horse and what a time to go sharp shooting! What a time!

Court Refuses Dismissal Of Simplex Co. Injunction

Milwaukee.—Ruling that employes of the Simplex Shoe Manufacturing company are entitled to the protection given in a temporary injunction issued to prevent violation of their rights under the labor section of the national industrial recovery act, Circuit Judge John J. Gregory denied a petition of the company for dismissal of the writ. The injunction order, which was issued by Judge Gregory, enjoins the Simplex company from interfering in any way with the right of the employes to organize. The application for the injunction was made by the Simplex employes and the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor.

The injunction is to remain in full force and effect until the trial of an action for a permanent injunction or until it is dissolved by the court.

INDUSTRIALISTS NAMED TO NRA ADVISORY BOARD

Washington.—Secretary Roper has named five leading industrialists to the NRA industrial advisory board to succeed five who have left, under the rotation plan. Pierre du Pont, E. I. du Pont de Nemours company; Clay William, Reynolds Tobacco company; Myron C. Taylor, United States Steel corporation; Gen. Robert E. Wood, Sears Roebuck, and R. E. Flanders, Springfield, Va., are the new members.

Those leaving the board are Walter C. Teagle, Standard Oil Company of New Jersey; Gerard Swope, General Electric company; James A. Moffett, Standard Oil Company of New Jersey; Austin Finch, of Thomasville, N. C., and John B. Elliott, California oil man.

Workers Given Decision In NRA Pay Contract Suit

Denver.—Two Denver cafe employes who sued for wages, basing their action on the agreement signed by Major Avondale, restaurant owner and the president of the United States, were awarded a judgment by District Judge Frank McDonough.

"Avondale's contract with the president was made for the benefit of third parties—his employes—and they are entitled to the full benefit under it," Judge McDonough ruled.

Instead of taking their cases to the local NRA compliance board, the complainants appealed to the district court on the ground they were entitled to a judgment for breach of contract.

GREEN ASSAILS SWOPE PLAN AS UNACCEPTABLE TO LABOR

Washington, Nov. 9.—In a statement on the Swope plan for a permanent business supervision and administration of the national recovery act, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, declared the plan was "unacceptable to labor."

President Green pointed out that in effect the Swope plan proposes that industry shall organize completely and exercise monopolistic power without being subject to government control. The plan stipulated, he added, that through a continued suspension of the anti-trust laws employes' organizations, operating under a minimum government supervision, may allocate production, conttol production and perhaps even fix prices.

"Labor insists now, as it did when the national recovery act was considered by congress, that if machinery of this kind is to function it must be under government supervision and with the government as a full partner with industry and labor," Green said.

"The people of the United States cannot delegate such broad powers to the same management which failed under the old deal to relieve unemployment and restore purchasing power.

"Labor does not seem to be considered in the Swope plan except by implication where it provides that the president may appoint representatives on the board of governors. Nowhere else in the plan is labor representation provided for and for this special reason labor cannot give its approval."

National Labor Board Ends Art Metal Workers' Strike

Washington.—The national labor board has settled the strike at the plant of the Art Metal Construction company, Jamestown, N. Y., where workers have been out since June 9.

The dispute was turned over to the board on Sept. 13. Mediation was unsuccessful, the chief obstacle to settlement being the inability of the employers and workers to agree upon the method of reinstating the striking employes.

Got Over Weak, Painful Condition By Taking Cardui

"I was weak and run-down and suffered quite a bit with pains in my side," writes Mrs. Nick Barranco, of Beaumont, Texas. "I was nervous. I did not rest well at night, and my appetite was poor.

"My mother had used Cardui with beneficial result, so I decided to take it. I surely am glad I did, for it stopped the pain in my side and built up my general health. I took seven bottles in all."

Cardui is sold at all drug stores.

ROCKEFELLER CONCERN WORKERS VOTE DEATH OF COMPANY UNION

Employes Favor United Mine Workers and Colorado Fuel and Iron Company Will Abandon Fake Union Plan Established by Young J. D. Following "Ludlow Massacre."

Denver, Colo., Nov. 9.—The Colorado Iron and Fuel company, long an enemy of trade unionism, will soon abandon its "company union" and recognize the United Mine Workers of America.

Union officials made the announcement here and it was confirmed by company officials. As the company is now in receivership, the action is subject to the approval of the United States district court.

Decision to abandon the "company union" followed a poll of workers at the six company mines operating in Colorado. Miners voted 877 to 273 against the "company union" and in favor of the United Mine Workers. The company had agreed to abide by the result of the poll.

The Colorado Iron and Fuel company is a Rockefeller concern and the "company union" was established after the "Ludlow massacre" and the serios labor troubles of about twenty years ago. It was known as the "Rockefeller working plan" and was advanced by John D. Rockefeller as a solution of the problems of labor and capital.

Although the United Mine Workers have had members in the company's mines, the union has not been recognized ifi employer-employe negotiations to set up a wage scale.

Employes have been seeking an increase of the $4.44 basic daily wage scale in Colorado and northern New Mexico coal mines. Some difference arose as to the right of the United Mine Workers to negotiate the wage scale for company employes. As a result, the poll was agreed upon.

LEWIS NOT SURPRISED.

Washington, Nov. 9.—Informed of the vote of the employes of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company in favor of the United Mine Workers, John L. Lewis, of the union, declared that the action of the company's workers did not surprise him, as he had said for years that a secret ballot would show them for the union rather than the Rockefeller "employe representation plan."

"The company union is dead and now goes into history," was the comment made in the telegram of transmittal by Frank Hafferly, Colorado representative of the union, in his message to President Lewis.

The "employe representation plan" in the mines of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company is the pioneer company union in the United States, having been established some twenty years ago by the former Canadian premier, MacKenzie King, after a visit to Colorado at the suggestion of John D. Rockefeller, Jr. It was set up after the "Ludlow massacre" in which state militia and deputy sheriffs attacked a tent colony of strikers and their families at Ludlow and killed nearly a score of men, women and children.

Printers' Head Charges Some Newspapers Are Violating NRA

White Plains, N. Y.—President Charles P. Howard, of the International Typographical union, told the Empire State Typographical conference here that some newspapers which are members of the American Newspaper Publishers' association are not living up to either the letter or the spirit of the NRA.

Some publishers, he said, are refusing to adjust their schedules of pay and hours to conform to NRA codes or proposed codes, apparently feeling that they are entitled to special privileges. They are holding to the outworn theory, he said, that long hours and small pay for their employes bring prosperity.

PUERTO RICAN WORKERS PROGRESSING, AFL SAYS

Much dissatisfaction with the progress made by the workers of Puerto Rico, in organization and social and labor legislation, was expressed by the 1933 convention of the American Federation of Labor. "The development of the people of Puerto Rico as reflected in the recent legislation passed speaks well for the people of that island," the convention added.

The convention praised Gov. Gore, of Puerto Rico, saying:

"The new governor, Hon. Robert H. Gore, who was installed on July 1, has enlisted the sympathy and good will of the citizens of the island and especially those in the organized labor movement.

"His inaugural address contained many promises of assistance for the mass of people in the form of new legislation. It is to be hoped that he will speedily place his proposals before the insular legislature and give sympathetic consideration to the problems of labor and carry out the promises made in his inaugural address."

Indorsement given the Federation Bank and Trust company, New York City, by the New York State Federation of Labor convention, held at Syracuse in August, 1933, was approved by the American Federation of Labor, which urged that united support be given the bank. The convention pointed out that the bank, which is a labor institution, was one of the first to reopen on an unrestricted basis after the banking holiday of March 6 to 13.

Edgewater, N. J., Nov. 9.—Recognition of the right of collective bargaining was given by the Ford Motor company in replying to demands of 1,500 strikers at the Edgewater assembly plant. The company refused to commit itself definitely to the establishment of minimum wage scales.

The reply was received by Neil S. Brown, plant superintendent, who forwarded the demands to the company's headquarters at Detroit after a conference with strikers and NRA officials.

The company stated it hoped to be able not only to meet the demands for a $5 minimum daily wage "if conditions permit," but to restore the minimum of $7 which prevailed before 1932.

The strikers' demands for a 35-hour week is implicitly denied with the company's statement that "if the law prohibits men from working more than 35 hours a week, wages for 35 hours will be paid.

"When the law permits men to work 40 hours a week," the reply states, "wages for 40 hours will be paid and the company will maintain as far as business conditions permit its five-day week of eight hours a day."

Referring to the men's demand for the right of collective bargaining, the company's statement says:

"Recognition of collective bargaining through representatives of the workers' 'own choosing' is already required by the national industrial recovery act."

The company promised there would be "no discrimination made in the case of any applicant for employment because of affiliation or non-affiliation with labor unions, but every applicant will be considered strictly on the basis of his individual merit."

BRITISH LABORITES GAIN IN MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

London.—Preliminary returns from the principal elections in England and Wales showed substantial gains for the labor party. In 180 towns the laborites gained 108 seats and lost seven. Seventy-four of the largest towns reported 113 laborite gains and only two laborite losses. The labor party gained control of Barnsley, Wallsend, Sheffield, Swansea and other towns.

MORE ABOUT UNION BREAD

cal Union, No. 89, a letter from you was read, recalling instances where you have favored certain unions in Chattanooga, particularly in the erection of your plant.

I was instructed to say to you that we are very glad to be reminded of this, but what we are particularly interested in at this time is your attitude toward the newly-formed Bakers' union. Our delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, our parent body, had heretofore informed us that, although employes of your company were first to insist on forming a union, several paying their initiation fee, for some unexplained reason none of them came to a second meeting. It is our information, further, that other local bakeries are well organized, and that the new union is functioning nicely.

Like thousands of other working people in this territory, we like to eat bread baked by union bakers, and would be pleased to have our delegates report to next meeting that your plant, along with other bakeries, has been organized, in order that we may recommend your products to our members and others.

Trusting we may have this pleasure at an early date.

Yours very truly,
J. MARTIN PEYER,
President.

Hearst, Now Fighting NRA, Once Bitterly Denounced by Gompers

Great Labor Leader Flayed Newspaper Publisher as Enemy of America, John Fitzpatrick Recalls in Telling Experiences With Newest Recruit to Ranks of NRA's Foes.

By JOSEPH A. WISE

Chicago, Nov. 9.—William Randolph Hearst, who owns both a morning and an evening daily newspaper in Chicago, has turned a complete flipflop and is now fighting the national recovery administration, instead of supporting it, as he did until recently. He has crawled into bed with Robert R. McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Daily Tribune, whom heretofore Hearst has pretended to oppose.

In signed editorials appearing on the front page of his Chicago Herald and Examiner, Hearst has parroted the utterances of McCormick on the "freedom of the press" and has attacked NIRA on other points.

Hearst has been on both sides of practically every issue that has confronted the people of Illinois ever since he invaded the Chicago newspaper field more than three decades ago. Operating through his political lieutenants here, he has double-crossed every man who has trusted him and has endeavored to ruin those who would not bend to his will.

Hearst's present activities recall to John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, some of his experiences with the Hearst publications. Fitzpatrick declined to attend the thirtieth anniversary celebration of Hearst's entry into the Chicago newspaper field on the ground that he could not do so consistently in view of the fact that Samuel Gompers had denounced Hearst as a "traitor to America" at the Denver convention of the A. F. of L. in 1921.

Previous to the Denver convention Hearst conducted a nationwide fight to oust Samuel Gompers from the presidency of the A. F. of L. Hearst was seeking revenge upon Gompers because Gompers had declined to assist in promoting Hearst's ambition to become president of the United States, and had opposed Hearst's attempt to involve the United States in a war with Mexico.

Previous to the Denver convention the Hearst papers at Chicago carried a story to the effect that the Chicago Federation of Labor had passed a resolution demanding the retirement of Gompers. This story was wired to the other Hearst papers throughout the country and to other papers using the Hearst wire service.

Story Branded as Lie.

President Fitzpatrick wrote a letter to Gompers in which he said that the story was wholly untrue and that no such resolution had been introduced or passed. Fitzpatrick also told Gompers that Hearst had detailed some of his men to search Chicago for a trade unionist who would be willing to say something uncomplimentary of the head of the A. F. of L., but that no one could be found to do so.

The Fitzpatrick letter was made the basis of a resolution introduced at the Denver convention by John P. Frey and B. A. Larger. The resolution severely censured Hearst and was passed unanimously without President Gompers saying a word to further its passage.

Later in the convention Gompers took the floor and paid his respects to Hearst, giving him an unmerciful lacing. Gompers said, in part:

"In every way this traitor to America, this traitor to humanity, this man whose name is not fito to express with whatever men hold as honorable and moral, has sought to discredit me. * * *

"Here is a man, wholly unworthy of respect or confidence, either as an American or as a humane man, this man with his newspapers in many parts of our country, from Massachusetts to California, with his millions for his newspaper enterprises, transmitting the manufactured news to all the other newspapers which find it either cheap or convenient to use that concern, with a circulation of these combined newspapers alone of about 8,000,000 copies a day, in a drive daily, twice a day, to besmirch the character of a man who has tried to do his full duty to his fellows and to his country. * * *

"In the war he (Hearst) was the lickspittle for the kaiser. In the war he was in constant communication with the kaiser's ambassador, Bernstorff. In the war he was engaged with Bola Pasha, with Captain Boy-Ed, with the whole gang of them.

"And now let me say there are two main reasons why Hearst does not like me, and I will tell you what they are. First, in his rattle brain there germinated an inspiration to be president of the United States, and both in conference with him and with his man, his main representative, Ihmsen, he tried to chain me to his mad chariot for the presidency, and, to speak the language of the street, 'I could not see him,' and I frankly told him so. * * *

"HARD BOILED" MILL OWNERS ARE RAPPED

News Service Broadcasts Local Situation.

HARVEY WILSON GIVEN PUBLICITY

Attitude of Tennessee Sock Mill Barons Gets Nation-Wide Notice.

The "fame" of J. Harvey Wilson, spokesman for the Richmond Hosiery Mills and apparently guiding genius for a group of affiliated textile manufacturers determined upon crushing the fair-wage aspirations of workers and destroying the purposes of the NRA, is spreading, judging from an article sent out this week by the International Labor News Service to its 250 labor paper subscribers.

Arrogance of Wilson and his associates is noted, and a review of local conditions which makes some decidedly unfavorable publicity for Chattanooga goes into detail in describing the machinations of the "powerful ring of labor-haters."

Below is what will be offered this week-end for the edification of the readers of 250 labor publications throughout the United States:

A chain of Tennessee hosiery mill executives are shouting defiance against the NRA on one hand, and seeking to crush the workers on the other.

Their dictatorial attitude has already broken out in trouble at the Harriman Hosiery mill, where 600 seamless workers have been striking for several weeks in protest against summary dismissals of workers for union activity.

Now, J Harvey Wilson, reputed to be connected with the Harriman management, and official of the Richmond Hosiery plant as well as a string of other mills, as spokesman for the powerful ring of labor haters, declared the "NRA is unconstitutional."

More than that, he swore that he would not "go along" with the NRA unless he is forced. And he will never recognize representatives of the workers, he said. Workers, he scorned, should take orders and pay cuts "like soldiers in an army—without question."

His defiance of the NRA came out when a committee of his discharged union employes came to his Richmond mill at Rossville, Ga., near Chattanooga. He swore he wouldn't recognize a union in his mill even thought an election is held under government supervision and his employes vote for it.

Wilson's antipathy for workers' organizations, he admitted, arose from the fact that he could not cut wages if his plants were organized. He must cut wages, he announced, to compete with other mills.

"Prosperity will not return," he told the committee, "until everything is lower—especially wages."

Meantime, another member of his ring of Bourbons, the Harriman mill management, defied a representative of the national labor board who tried to iron out the strike trouble.

The mediator proposed that the strikers return to work while an impartial board reviewed cases of the discharged union members. The management refused, and Fred G. Held, representative of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, has turned the case over to the regional mediation board of the NRA at Atlanta, Ga., for settlement.

The low-wagers' idea of properly lowered wages was revealed when one of Wilson's workers brought T. R. Cuthbert, organizer here for the United Textile Workers, a pay check of 56 cents, a week's pay for sixty hours' work before the NRA program went into effect. She is not getting much more now.

BUILDERS BALK AT ACCEPTANCE PROPOSED CODE

Construction League's Proposals Denounced.

MAKE APPEAL TO LABOR SECRETARY

Washington Conference Brings Statement "Whole Thing Is an Outrage."

Washington, Nov. 19.—Militant and uncompromising opposition to the building industry code proposed by the Construction league was voiced here by building trades unions at a conference with Secretary of Labor Perkins.

Headed by M. J. McDonough, president of the Building Trades Department, American Federation of Labor, representatives of all international unions in the construction industry told Secretary Perkins that the proposed code was totally unacceptable to the organized building workers. Particular exception was taken to provisions in the code which eliminate labor representation and which seek to lower wages under the guise of establishing a minimum wage for unskilled labor, which is only a very small proportion of building trades labor.

Following the conference, President McDonough, speaking for the labor representatives who attended, said:

"We regard the proposed Construction league code as an outrage. We laid before Secretary Perkins our detailed objections and we have reason to believe that she is by no means unsympathetic with our view. Our case does not rest upon opinion; it rests upon facts and the Construction league has done nothing to alter the facts.

Seeks to Eliminate Labor's Voice.

"The Construction league talks much about a unified industry. It talks about 'integrating the industry' as a means of eliminating the abuses that have grown up in it. That is a camouflage statement. If the Construction league would content itself with eliminating the abuses, labor would stand with it 100 per cent. But the Construction league is merely eliminating some abuses and under cover of a pious plea is seeking to eliminate labor, as far as rights and voice are concerned.

"It is surely no part of a program for elimination of abuse to provide for a 48-hour week, and yet that is what the Construction league code does. Eliminating all voice for labor and even going so far as to leave it in the hands of the code authority to determine what is a union is surely no part of a program for elimination of abuses in the industry. The fact is that the Construction league is seeking to eliminate all democracy, all fairness and all justice from the proposed code, and labor will not agree to that. We have said we will go to the court of last resort and we shall do that if we are compelled to. That is the president of the United States. Fortunately, the president understands the construction business and we have every reason to expect that he will deal fairly with us.

Cannot Agree to Code.

"The Construction league would deny us all voice and we cannot agree to that, of course. Industrial democracy cannot be created with a one-sided franchise. Industrial self-government cannot be made to mean government by those who have misgoverned in the past. The Construction league has the effrontery to ask that all authority be left in the hands of those who have allowed abuses to grow to the danger point.

"If the Construction league were not determined to use NRA to crush labor, if it were inclined at all toward fairness, there could be a meeting of minds. But the league has taken a position so extreme, so unfair, so hostile to all democratic ideals that I do not see how it can back down far enough to permit a meeting of minds.

"We will meet on any ground of reason and fairness, but we will not be either coaxed or driven into agreement upon a program that means destruction of all rights, of wage and working standards and even of our own right to say when we have a union and of what a union shall consist.

"As for wage rates, the Construction league remains fixed in its determination to inflict an unskilled rate upon an industry that has 86 per cent of skilled workers. This industry lives upon skill and it cannot live without it. The whole thing is preposterous and an outrage. It flies in the face of all that NRA stands for. It is intolerable and that will be our position and our point of view until the preposterous and intolerable provisions are removed.

"Harmony that is bought at the price of surrendering every principle of freedom and human decency is not harmony at all. It is slavery, and NRA is not among us to impose slavery. If it is, the sooner we find it out the better."

HOPKINS ORDERS CLOTHING GIVEN TO THE UNEMPLOYED

Washington.—Orders were issued to all state relief organizations and the emergency relief organization of the District of Columbia by Harry L. Hopkins, federal relief administrator, to provide clothing with federal relief funds for all persons in need.

In a telegram, Hopkins advised the relief organizations it is necessary at this time, with cold weather coming on, that all needy persons be provided with winter clothing, blankets and bedding immediately.

He ordered the relief organizations to spend federal relief funds to discharge this duty.

Ice Wagon Drivers Are Latest Victims Non-Union Policy

Affidavit Declares Worker Was Warned If He Joined Union He Would Be "Fired"—Corporation Had Previously Been Forced to Pay Back Wages to Comply With Code—Work on Plant for Bottling of Lions Pilsener Beer Continues With Non-Union Labor—Brewery Workers Also "Out of Luck."

Contempt for the National Recovery Act, as well as determination to prevent collective action by employes, was indicated again during the past week by officials of the Atlantic Ice and Coal corporation and the Southeastern Brewing company, according to statements and an affidavit filed by former employes, who declared they had been discharged for attempting to form an organization of ice-wagon drivers among workers employed by the Chattanooga Ice Delivery company, also a subsidiary of the Atlantic chain.

Latest story is that on Thursday of last week a group of some twenty of these drivers visited labor headquarters and appealed for assistance in forming an organization to deal as a unit with the chain corporation. They were advised to appear at Roosevelt hall, Central Labor headquarters, at a later date, and an investigation which followed failure of the workers to appear led to statements that upon the occasion of the first visit a "stool-pigeon" of the corporation had followed the group and reported their activities. Then, according to the statement of leaders, backed up by affidavit, the "ringleaders" were singled out and discharged. An affiant is declared to have deposed that he personally was warned that if he joined a union he would be "fired."

Experience of the ice drivers recalls that the same concern has given trouble prior to this time with respect to observing the code, the local compliance board having been forced to compel payment of back wages to workers engaged in erection of a brewery for the Southeastern company, a subsidiary of the Atlantic corporation.

It is further recalled that, when the Southeastern concern announced plans for the erection of a brewery, for the bottling and distribution of Lions Pilsener beer, futile efforts were made by local working men to have organized labor employed on the work. Covering a period of several weeks, representatives of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council and of the building trades attempted to prevail upon officials of the corporation to give consideration to the claims of union workers to preference. These committees reported they were "stalled" from time to time until the work was well under way by non-union workers.

A reported development of a few weeks ago was the discharge of members of the United Brewery and Soft Drink Workers' union, and at a special called meeting of that organization last week the Atlantic Ice and Coal corporation and the Southeastern Brewing company were declared "unfair to organized labor." Central Body had previously taken similar action, and the parent brewing company in New York City was notified of the situation. Activities were temporarily halted during the latter part of last week at the request of interested parties, in the hope that an adjustment of the whole matter could be made. Nothing, however, developed from this effort, and the campaign of publicity regarding the attitude of the corporation will be carried out as originally planned.

The local public was notified of the situation this week through display ads in the daily papers, stating the Atlantic Ice and Coal corporation and its subsidiary, the Southeastern Brewing company, had been declared "unfair to organized labor" by the brewery workers' local union and Central Body.

Trades unionists in all localities where the Atlantic company and its subsidiaries operate, it is announced, will be notified of the company's attitude.

Report McDonald Seeks Realignment Various Activities

Impending Sale of Printing Plant, Throw-Sheet, Retail Stores Rumored.

Impending "sale" of the throw-sheet operated by Roy McDonald as an advertising sheet for his so-called "Home Stores" is reported this week, rumors having it that an out-of-town firm has been dickering for the plant for some time, with prospects it may be operated as a "shopping news" or moved to another city. Another rumor which is more or less widespread is that McDonald will sell (actually sell) his retail grocery chain and confine his activities to wholesaling and jobbing, presumably including groceries, his bakery, dairy, tire and other lines. It is believed, however, that in case the report proves true, McDonald will also give up the sale of patent medicines, probably disposing of the rights of this article along with his retail groceries.

Passing of McDonald's throw-sheet, along with his commercial printing establishment, has been expected for weeks—in fact, ever since he established the venture, employing an out-of-town man as operator, and scorning the claims of local working men to employment.

Contracting for a comic sheet, with several syndicated "features," McDonald entered the local publication field with the avowed aspiration of later launching a daily. Securing paid advertising, however, proved an impossible task in all the circumstances, and the throw-sheet has been published with practically no revenue, filled with advertisements of the "Home Stores" and affiliated businesses.

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

Indorse Burkes For Job at Postoffice

On request originating in Local 226, Painters, Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, at the regular meeting Monday night, indorsed the application of Rupert Burkes, a member of Local 226, for a position at the local postoffice. Mr. Burkes has been active in the work of the Painters' union for several years, and his application is said to have received unanimous indorsement of his fellow unionists for the position.

TEACHERS' PAY FAR UNDER CODE SAYS OFFICIAL

Commissioner Declares 40,000 Get Less Than $450.

100,000 CHILDREN DENIED SCHOOLING

Washington, Nov. 19.—Approximately 200,000 public school teachers are unemployed, thousands of teachers are receiving salaries much lower than the minimum code wages provided for factory workers and 2,228,000 children of school age are not in classrooms, George F. Zook, United States commissioner of education, revealed in a secret report on school conditions.

One-half the rural school teachers of the United States will receive less than $750 for their services this year, the report said. More than 40,000 will receive less than $450.

Commissioner Zook estimated that in city schools 18,600 fewer teachers are employed than in 1931, despite increases in school enrollment.

"If we decided to operate city schools today with the same number of pupils to a teacher that we had in 1930, it would be necessary to hire more than 26,000 additional teachers," Zook said. "If we decided to provide education for the 2,280,000 children 6 to 15 years of age not now in school, it would be necessary to add 76,000 teachers.

Teachers Idle; Classes Grow.

"School enrollment has increased more than a million since 1930—but the number of teachers, city and rural, decreased more than 30,000. Teachers are unemployed, but classes grow large. Teachers are unemployed despite the fact that more than 1,500,000 children will this year be taught six months or less."

Commissioner Zook reported that nearly 2,000 rural schools in twenty-four states did not open this fall. Many private and parochial schools are closing, twenty-four Catholic schools have closed, affecting nearly 3,000 children; sixteen institutions of higher education have been discontinued since last year and estimates indicate 1,500 commercial schools and colleges have been closed.

"This year more than any time in our recent history the quality, yes, even the existence, of schools in many communities is at stake," Zook said. "We find ourselves in the grip of a social difficulty from which we can extricate ourselves only with great effort and pain."

He pointed out that 1,659,000 children from 6 to 15 years are not in school; 100,000 children are barred from educational opportunity because of closing of schools due to lack of funds, and 521,700 children 14 or 15 years old are without schooling.

School Terms Shortened.

In some communities, he said, free public schools have of necessity become tuition schools, admitting only those children whose parents can pay.

Also he pointed out that because of lack of available funds one out of every four cities in the United States have shortened the school term and 715 rural schools are expected to run less than three months.

He said that in Virginia the educational organization faces a crisis with the prospect that many terms in public schools will be shortened unless preventive measures are taken.

In Michigan, he said, 90 per cent of the schools will shorten hours; in Nebraska at least one month will be cut from the terms of 15 schools, and in Missouri 100 high schools and 1,500 rural schools face early closing due to lack of funds.

Teachers' Warrants Unpaid.

Comparing school terms in the United States with those of other countries, Zook showed the average term is 172 days in the United States, compared with France, 200 days; Sweden, 210 days; Germany, 246 days; England, 210 days, and Denmark, 246 days.

HERE'S A PLAN FOR CITY DADS TO LOWER TAXES

Town of Dickson Becomes "Employment Agent."

WOULD SELL JOBS FOR 6% RAKEOFF

"Beneficiaries" Also Required to Sign Pledge of Co-operation.

A brand-new source of revenue for bolstering municipal finances during depressions has been discovered and placed into effect by the town of Dickson, Tenn., a thriving community near Nashville.

According to a document sent The Labor World, purporting to be a sort of contract of employment, the resourceful city government has evolved a scheme to find jobs for certain of its unemployed, in return for which the "lucky" citizen agrees to "pay to the said town of Dickson, Tenn., six per cent of my weekly salary or wage, to be paid as directed by the aforesaid town." There being no limit on the time for which said six per cent is to be paid, it is assumed the "beneficiary" will be required to remit his or her ante "from now on."

In further appreciation of the philanthropy practiced by the Dickson government, the prospective job holder further covenants to "aid the town of Dickson, and the merchants of said town," by supporting "all of its commercial interests."

The alleged contract reveals that the town of Dickson has erected or will erect a "garment factory," which supposedly the whole citizenship will pay for in taxes, but it appears that those unemployed who are fortunate enough to be favored by their elected officials in selection of the operating forces will be taxed an extra 6 per cent.

Exact nature of the new business, how many employes will be used and other information was not available. However, the "contract" as supplied The Labor World is given below for the contemplation of local unemployed and the edification of the citizenship generally:

APPLICATION FOR EMPLOYMENT

Harriman's Brainstorm

Henry I. Harriman, president of the Chamber of Commeree of the United States, one of the organizations which strenuously opposes that section of the national recovery act which guarantees the right of the workers to organize in bona fide trade unions without interference from employers, is reported in the press as having told the Cincinnati, Ohio, Chamber of Commerce that in his judgment the recovery act bars union shop agreements.

Reactionary and subversive antiunion employers of the Harriman type, whose well-known policy is to use the so-called law of supply and demand to beat down wages and lengthen hours, know that trade unions with union shop agreements resulting from collective bargaining are the only real protection working men and women have against the subversive labor policies of industrial dictators. They would like to see trade unions outlawed by law in the United States as Hitler has outlawed them by decree in Germany.

Of course there is not a paragraph or sentence in the national recovery act that prohibits union shop agreements. In fact it is likely that those who phrased the labor section were animated by the desire to encourage collective bargaining and thus enable the workers to participate by bona fide unions in determining their wages and hours under the fair practices codes set up under the recovery act.

As William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, told the 1933 convention of that organization: "The right to enter into an agreement providing for a closed union shop has been conceded and recognized by the courts in all their decisions."

That right is not vitiated in the slightest degree by the national recovery act, nor by any responsible interpreter of its constructive provisions.

Work, Not Charity, at Last

Labor's oft reiterated demand for work for the unemployed, not charity, is at last put into effect in the federal government's plan for taking 4,000,000 men from relief rolls this winter and giving them employment on a nation-wide civil works program.

The latest government move is a long step forward in civilized and intelligent handling of the relief problem. It is a big contribution to the maintenance of national morale. Nothing is so demoralizing as charity. It saps initiative and self-respect and can only be justified if there is no other possible way to give help. Fortunately, the administration has found a way to remove men from charity lists and give them the work which they have long desired and sought in vain.

One of the best features of the plan is that it will end supervision of millions by relief organizations. It is emphasized that the administration is determined that American citizens shall no longer be compelled to live under the auspices of charitable agencies. "That means," Federal Relief Administrator Hopkins said, "that investigations will stop and we need no longer pry into the personal and private lives of these people."

The plan is indeed a "fundamental change" in the federal program to deal with the depression, as President Roosevelt said, with safeguards to prevent it from being used in any way to depress wage and working standards, it should prove of immeasurable benefit to the nation.

Congratulations, Mayor LaGuardia!

The American Federation of Labor congratulates former Representative Fiorello H. LaGuardia on his election to the office of mayor of New York City.

Mr. LaGuardia was unjustly defeated for congress last year by the democratic landslide which engulfed the country. His record in the interests of the working men and women of the United States warranted his re-election.

In a statement regarding that record, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, said:

> No member of congress has served labor more faithfully and devotedly than Congressman LaGuardia.
> His record is 100 per cent favorable to labor.
> He was the joint author of the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction bill which was enacted into law at the last session of congress.
> As a recognized leader in the congress of the United States, he exercised tremendous influence in behalf of labor measures approved and supported by labor and in opposition to legislation which labor strenuously opposed.
> I regard Congressman LaGuardia as an outstanding champion of labor's rights and of labor's legislative program in the congress of the United States.
> He deserves the support of labor.

Mr. LaGuardia's election by an overwhelming majority to the position of chief executive of New York City is a deserved although belated vindication of the voters' faith in the sterling qualities which he manifested in the congress of the United States as the genuine representative of the people.

Organized labor congratulates you, Mayor LaGuardia, with the absolute knowledge that in every one of your administrative acts justice for those who toil will be uppermost in your mind.

Age Limit for Federal Employes

The decision of the United States civil service commission to reverse its decision barring stenographers and typists over 40 years of age from government employment by refusing them permission to be examined for those occupations and raising the limit to 53 years was inevitable.

The justifiable wave of protest that went up against such a reactionary position was overwhelming.

The American Federation of Labor has persistently opposed the victimization of older workers by either private employers or the government. The 1933 convention of the federation did not mince words on this question. It said:

> There is no more tragic picture than that of a competent, able and well man or woman barred from employment for no other reason than that they have reached the age of 45 years, and in many cases only 35 years.

Older workers must live. Unless they are given an opportunity to earn a living, they must become a charge upon society. Places must be provided for them in both government employment and private industry.

The order of the civil service commission placing a ban on stenographers and typists over 40 years old was distinctly antisocial and reactionary. The reversal of the order was absolutely necessary not only in the interest of justice to the older workers but also to restore in part the confidence which the people lost in the commission by reason of its proposed victimization.

Donald Richberg Says:

"The right of labor organization which is written into the recovery act is a simple statement of a principle of self-government which is everlastingly right and is the foundation principle upon which was written the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States."

TRADE UNION EMBLEMS AND THE BLUE EAGLE

By JOHN J. MANNING
Secretary-Treasurer, Union Label Trades Department, A. F. of L.

The delegate to the twenty-sixth convention of the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor made the following important declaration of policy:

"The government's campaign to secure support for concerns displaying the Blue Eagle has vindicated the policy of this department in conducting campaigns pleading for purchase of articles bearing the union label and patronage of concerns displaying the union shop card and union buttons. The purpose of the president's re-employment agreement of which the Blue Eagle is a part, was to raise wages and reduce the hours of labor. In this respect, its purpose was not adverse to the purpose of the union label. However, violations of the terms of the president's agreement have, in a large measure, defeated its purpose, and use of the Blue Eagle cannot be accepted as evidence that commodities bearing the NRA emblem were produced under fair conditions or that concerns displaying the Blue Eagle are complying with the terms of the president's re-employment agreement.

"We urge that the Blue Eagle in no way should be accepted as a substitute for the union label. Concerns displaying both the Blue Eagle and union shop card should receive our support and we should exercise the same care in demanding that commodities and articles purchased should bear both the union label and the NRA emblem.

"In the creation of the Blue Eagle, it was the purpose of the national recovery administration to provide a method by which could be indicated employers and merchants who are co-operating in the national recovery program in granting higher wages and shorter hours. The labels, shop cards and buttons of trade unions have been used for the same purpose for fifty years. If we advocate the patronage of our trademarks, and use the Blue Eagle as an example, we feel certain that this will do more to make our own members, as well as the general public, union-label conscious than anything else that has ever been presented to the American public."

By consistent adherence to this policy, trade unionists can aid materially in advancing the cause of union emblems and, at the same time, give whole-hearted support to employers who are honestly supporting the provisions of the national recovery act.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

In this world there are ponderables and imponderables—things you can put your hand on and things you can't grasp—things that stay put and things that keep a jump ahead, like a mirage in the desert—a beautiful lake that seems to be there, but isn't.

Try to figure out things today! Try it—try it Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, come back to it Thursday, keep at it Friday and Saturday and have a go at it on Sunday.

There are the ponderables, for, let us say, six days in the week and the imponderables for Sunday. Work it any way you like.

You'll be stumped, puzzled and goofy anyway.

There is the palpable and the impalpable, also.

And the reasonable, clear things and the dippy, crazy, idiotic and puzzling things.

There are the men who talk straight out, in words that go together like sound boards well joined, or like bricks laid up in a wall by a good bricklayer, with good bonding—no jerry builder work. And there are the men who talk in words that don't belong together in straight talk—words that pull the insides out of each other and make good pickings for lawyers and quibblers.

Today you hear both kinds talked.

Take Gerard Swope's scheme for a super-NRA, built on NRA's ruins, for a great combination of industry, pushing labor aside, pushing government out of the picture as far as possible. Read it and you know you've got to watch your step. You know there's something at the bottom of that.

Read a statement by William Green and you know right away and without any fussing just what William Green means. You know it's all there in words that belong together, without anything at the bottom of it that doesn't show also at the top and all through.

Read the pronouncement of the National Association of Manufacturers, describing its new organization to "help" NRA and you know right away ther's probably a wolf under that false hide. You say, "easy, brother, be careful."

When men think they're bucking the tide of common opinion and when they want to gain an objective hostile to common opinion, they get that way—they go in wide circles, to come up in the rear with a stick, knife or a pickaxe. In two thousand years the ways of the 'round-abouters hasn't changed much.

Read Col. McCormick's tirade about free speech and from the way he puts his words together you know he's dealing from two decks, trying to convey two ideas to two kinds of people.

With these ways on every hand, it's a good time, in a way of speaking, to keep where you can get your back to a wall and not walk close to the entrances of dark alleys. In listening to men talking, stick to those who put words together soundly and honestly, so that they don't smear up with double meanings. Too many sentences are like the lake that looks to be there, but isn't.

Jobless Miners Begin Work At Farm Factory Settlement

Washington. — The government's $25,000,000 experiment in providing a means of livelihood for displaced coal miners is under way, with twenty-five unemployed miners the first homesteaders in the project near Reedsville, W. Va.

The miners are digging foundations for model homes for their families, who will follow them to take up a new mode of living. Ultimately 200 families will participate in the farm-factory plan under which the former coal diggers will raise food for their families while working part time in plants manufacturing supplies for the postoffice department.

It is expected that the first [illegible] families will be settled in their [illegible] homes by June 1. The houses in the settlement will be attractive dwellings, with electric lights and other modern conveniences.

★ Because it has the things a woman wants — and here's another letter to prove it . . .

"Until you have an electric range, it is really hard for any woman to understand what a complete improvement it is over any other stove.

"We purchased our electric range during the Power Company's sale. In the first place we have found it to be A BETTER WAY TO COOK. All foods seem to hold more of the nourishing juices and natural flavors . . . AND OH, HOW CLEAN! There just isn't any way to compare our spotless white electric range with any other stove.

"Last, I want to say that we have found the cost of cooking with an electric stove entirely reasonable. I believe every woman would be equally pleased with the cost, and thrilled over all the other features of an electric range."

As They Develop Capacity for Effective Co-operation, They Are Not So Easily Led Into Action That Gets Nowhere.

By THE SENATOR

The sporadic disturbances taking place along the lines of the "farmers strike" show the familiar pattern of what takes place among the disorganized and discontented industrial workers.

In strong contrast there stands out the expression of the head of the federal farm bureau, the organization close to the great co-operative farm movement, which has been encouraged by the expenditure of about half a billion dollars during the last four or five years. The great wholesale farm marketing co-operatives and their families are in a position to know by experience the advantages and benefits of organization and co-operative action. They are doubtless feeling the pinch of the markets, but it is doubtful if they are feeling it so keenly as those who have not been sharing directly the benefits of the operations of the great co-operative farm organizations.

Moreover, the co-operatives and their members have a much clearer view of the facts of governmental action in their behalf; and they have been having the advantages also of an educational process of action and of thinking along the lines of the handling of their products. They are becoming conscious of the power—the real and constructive power—that is in the hands of those who develop the capacity for united and co-operating activities. As a result, they are not so easily led into disconnected, destructive actions having only a temporary effect.

It is worth noting that the political value of the farm strikers was not given a very high rating by President Roosevelt. Even when represented by the governors of five agricultural states, their combined weight was not sufficient to change the policy of the president.

One cannot help wondering, to what extent these strike manifestations may be the result of clever public propaganda and under-cover manipulations of the communist organizers, who are known to be very active in the whole middle west, and whose known plans cover just such situations.

Washington, Nov. 19.—Secretary of the Interior Ickes, as administrator of public works, has asked the governors of ten states to speed up their road-building programs under the federal-aid plan and to absorb more of the unemployed.

The request was sent to the governors of Maryland, Kansas, Indiana, Colorado, Michigan, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Illinois and Georgia.

The public works administration reported that Maryland has awarded contracts for only 23.4 per cent of the potential road work, with the other states ranging down to Georgia, which has awarded no contracts.

In contrast with these states, the public works administration reported that five states have awarded contracts covering more than half of their federal highway aid allotments.

These states are New York, with 67.2 per cent of its allotment already contracted; Maine, with 66.2 per cent; Nebraska, 52.5 per cent; Iowa, 52.3 per cent, and Montana, 50.3 per cent. The average for all states is given as 31.6 per cent, with contracts totaling $124,732,000. On November 7, 103,455 men were reported employed directly on federal-aid highway projects in every state except Georgia.

Tips Held Part Of Waiters' Pay

New York.—The New York City NRA compliance board has ruled that restaurant and dining room owners may include the tips given by the public as part of the prescribed minimum wage under the president's reemployment agreement, but on condition that any deficiency between the aggregate of tips and the minimum wage shall be paid by the employers at the end of the week.

This decision overturns rulings made in Washington immediately after the Blue Eagle was launched. It will affect about 28,000 restaurants, cafes and public dining rooms in New York, most of which have claimed that the minimum wage provision of the blanket code, without inclusion of tips was "ruinous" to them.

This decision is expected to be immediately followed by local compliance boards in other cities and towns, unless it is overturned.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION ABANDONS 40-YEAR AGE LIMIT

Washington, Nov. 19.—The civil service commission has raised the age limit for typist and stenographic examinations from 40 to 53 years. The 40-year rule, recently announced, was abandoned in the face of a storm of opposition rising throughout the nation. Organized labor vigorously denounced the 40-year limitation and it was opposed by Secretary of Labor Perkins and others in official life.

In announcing that it had lifted the 40-year ban on persons taking examinations for typist and stenographic positions, the commission said that federal agencies are to be urged not to discriminate against applicants because of age.

The commission did not disturb other maximum ages recently set. It was the reduction of the maximum entrance age for stenographers and typists from 50 to 40 years that caused the most protest.

Washington, Nov. 19.—Vigorous protest against the resolution adopted by the National Association of Broadcasters, urging elimination of the "canned music" regulation requiring the announcement of electrical transcriptions on the radio as such, has been made to the federal radio commission by the American Federation of Musicians.

Charging that the producers and the broadcasters are openly combining to "put one over on the public," the federation asked the commission to retain its present regulation intact. Unemployment in musicians' ranks would be increased if the commission accepts the broadcasters' recommendation, it was contended.

At present electrical transcriptions must be announced before each broadcast to distinguish them from "live talent" programs. The broadcasters have asked the commission to allow such transcribed programs, made especially for broadcasting, to be announced "merely as a production of the concern making such transcription."

Criticizing severely the "canned music" era, the musicians' petition stated that "what music machines, with some help from the broadcasters, have done to the American musician, is not a pretty picture." Radio and "canned music," it continued, played their part "in making this an age of substitution in which sham serves for the genuine here, there and nearly everywhere."

$30,000,000 JOBLESS AID BOND ISSUE FOR ILLINOIS

Springfield, Ill.—The Illinois house of representatives passed the six bills, already approved by the senate, providing for Gov. Horner's $30,000,000 unemployment relief bond issue.

The victory for the administration forces broke a three weeks' deadlock in the house after the bills had been tied up for three weeks in the senate.

. . . NO TIME TO WAIT—

SOMEONE is ill . . . get the doctor at once—no time to wait . . . that is when you want a telephone.

You want to talk with a friend across town or in another city—and that is when the telephone serves you well.

After all, life is made up of major and lesser incidents like these—when you need to speak to someone, or they want to call you.

If you try to determine the value of telephone service, a good way it might be measured is by its protection in emergencies when a swift summons must be sent to the doctor, the police, the fire department. Or its value may be summed up in the many little errands it runs for you every day.

But whatever the yardstick, most folks agree the value of telephone service is so great and the cost so reasonable that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

NRA Opponents Tories of 1933, Filene Asserts

Same Arguments Used Against Progress Now as in 1776, Boston Department Store Owner Says.

Boston, Nov. 16.—Opponents of the NRA are the Tories of 1933 and, like the Tories of 1776, they oppose new ideas, Edward A. Filene, Boston department store owner and outstanding employer champion of high wages, said in a radio address here. Filene called the NRA a "charter of economic liberty" and said it is the essence of democracy.

Discussing 1776 and 1933, Filene said:

"To the Tories of 1776, the American Revolution was a mere uprising of the rabble in violation of the tried and true principles of social law and order.

"There were new words then on almost everybody's lips—liberty, independence, democracy. To the honest Tory they were hateful words. But the words lived, and the Tories who hated them were soon forgotten.

"There are Tories in 1933, and they do not like the new words which are now on everybody's lips. Such words as co-ordination, for instance, or industrial administration, or economic planning.

"Their objection to these words, however, is not at all the same objection which the ancient Tories raised. These modern Tories love the word 'democracy' and 'liberty' and 'independence'; and they object to the NRA on the ground that it violates American liberty.

"If I believed for a minute that the NRA constitutes a menace to American liberty I would raise my voice against the NRA, no matter how economically advantageous the new deal might be.

"We cannot afford to sacrifice freedom, even for wealth.

"When we examine the facts, however, instead of merely mouthing phrases, we will discover that the NRA is not a code restricting American liberty but is a charter, rather, of economic freedom, without which political freedom becomes almost a mockery.

"This government which America is now perfecting is and can be no dictatorship. It is the very essence of democracy and is self-government in every real sense. That it will make mistakes, we may be sure. That it will halt and fumble where haste is necessary, and that it will plunge ahead where caution would be the wiser course, is only to be expected. But that America having once set out to achieve liberty in the machine age will turn back because of the terrified shrieks of these modern Tories is, to me, unthinkable.

"America has already gone too far to stop; and our Tories are too far gone to stop us."

Respect to Memory Of Frank J. Weber

Composing-room chapel of the Chattanooga News, at a called meeting last Friday afternoon, adopted the following resolutions of respect to the memory of Frank J. Weber, who had been a fellow worker for many years and who passed away Sunday, Nov. 5. The resolutions were prepared by a committee consisting of W. L. Gardner, B. H. McLaughen and H. S. Kennedy:

"Whereas, on Sunday, Nov. 5, 1933, our brother and fellow worker, Frank J. Weber, aged 71, passed from this life; and,

"Whereas, in his long association with us, covering more than thirty years, by his uniform courtesy and exhibition of the qualities of a true unionist, a gentleman and a lover of mankind, he had endeared himself to the members of this chapel; therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Chattanooga News chapel in session assembled, That we hereby express a sense of our great loss in the passing of this our brother, and that we also express our deep sympathy with the son and the two sisters of our departed brother in their hour of bereavement; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on our minutes, a copy furnished relatives of our dead brother and a copy given The Labor World for publication.

"Nov. 10, 1933."

The Labor World joins the News chapel in offering sincere condolences to the surviving relatives of Brother Weber.

New International Labor Office President Elected

Geneva, Switzerland.—The governing body of the International Labor office elected as its president M. C. V. Bramsnaes, Danish government representative, in succession to Sir Atul Chatterjee, whose year of office expired.

Mr. Bramsnaes was Danish government delegate at the first session of the International Labor conference at Washington in 1919, and has acted in the same capacity at every conference since 1922.

New Work Plan To Reduce Relief Rolls Two-Thirds

Program Is Designed to Give Employment to All Employable Persons Now Aided by Public Funds.

Washington, Nov. 16.—Four million men now on relief rolls will be given jobs for the winter months under a new civil works employment program just announced by President Roosevelt.

The new program, announced as a "fundamental change" in the federal relief program, will be in charge of a civil works administration headed by Harry L. Hopkins, federal relief administrator. The program will be financed by $400,000,000 from the $3,300,000,000 federal works fund, and by money advanced by local governments and the emergency relief administration. States, counties, cities and towns will be required to meet their share of the program, the president announced.

Two million men on relief rolls, who have been receiving $20 or less per month to support their families, will be transferred to the civil works payroll on Nov. 16. They will probably receive about $50 a month for the next three months.

The other 2,000,000 will be employed at the same wages a little later, probably by Dec. 1.

They will work on such projects as park and playground construction; sanitation, including drainage, clearing of creek beds and cleaning up of rural areas; reclamation of public land for roads and the construction of "feeder" roads; the building of utilities and public structures not classified in the public works program, and pest control.

The president's announcement said that the new departure in policy would "remove from the relief rolls a major portion of those receiving the necessities of life on the basis of public aid and place them on regular employment." It was designed to remove from relief "all employable persons."

The president emphasized that the 4,000,000 men to be given employment will no longer be dependent upon charity. They will be employed thirty hours a week at wage rates prevailing in their communities for similar work. The plan is expected to reduce by two-thirds public relief rolls throughout the United States.

Relief Administrator Hopkins amplified the president's announcement and emphasized that the government is determined that American citizens should no longer "be forced to live under the auspices of relief organizations."

"That means that investigations will stop and we need no longer pry into the personal and private lives of these people," he said.

DOPE ON THE ELECTRICIANS

Will try to answer your question with regard to the Electrical Workers. There are plenty of them, but most of them are married now and don't have much to say about themselves.

Billy Cooper, following a trip out in the woods, dreamed he killed a bear. They say he has this same dream every fall, after it frosts, and we understand he has made a deal with a local restaurant to buy the bear in case the dream ever comes true.

"Old Pat" was among those who made the trip to the fair. He says he was able to return home without the aid of one of the fair canes.

Wendell Worley says his chickens are on the NRA code. They refuse to lay eggs on Saturday and Sunday.

A. E. Butler has finished pulling wires at the new postoffice, and is now pulling up his sweet potatoes and turnips.

I understand Bill London has been trying to buy a pair of shoes for a week, but can't find any to fit.

McDaniel and Lofty started to Knoxville last week, and after covering part of the distance the limousine refused to go further. Mack was set on reaching the Chattanooga suburb, and decided to walk the rest of the way. After several hours, it is reported, Lofty got the machine moving, and finally found Mack and brought him in about 4 a.m.

State Unionists Are Bereaved

The Labor World regrets to note the passing of a brother of David Hanly, commissioner of compensation and for many years legislative chairman of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Andrew M. Hanly, 48, passed away suddenly at his home in the capital city. He had been connected with the plumbing business in Nashville for many years.

Report also reached this office of the passing of the father of S. C. Godfrey, member of the executive council of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, following an extended illness.

The Labor World speaks for the entire local movement in extending sincerest condolences to the state labor officials and other surviving relatives of the deceased citizens.

Rumored Peace Pact With Ice Corporation Branded as False

Union Spokesmen Declare Company Agents Spread Propaganda.

Representative of Ice Delivery Company Complains of Labor World Article—Manager Pure Ice Company Denies Any Connection With Non-Union Atlantic—Public Indicates Sympathy for Labor in Controversy With Low-Wage Corporation.

PURE ICE COMPANY DENIES AFFILIATION WITH THE ATLANTIC

Editor The Labor World:

A report which has gained circulation in the city, and for which I am sure none of your organizations is responsible, has done our company considerable harm, and we would appreciate correction in your issue this week.

It has been rumored that the Pure Ice company is affiliated with the Atlantic Ice and Coal corporation, which is entirely incorrect and a palpable injustice to our company.

The Pure Ice company manufactures its own ice, and has never bought from the Atlantic, except on a few occasions when our own equipment was temporarily out of order.

We observe the code to the letter, and have always endeavored to be fair to our employes, as well as to labor generally. We invite members of your organization to inspect our plant and talk to our employes in reference to conditions in our plant.

We reiterate that we have no connection whatever with the Atlantic Ice and Coal corporation nor the Chattanooga Ice Delivery company, and would appreciate the business of any and all Chattanooga working people, endeavoring at all times to merit their patronage and friendship.

PURE ICE CO.,
By C. W. Dorris, Mgr.
Chattanooga, Nov. 24.

Reports that the Atlantic Ice and Coal corporation and its subsidiary, the Southeastern Brewing company, have "made peace" with Chattanooga labor were vigorously denied by union officials this week.

"It appears to be the policy of some agents of this chain corporation," a spokesman for Central Body told The Labor World, "to discount the dispute between Chattanooga workers and the corporation. Ever since the Central Body found it impossible to convince representatives of the corporation that organized workers should be employed in erection of the bottling plant for handling Lion Pilsener beer, it has appeared that a studied campaign to belittle the efforts of Chattanooga workingmen has been carried on. We have the consolation, however, that the general public is showing an active interest in our case, and we know of many instances where our friends among the business people have protested to the corporation's agents against the cheap-labor policies which have become evident through the employment of non-union labor and through alleged violations of the NRA. We mean to see that all our friends are advised of the corporation's position, and will not stop until we have urged every one to express their disapproval of the chain-company's attitude toward labor."

A new angle of the affair developed this week when representatives of the Chattanooga Ice Delivery company indicated offense because The Labor World had connected that concern with the Atlantic corporation. It was admitted, however, that the delivery company "bought its ice from the Atlantic," and maintained offices at the Atlantic plant.

The complaint mentioned was in reference to an article in last week's issue of The Labor World which recounted that ice wagon drivers for the delivery company had been discharged for attempting to form a union, which would of itself be a violation of the code.

Union officials announced also that friends in various southern cities where the ice company and its subsidiaries, including the distributing company for Lion Pilsener beer, operate, are being notified of the corporation's attitude toward local labor.

Deplore Passing Of A Loyal Unionist

Branch 92, Glass Bottle Blowers, at a recent meeting adopted resolutions of respect to the memory of James V. Robinson, active member and former president of the branch, who passed away on Sept. 5. A sincere tribute, in which The Labor World joins, is paid the departed unionist, as follows:

Whereas, the great and Supreme Ruler of the universe has in His infinite wisdom removed from among us our beloved brother, James V. Robinson, who departed this life after a lingering illness on Sept. 5, 1933; and,

Whereas, the wisdom and ability which he has exercised in the duties of the several offices he has held in the many years he has been a member of the union, also representing our branch and others as delegate to several conventions; and,

Whereas, the long and intimate relations held with him makes it eminently fitting that we record our appreciation of him; and,

Whereas, the removal of such a life from our companionship leaves a vacancy and a shadow that will be deeply felt by all the members of our organization and friends in the community; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the members of Branch No. 92, Glass Bottle Blowers' association, realizing the great loss sustained, extend to the bereaved wife and son our sincere condolences and heartfelt sympathy in their hour of sorrow and affliction, and express our hopes that even so great a loss to us all may be overruled for good by Him who doeth all things well; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of this organization, a copy printed in The Labor World, and a copy forwarded to the bereaved wife.

A. F. of L. Wins New Hearing On Construction Industry Code

President Green Denies Construction League Charge That A. F. of L. Is Blocking Code—Opposes 48-Hour Week as Worthless to Provide Work for Jobless and Says Minimum Pay Degrades Wage Standards—Asks Separate Code for Building Industry.

Washington, Nov. 23.—The American Federation of Labor won its demand for a new hearing on the construction industry code over the combined opposition of the low-wage and long-hour brigade of employers headed by the Construction League of the United States and militantly supported by the Associated General Contractors of America. Malcolm Muir, NRA division administrator, made the announcement.

The demand for the new hearing was made by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, because of the notorious low wages and equally notorious long hours in the code sponsored by the construction league.

Mr. Green supplemented his demand with a statement critically analyzing the subversive labor conditions of the code and reducing to zero the inane charge made by Claude S. Proctor, spokesman for the construction league, that the officials of the A. F. of L. were blocking the approval of the code before the national recovery administration.

Just Code Demanded.

American organized labor, Mr. Green pointed out, is profoundly interested in promoting a just code for the construction industry, but it will not approve the manifestly unjust scheme backed by the Construction League of the United States, with its monstrous 48-hour week and a minimum wage for unskilled workers so low that it tends "to degrade the wage standards of the vast majority, who are skilled."

This was the knockout blow administered by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, to Claude S. Proctor, spokesman for the construction league, which sponsors the notorious master code for the building construction industry, who charged the officials of the A. F. of L. with blocking the approval of the code under consideration by the national recovery administration.

"Labor disclaims responsibility for failure to secure the approval of a code for the construction industry and I regard the construction league declaration as additional evidence in support of the charge I made recently that powerful interests are seeking to discredit the national recovery act.

Code Blocking Denied.

"Labor is not blocking the construction code, or any other code.

"Labor has not threatened a general strike, or any other strike.

"Instead labor has endeavored to give its best service, so that codes, when completed, might be workable and contain within them a decent measure of justice.

"It is indicated that joint action will be taken this week by the construction league, the Associated General Contractors, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the American Institute of Architects designed to bring pressure to bear on NRA in behalf of the construction league code.

Will Not Approve Unjust Code.

"Labor will join with those directly interested in promoting approval of a sound and just code, but it will not approve or support a code for the building construction industry that is unfair, impracticable and unjust.

"I resent the unfair and unwarranted accusations of the construction league and I assert that those accusations were made for the purpose of creating a false issue.

"The issue is not found in the position of the American Federation of Labor; it is found in the proposed code sponsored by the construction league.

"The American Federation of Labor is acting in behalf of and in support of the building trades unions and their purpose is to secure a measure of justice for the workers identified with the building trades industry.

48-Hour Week Condemned.

"Labor has offered constructive objections. Summarized they are:

"First, the proposed code fixes a 48-hour week. It seems preposterous to establish a work-week of forty-eight hours when 80 per cent of the workers in the building construction industry are unemployed and have been for most of the last three years. Through collective bargaining a 40-hour week has been quite generally established.

Minimum Wage Too Low.

"Second, the proposed code fixes a minimum wage, at about 40 cents an hour, for unskilled workers and fixes none for skilled workers. Fully 86 per cent of the workers employed in the building construction industry are skilled workers. Fixing of a minimum wage for the unskilled worker alone will surely tend to degrade the wage standards of the vast majority, who are skilled.

Labor Representation on Code.

"Third, the proposed code permits the code authority to decide what is true representation, make local wage agreements, exercise the power to determine which are and which are not unions and to pass upon 'the bona fide character' of collective bargaining.

"Fourth, labor is accorded no representation on the code authority, although the propoced code seeks to put the code authority in charge of the life and death of unions, of collective bargaining and of the wage agreements arrived at thereby.

"Fifth, the proposed code would permit boys over 16 to work in the construction industry, whereas labor demands that 18 years be the age limit.

"Sixth, labor holds that a separate code should be drafted for the building construction industry. Only through such procedure can justice be done to the skilled workers who make up approximately 90 per cent of those employed in this highly important industry.

Abuse of Recovery Act Opposed.

"Labor will support the recovery act to the limit, but support for the recovery act does not mean support for every objectionable proposal advanced in its name.

"If the powerful forces gathered here this week have come with a proposal which workers cannot and should not support, then they need not accuse labor of blocking the administration.

"What labor is seeking to block is abuse of the recovery act and it will carry that opposition to the very last appeal.

"It is our opinion that the president will not approve such a code as these four organizations are attempting to force through.

"The entire labor movement is a unit in opposing the provisions to which I have called attention. They

LABOR HATERS ARE REBUKED BY JOHNSON

N. R. A. Chief Raps Chamber of Commerce.

RIDICULES PLEA FOR LOWER WAGES

Local Chapter's Participation Recalls Some Interesting History.

"The NRA got no violent shock when the southern industrialists tell us that they feel they are entitled to a 30 per cent. wage differential because of the lesser efficiency of the labor they employ. It is the first time I ever knew of a community boasting that any section of its people are inferior to a corresponding group in any other part of the country."

Thus did General Hugh S. Johnson, national recovery administrator and right-hand man of the president of the United States, rebuke and point the finger of shame at a group of southern Chamber of Commerce representatives who met in Atlanta the other day to instruct the national administration just how the government is to be operated Included in these demands was a 30 per cent differential in wage rates, on the score that southern workers are less efficient than their brothers of the north and east.

The Atlanta meeting was apparently a part of a "broadside" fired by the National Chamber under one Harriman, president, a reactionary of the type of "Divine-Rights" Baer, and a gentleman who appears to have considerable ability to align the "die-hards" in the chamber against anything that's progressive. The organization has been gunning for the NRA ever since it became apparent that "big business" was not to dictate the policies and operations of the administration. For the first time in recent history, perhaps, and to the everlasting credit of the Roosevelt administration, propaganda of the "big boys" has fallen upon deaf ears, and Gen. Johnson and his forces pursue the even tenor of their way, apparently unawed by the sometimes terrifying voice of the "big bad wolves."

We are told that our own Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce took a leading part in the Atlanta meeting, which will be a matter for regret to many who had hoped that the local body had learned its lesson with respect to attempting to interfere in matters which are not regarded generally as functions of such a body. Time was when the Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce joined the anvil course hammering southern workers, approving such activities as advertising in northern and eastern papers that southern workers are "contented, tractable," etc., and lack the stamina to demand decent wages.

But the local branch of the C of C "got itself in bad," and gradually but surely lost all influence in and for the community which it was supposed to serve. "Butting in" on the so-called "open shop" fight of union-hating manufacturers a few years ago, together with other activities which many citizens believed were selfish and hurtful to Chattanooga, the chamber went from bad to worse, until at a great public meeting at the Memorial auditorium a leading citizen expressed the opinion of possibly a great majority when he told the then president of the organization that the Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce was "dead and defunct."

Efforts of a number of public-spirited citizens since that time to resurrect the body and make of it a representative civic organization which might command the respect and confidence of the people have been of doubtful success. Sometimes it has appeared that the chamber would at last be made to function as it should, and in very recent years many citizens had begun to feel that the work of public-spirited men would be rewarded and all Chattanooga might in time get behind the body and make

PUBLIC WORK PRESAGES END OF SUFFERING

Employment of Thousands Will Relieve Distress.

CITY AND COUNTY TO DISBURSE HUGE SUMS

Not since the hectic days of 1917, perhaps, has such a hum of activity been prevalent in Chattanooga and Hamilton county as that which followed announcement that government funds will be supplied for public works of various character.

All week the United States reemployment office has been swamped with unemployed, lining up for blocks in their efforts to register for employment under the "New Deal" plan to break the depression.

It is a great day for labor, marking the culmination of an effort which has continued since the beginning of the economic catastrophe to have government funds allotted for employment of the depression's victims.

Millions to be spent under supervision of the administration will represent the difference between comfort and misery for thousands of working men and women victims of the economic crisis. It is announced that the funds allotted will provide employment for some six or seven thousand in the city and county, practically continuous until spring, and the indirect benefits to the business men and others is incalculable.

Total amount to be expended through various agencies and on various projects is difficult to estimate, but it is clear that funds will be supplied in sufficient amount to prevent any great suffering during the winter. Although the plan was started only this week, already many men who had vainly sought employment for months are enjoying the "novelty" of sustaining work, and of provision for the wife and kids which has been lacking so long, and which had in many cases been practically despaired of.

The program is calculated to abolish entirely relief rolls, both direct and work-relief, and in the case of the latter the beneficiaries will be lifted from a system which offered them a pittance to regular employment at reasonable scales of wages.

The government is to furnish all labor, it is announced, and the scale of pay set is 45 cents per hour for common labor and $1.10 for skilled craftsmen. The 30-hour week will be observed on all operations.

Both city and county have outlined work projects which had become absolutely necessary, and repairs to school buildings, fire halls, etc., delayed to a point where in some cases these buildings had become a menace to life and limb, will be instituted immediately.

Labor men were jubilant over the sudden developments, and various union heads are urging their members to register at the re-employment service for work on either city or county projects.

Although some confusion naturally exists, due to the sudden decision to put the projects through, it is believed that within a short time all problems will be ironed out and a vast army of former unemployed will be busily engaged in the almost forgotten "art" of making a living for themselves and their families.

The presidential program for taking the unemployed off of relief rolls and putting them on payrolls is one that has been in

Q.—Who was William Benbow?

A.—He was an English radical and agitator, born in 1784. He has been called the originator of the "general strike" idea in Great Britain and perhaps in Europe. The first expounded the idea in a pamphlet published in 1832.

Q.—Was the matter of closer relations between organized labor and the farmers considered in the early days of the American Federation of Labor?

A.—Yes. In 1890, the convention of that year sent expressions of fraternal sympathy and good will to the Farmers' Alliance. In 1893, the Executive Council was instructed to use every effort to perfect an alliance between the unions and farmers "to the end that the best interests of both will be served."

DIZZINESS

"I decided to take Thedford's Black-Draught, as I had been having bilious spells," writes Mr. Charles E. Stevens, of Columbus, Ind. "When I get bilious, I feel sleepy and tired and do not feel like doing my work. It is hard to tell how I feel, but I do not feel good. I get awfully dizzy. I know then that I had better take something. After I found how good Black-Draught is, that is what I have used. I guess it rids me of the bile, for I feel better—don't feel like I am dropping off to sleep every time I sit down. That, to me, is a very bad feeling."

What Will It Take to Jar Them?

Only with apprehension can a thinking person try to conceive of what will be required to jar the mind of the American business man out of the ruts of his pre-depression habits of thought.

Four months of the educational processes of the NRA seem to have made very little impression upon the mental processes of scores upon scores of those who are coming to the hearings on the codes. The shallowness, the littleness, the small-calibred selfishness of them is well expressed by the remark of one man who was rebuked by a presiding deputy administrator for his attitude at the hearing. "Oh, I'll go along with you," he said. "We have been going 'in the red' so long that we will try anything once, just on the chance that we can make a dollar again once in a while."

The utter inability to think in terms any larger than the immediate profit and loss of his own little concern may be the result of years of training—more or less successful—along that line. The failure to think of wages, the whole of the wages of American industry, and of adequate wages in relation to the movement of commodities after they are produced, is the thing that stands out as these men argue over a 5-cent differential between north and south in wages, or over the length of the work-week.

Managing heads of great corporations boldly ask for a longer work-week than is now in force. They seem to have no conception of the reservoir of unemployed labor that has been backing up against the dam of a breaking public patience and personal endurance of privation for four years.

These men are going to be thinking in some other terms than they now use, before long, whether or no. The question arises: What will be the nature of the shock which will crack the ignorant complacency of their intelligence? A few of them are beginning to think. But the mass of them are as innocent of what is going on as a baby is of bumblebees.

Blatant Blanton

Representative Blanton, of Texas, has resumed his reactionary attacks on the living standards of government employes.

A sample of his "argument" for lower pay for federal workers is contained in a letter he wrote to Claude E. Babcock, president of the American Federation of Government Employes, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. He said:

> If you will send me a list of your members who are dissatisfied with their government pay and are willing to give up their positions I will furnish from my own district 500 qualified applicants for each position, who will gladly take the job at a lower salary. You had better let well enough alone.

That is to say, Representative Blanton proposes to put government jobs up at auction and sell them to the lowest bidder. This scheme in the present period of hard times and unemployment would reduce wages and salaries to a starvation basis.

Blanton's proposal is nothing but blatant demagoguery. His trick can be turned against him. He draws the comfortable salary of $8,500 a year. His record reveals that his major function is to detect measures which are designed to improve the economic conditions of the earning masses of the American people and then vote against them.

If Representative Blanton should offer his job at auction to the lowest bidder in his own state, his office would undoubtedly be flooded with tens of thousands of qualified applicants, probably at half what he gets, and, judging from his anti-labor record, the qualifications would not be high.

Falling Behind in Education

The United States has long believed that it stood in the forefront of educational endeavor. Particularly has it prided itself on its public school system, which it believed second to none. Its pride may still be justified, yet facts as to the length of the school term in this and other countries give rise to some doubts on this score.

The facts were made public by George F. Zook, U. S. commissioner of education in a report on school conditions during the depression. Comparing school terms in the United States with those of other countries Commissioner Zook showed the average is 172 days term in the United States; 200 days in France; 210 in Sweden; 264 in Germany; 210 in England. 246 in Denmark. This does not look as if the United States was maintaining unquestioned leadership in public school education. This, with other alarming facts cited by Commissioner Zook on the closing of schools, lowering of teachers' pay, teachers' unemployment and general curtailment of educational facilities, make it evident a grave crisis in education is here—a crisis, as Commissioner Zook points out, that threatens the very existence of the schools.

WINDY CRITICS OF NRA DERIDED BY JOHNSON

Business Bankrupts Yell for Government Raft and Then "Kick Everybody Else Off While They Remain in Safety," Recovery Administrator Says in Reply to Attack on NRA.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 23.—When you hear somebody say that we do not need NRA or would have gotten just as far out of the depression without it or that it should now be abandoned, it would be a good thing to ask what that person was saying in 1928, 1929 or even on March 4, 1933. On that date, business was shipwrecked and was yelling for a raft, and when the government gave them the raft, the sole idea of these few individuals is to kick everybody else off while they remain in safety."

General Hugh S. Johnson, administrator of the national recovery act, thus derided the groups of reactionary business men and politicians who are opposing President Roosevelt's recovery program in an address to an audience of 20,000 here.

These interests are still intoxicated with the idea that they can carry on with the traditional jungle methods of cut-throat practices, with each concern attempting to stifle its competitors by methods of commercial violence and the wage and salary earners paying the penalty in lower living standards and wholesale unemployment.

He declared that self-regulation of industry under the form of government supervision set out in the national recovery act "need not interfere in the slightest degree with such dearly held American institutions as individualism, competition and liberty of speech and action."

Mentioning Senator Hatfield, of West Virginia, and Congressman James M. Beck, of Pennsylvania, among the outspoken opponents of President Roosevelt's program, Gen. Johnson said he had no fear of "such windy resistance."

What Next!

Hollywood dispatches report perfection after ten years of experimentation of a snow machine which manufactures real snow for use in the making of motion pictures. The machine is, in effect, a gigantic ice shaver which scrapes an ice block into fine crystals and automatically throws these into the teeth of a wind machine.

ADVOCATES SHORTER HOURS.

Washington.—Division Administrator A. D. Whiteside, of the NRA, who has urged shorter hours, told a group of manufacturers at the wholesale code hearing, "if immediate improvement is not noticed in industry it will probably be necessary—I speak unofficially, giving my own opinion—to reduce the hours of all industries whether they are operating under codes or not."

WASH DIRTY FACE

—Federated Pictures.

The begrimed face of the capitol at Washington is being washed in preparation for the meeting of Congress. "Did you get it clean?" one of the firemen was asked. "Naw," he said. "There wasn't that much water."

BY THE WAY

Comment on Some Interesting Matters in the Limelight Today.

It is said to be almost impossible for an unemployed man of 50 nowadays to get employment, no matter how skilled he may be. In industry it is hard for a man of 40 to get a job.

In some places, where closed factories reopen and employers can have their pick of all ages, they refuse those over 30 years. This may be a natural policy, if vigor and freshness are preferred to experience and steadiness, and if the matter is looked at from the usual standpoint of "private capital" doing business for "competitive profit."

It may be the "businesslike" thing to choose employes in the same impersonal way that one would choose horses, cows or sheep. It creates, however, awkward social complications. There are limits to human patience.

It becomes a practical question how patiently the growing numbers of men and women between 30 and 60 will endure this situation. And aside from any direct action on their part, there can be no doubt that society as a whole, somehow, will have to carry the burden of its unemployed and unemployable members.

How will it be done? Will the young workers between 20 and 30 have to provide old age pensions for all the rest? Or will wealth be taxed out of existence to support this vast idleness? Or will our economic order decide, after all, to provide living jobs for workers at least until middle age?

Survey Reveals Big Decrease In Workers' Income

New York, Nov. 19.—Preliminary figures made public as the result of an investigation by the Milbank Memorial fund and the United States Public health service show a big drop in the income of families of wage-earners during the depression.

The investigation is the first comprehensive study of the effect of the depression on the earnings and the health of families of the wage-earning class in ten typical American cities. The investigation is now being completed.

For every four families who in 1929 had earnings of less than $1,200 a year, there were in 1932 eleven families below that income level, the preliminary figures reveal. For every eight families who earned more than $3,000 in 1929 there was only one in 1932 whose earnings were above that amount.

These findings are revealed in a report covering 2,556 families, including 11,330 persons in Birmingham, Detroit and Pittsburgh.

The report shows that in 1929 only 1 per cent of the families had no employed members, 16 per cent had part-time workers only, and 83 per cent had one or more full-time workers. In 1932, 12 per cent of the families had no employed members, 40 per cent had part-time workers only, and less than half had full-time workers.

In a report already issued by the United States public health service it was revealed that the sickness rate was considerably higher in families with small incomes than in families in the upper income classes. The highest rate was found in families whose incomes had dropped most sharply during the four-year period.

GEN. JOHNSON STARTS PROBE OF PROFITEERING UNDER NRA

Buyers Who Believe They Have Been Gouged by Blue Eagle Dealers Will Have Complaints Heard at Hearings Beginning Dec. 12—Food Prices Exempted.

Washington, Nov. 23.—Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, national recovery administrator, announced that a thorough investigation will be made of complaints that wholesale profiteering and gouging of consumers are being practiced under NRA codes and the president's re-employment agreement, and that the Blue Eagle is displayed to cloak these unjustifiable acts. Public hearings will open on December 12 at the NRA headquarters in the department of commerce building.

Regret was expressed in many quarters that the inquiry will not consider prices of food, foodstuffs, or agricultural commodities generally. It was explained that these come under the agricultural adjustment administration, which operates independently of the national recovery administration.

Blue Eagle Concerns Under Fire.

The hearings will be guided by A. E. Whiteside, division administrator of the NRA, and are intended to disclose the truth or falsity of charges by consumers that Blue Eagle retailers have made wholly unjustifiable price increases and charges by retailers that manufacturers have resorted to the same get-rich scheme. The hearings will also give retailers and manufacturers a chance to prove their claim that price advances are caused by compliance with Blue Eagle requirements.

Monopolistic Price Boosts Suggested.

NRA officials are uncertain whether the nationwide price boosts, so generally complained about, are really explained by legitimate cost increases under NRA codes and the president's re-employment agreement or whether prices are artificially ballooned by interests closely enough allied to permit the imposition of monopolistic practices.

Hundreds of complaints against price boosting have been received by the American Federation of Labor and referred to the NRA for remedial action.

Mr. Whiteside announced that persons who have "made purchases at prices believed to be unwarranted" or violating the codes or agreements and who wish to testify must notify him before Dec. 2.

Complaints must be described in detail. Those who do not wish to appear personally may file complaints. All concerns and individuals against whom complaints are filed will be given an opportunity to appear.

Educator Sees 20,000 Schools Closed by April

Dr. John K. Norton Predicts Lack of Funds May Soon Deprive Over Million Children of Public School Instruction.

Chicago, Nov. 23.—Twenty thousand schools in America may be forced to close by April 1, 1934, because of lack of funds and 1,020,000 children may be without public school instruction by that date, Dr. John K. Norton, of Columbia university, told the National Association of State Universities.

Dr. Norton, who is chairman of the joint commission on the emergency in education, said his prediction was based on facts revealed by a questionnaire sent to county superintendents throughout the country.

The commission was appointed last January by the National Education association.

"The situation in southern Illinois," Dr. Norton said, "is perhaps one of the most serious. Some teachers have had no pay for three years and there is almost a complete collapse of the school system.

"Michigan, one of the richest states, cut all educational budgets from a peak total of $109,000,000 to an expected $45,000,000 this year. On the basis of reports, Kansas will have 700 schools closed April 1, affecting 35,000 children."

In the country as a whole, he reported, between two and three thousand schools, with 100,000 children enrolled, did not open this year, as compared with forty schools last year.

Dr. Norton put only part of the blame on the depression. In many cases, he said, the breakdown is due to the nineteenth century system of supporting schools in which from 80 to 90 per cent of the revenue comes from the general property tax, locally levied and administered.

"This system has broken down because the amount of taxes to be paid is only indirectly related to the inability to pay, and the property owner has been overburdened," he added.

AID BONDS APPROVED.

Springfield, Ill.—The Illinois legislature, in special session, approved bills authorizing a $30,000,000 bond issue for unemployment relief, advocated by Gov. Henry Horner. The bills were passed by a narrow margin in the house of representatives, after a three weeks' deadlock between the house and senate.

Code Authority In Retail Trade Bars Pay Slash

New York Board Denies Merchant's Plea for Lower Wages and Orders Him to Pay Employes $14 Minimum.

New York City, Nov. 23.—Holding that any action that breaks down minimum wage levels set up by NRA codes tends to break down the recovery program, the retail code authority of New York City has refused permission to a Manhattan clothing merchant to reduce wages $2 below the minimum fixed by the code.

The clothing merchant, who employs 1,500 persons, asked permission to pay his employes a minimum of $12 a week instead of the $14 code minimum. He was directed by the code authority to increase at once the minimum wage in his store to the $14 level. By resolution of the board, the name of the merchant was not made public. In denying the petition, Grover A. Whalen, chairman of the code authority, said:

"To grant the petition would be to attack the basic wage provisions of the retail code, and of all industrial codes. Such action might well have unfortunate repercussions throughout the nation.

"We do not intend to be responsible for reducing the minimum wage which the code allows. That is one of the vital features of the president's recovery program. Any action that tends to break down that provision tends to break down the recovery program.

"Nor do we intend that any retailer shall have an advantage under the code which any other retailer cannot have. That would be a violation of the spirit of fair competition which the retail code guarantees.

"The code authority intends to administer the retail code with justice, but it intends to enforce that code. We believe that the granting of an exception to the applicant, with respect to wages, would be an injustice not only to the employes of that store but to retailers with whom that store competes and who are paying the minimum wage."

WASM SETTLES WITH UNION.

New Orleans.—WASM here has settled its feud with the Musicians' union and has been removed from the unfair list. The contract between the station and the union calls for steady employment of a staff pianist and fixes prices for orchestra work.

Helped By Cardui

"I was sick and rather discouraged. I was so weak and thin, I was not able to do my work as it should be done. This made me fret a good deal, and did not help my condition.

"I had pains across my back and lower part of my body. My nights were spent in rolling from one side of the bed to the other, hoping I would soon go to sleep. Then when morning would come, I would be just as tired as when I went to bed. A neighbor, seeing how badly I felt, told me to try Cardui. After I had taken one bottle, I was much better. I kept on taking Cardui, and I was stronger and slept much better at night."

the minds of many a long, long time.

Granting that the threat to standard wages is removed, here is one of the most important presidential acts in weeks. It was a bold and courageous step. It was promised that none would go hungry, none go without needed shelter and clothing. The president is taking that pledge seriously.

America seems actually, genuinely and with a lot of speed, headed for a new day. The black flag is fluttering to its last repose.

Such activities as will bring a stinging rebuke from a gentleman in the position of Gen. Johnson, however, are not calculated to benefit the city or the south; rather do they bring the blush of shame to our faces and tend to belie the sacred traditions of the entire section which patriotic southerners have loved so well.

The Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce recently employed a Mr. Snell, who appears to have some reputation as a sort of "high-pressure" salesman in the north and east, to act as secretary. We have no disposition to criticize any individual, but it is just possible that this gentleman has not as yet absorbed the traditional patriotism of the south, and is not fully aware that our people as a whole are too proud to malign a great group for a possible paltry material gain. If such indeed be the case, someone should inform the new official that thirty pieces of silver, or even 30 per cent, does not tempt the real southerner—or the real American—to malign or discount his fellows.

It might be stated in passing, however, that the Chamber of Commerce is at least more frank, or less subtle, than the Tennessee Manufacturers' association, who sent "Gloomy Gus" Dyer over the state to deliver a tirade against the NRA, but dispatched C. C. Gilbert, John Edgerton's manfriday, along to assure the dear people that Dyer did not express the sentiment of the association.

We believe the action of the chamber in "telling the world" that southern workers are not efficient was just another mistake, but that it will avail nothing is plainly indicated by the statement of Gen. Johnson Thursday night, when he said:

"* * * However it may be worked out, * * * you may be certain that the south will not get its 30 per cent differential."

New Socialist Party Planned.

Paris.—The socialist party has expelled eight prominent members for voting with the government and the ousted men are now attempting to form a new French socialist party. Plans for the party were announced at a meeting of twenty-eight members of the chamber of deputies who broke away from the main party to vote with the late government of Edouard Deladier.

COMMERCE CHAMBER ATTACK ON NRA HERALDS RETURN OF BUSINESS BOURBONS TO POWER

Demand for Gold Standard, Criticism of Public Works Fund and Naming of NRA Investigating Committee Held Presaging Open War on Roosevelt Policies.

Washington, Nov. 28.—By unanimous vote, directors of the United States Chamber of Commerce have parted company with the administration over its monetary policy and demanded the immediate return to some form of gold basis.

The action is the most significant taken by the chamber in many months, and indicates it is following in the wage of the general alarm in business circles over current monetary developments, with the possibility of weakening in government credit and downward movement of the government bond market.

The chamber resolution demands that the government securities not be driven to lower levels by reason of monetary actions, and manifestly has in mind the effect which such a trend would have on reserves of banks with present tremendous holdings in government securities.

Chamber directors said national recovery will be retarded by failure of the government to give assurances on its monetary policy, including an announcement to avoid "monetary experimentation, greenbackism, and fiat money," and challenged the president's effort to raise prices through measures solely monetary in character. They said the question of sound national monetary policy is paramount, and transcendent because affecting the whole economic welfare. They also said that unless announcement of the intention to make an early return to the gold basis is made, "there will be instability of employment, because of inability of anyone to make forward commitments on a basis of reasonable business risk instead of speculative hazard," and with "insecurity for all classes of our people and a severe setback to the development of healthy recuperative processes which in the main are based upon the decisions of individuals and not of government."

Taking up directly the question of stability of government credit, the directors said: "The protection of credit of the government is inseperable from public confidence in its obligations," and "upon stability of government's securities now largely rests maintenance of our banking, insurance and other fiduciary institutions."

The second resolution by the directors demanded use of the funds of the public works administration to compete with or duplicate units "now rendering adequate service" be stopped as "contrary to sound public policy."

The two resolutions marked a return of the "Bourbons" to control of chamber affairs. While President Harriman was a principal advocate of the recovery act and NRA, he has been taking less and less part lately, and is recorded now as voting for the two resolutions. Fred Sargent and Silas H. Strawn, of Chicago, led the way in putting over the resolutions. The chamber lately has been threatened with schism and division because many members thought it not aggressive enough in opposing concessions given to organized labor in the development of NRA. The revolt recently assumed the form of steps to establish a new national commercial and industrial organization, with a more aggressive policy, and possibly not handicapped and crippled by the presence of vociferous and warring minorities in its membership.

While the schism in the chamber affairs has arisen primarily over the failure to oppose the NRA policy of permitting no qualifying or interpretative clauses in codes in connection with mandatory Section 7 (a), the attack now is not on this sector, but distinctly on the monetary policy of the administration. There is strong indication, however, the two resolutions pave the way for more open and general opposition to administrative policies, especially in connection with proposed legislation coming before this winter's session of congress.

Nine "prominent economists and industrialists" have been named by President Harriman as a committee to "make a thorough study of NRA activities." The study will be preliminary to launching an energetic drive for scrapping NRA and permitting industry, through the medium of trade associations or constituent committees, to assume control and direction of industrial codes.

Appointment of this committee indicated again that the more conservative group, thrust aside with the selection of Harriman in 1932 has again assumed dominance in chamber affairs. The conservatives in the chamber have been smarting for months over the failure to vigorously oppose the labor policies of the NRA and join with the National Manufacturers' association in the movement to change or wreck it.

Harriman resisted this tendency, insisting the NRA should be given an opportunity to show how it could produce results. But recent developments, brought to a focus by recognition of Soviet Russia, departure of Secretary Woodin as the treasury head, the fall of the dollar, and uncertainty incident to monetary policy have forced Harriman from behind his duck blind.

DEATH ANGEL TAKES TOLL OF LOCAL LABOR

Two Veterans Called on Same Day.

LIRONI AND TINKER HAD FINE RECORDS

Each Gave Freely of Time and Talents to Workers' Cause.

Chattanooga trades unionists were shocked last Saturday by announcement of the passing of two local citizens whose activities in past years had been largely responsible for the strong and favorable position which the labor movement of today enjoys.

Harry Lironi, at one time president of the Chattanooga Central Body, was a member of the first Tailors' union organized in America, and throughout the days when that organization thrived, and before the time when its ranks were thinned by the advent of machinery, Mr. Lironi was a tireless and able advocate of its purposes, and that he did not confine his activities to his particular craft is indicated in the fact that he was for many years an active worker and officer in Central Body. Although he had long ago retired from active participation in labor affairs, he never lost his keen interest in the welfare of the toilers, and the writer now recalls vividly that the last time he talked with the deceased unionist Mr. Lironi gave some valuable and appreciated advice with respect to certain phases of the movement. Mr. Lironi was 74 years of age, and had lived in Chattanooga since 1886.

John Tinker, probably one of the best known citizens of Chattanooga, passed away within a few hours after Mr. Lironi had crossed the Great Divide. He had been in bad health for several years, following a stroke which he suffered, and although able to get about among his friends, never recovered his usual health and vigor. Mr. Tinker was a member of Chattanooga Typographical union, and for many years served as a delegate from that organization to Central Body. His love for his union was indicated in the fact that, although stricken to a extent which made it difficult for him to get about, he was a regular attendant at the monthly meetings of No. 89, and evinced a keen interest in the deliberations of the body until the end.

Mr. Tinker, with Neil J. Crowley, established the Intertype Composing company, and maintained an interest in that concern until he was stricken. He had always taken a keen interest in political affairs, and had served in the county court, and was once the nominee of his party for county court clerk. He came to Chattanooga in 1879, and had lived since that time in the same neighborhood. He was active in fraternal affairs, having held many offices, including grand keeper of records and seal for the Knights of Pythias of Tennessee. Mr. Tinker was 62 years of age.

The Labor World joins with the entire labor movement in this territory in echoing the sentiments in the following resolutions, prepared for Chattanooga Trades and Labor council by a committee consisting of G. G. Griggs, Tom F. Hall and W. L. Gardner:

Whereas, the organized labor movement of Chattanooga and vicinity records with deep regret the unexpected death of Harry Lironi and John Tinker, former president and delegate, respectively, of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council; and

Whereas, Brother Lironi and Brother Tinker were active and highly regarded labor officials and representatives who, during their many years of office, used their splendid gifts of practical judgment, intelligence and devotion to the ideals of the American Federation of Labor, for the promotion and success of organized labor, and the advancement and protection of the interests of their fellow craftsmen, in whose behalf they devoted all the energy and circumspection they possessed and were able to enlist in their service a record of useful and honorable lives for the benefit of this coming generation of working people; therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, That we mourn the loss of Brother Harry Lironi and Brother John Tinker; That we honor their memory and their many deeds of co-operation with this council, and that we deeply sympathize with their families and friends in their sorrow and bereavement; and, be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be spread upon our minutes; that copies thereof be forwarded to the families of the deceased, and be published in The Labor World.

Federation News Records Facts For School Teachers

First Issue of Interesting Organ Contains Items Covering Progress Local 246.

Volume 1, Number 1, of Federation News, organ of Local 246, American Federation of Teachers, is just off the press, containing articles and data of interest particularly to local school teachers. Among other live items is an article by Dr. Paul L. Palmer, of the University of Chattanooga, on "The Teacher and the Educational Crisis," and a report on a survey conducted by Prof. C. J. Doub, giving statistics on teachers' salaries throughout the United States.

A leading editorial, headed "Local Problems," discusses various activities of the federation, and closes with this significant paragraph:

> It is not the desire of our organization to stir up trouble. Our only wish is for co-operation with all concerned, to the end that the movement of public education will be forwarded and not hampered. Until this is accomplished the public can expect a fight from the teachers of its children.

An historical sketch of the local union, and an article on "Where Our Money Goes" are included.

Notice of a general meeting for members of Local 246, to be held in the auditorium of the University of Chattanooga on Saturday, December 8, at 1:30 p.m., is displayed.

On the front page, in big type, is the admonition, "Register, Pay Poll Tax, Vote."

The Labor World salutes its contemporary, and wishes it long life and valuable service to its readers.

Union Plumber Picks Juicy Federal Plum

J. F. Anderson, long a member of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, has been named postmaster at Cleveland, Tenn., for which many local friends are highly grateful to Congressman Sam D. McReynolds.

Several months ago Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, at the request of Local 43, recommended the appointment of Mr. Anderson, and last week the announcement was made.

"Brother Jim Anderson has been a member of this union for many years," an official of Local 43 said this week, "and we are all pleased to learn of his appointment. We feel that he will be a credit to the administration and to the office to which he has been appointed. Many local members of organized labor will extend best wishes to 'Jim' on his new job."

Railroads Urged To Buy Liberally

Chicago.—Speaking before the Railway Business association, Joseph B. Eastman, federal co-ordinator of transportation, urged railroads to adopt a more liberal buying policy to relieve unemployment in the heavy industries.

"In saying this I do not mean that the railroads should borrow money, even on liberal terms, for what they do not need," he said. "They have a crushing load of debt as it is, and it could be of no real and lasting help to the general situation for them to go deeper into debt, unless they can thereby increase or protect their earning power, either by improving their service and attracting more traffic or by lowering their expense of operation or by preserving their property from deterioration."

Eastman said the federal government is ready to help railroad purchases by providing funds on liberal terms, where such loans can be reasonably secured.

Delegates Report Various Angles of Situation Involving Non-Union Ice and Coal Corporation, Southeastern Brewing Company and Ice Delivery Branch—State Federations and Central Bodies to Be Informed of Attitude of Chain Corporation.

The Atlantic Coal & Ice corporation is a "two and one-half million dollar concern," and intends to do business in Chattanooga and "make the people like it," according to a report brought to Central Body Monday night which quoted a representative of the chain corporation as stating substantially the above to a former customer who refused to continue his patronage unless the concern changed its attitude toward laboring men and women.

The delegate bringing in this report declared that while he was not in position to guarantee its authenticity, he had been reliably informed that the incident had occurred, substantially as stated.

Attitude of the corporation toward Chattanooga workers was the subject of considerable "oratory" on the floor of Central Body, and it was generally indicated that labor and its friends strongly resent the fact that the Atlantic company, after "soft-soaping" representatives of local unions for several weeks, continued with non-union labor the construction of a bottling plant for Lion Pilsener beer, for which it is understood the corporation has bottling and distribution rights throughout the southeast.

The fact that the corporation was forced to pay back wages to employes by the local compliance board was mentioned, as was also the incident when ice-wagon drivers for the Chattanooga Ice Delivery company were discharged for considering formation of a union.

Attention was called to a letter in last week's issue of The Labor World from Mr. C. W. Dorris, manager of the Pure Ice company, stating that rumors connecting his company with the Atlantic and the delivery branch were doing considerable damage to the Pure Ice, and denying any connection whatsoever with the chain corporation. It was stated that certain other local concerns are evidently displeased with rumored connections with the chain, and officers of Central Body were instructed to make a thorough investigation of the extent of monopoly, if any, which the chain concern has on the ice business in Chattanooga. It was pointed out, however, that, so far as known, the Atlantic company does not control the coal business in this territory, nor has it any monopoly on the sale of beer, Lion Pilsener being the only product of that nature handled by the Atlantic subsidiary, the Southeastern Brewing company. Officers of Local 79, United Brewery Workers, some time ago notified their international union that the Southeastern company had been declared "unfair," along with the Atlantic and other subsidiaries, but so far nothing has been heard as to the attitude of the Lion Pilsener brewery, which is in New York.

Various committee reports indicated that the publicity campaign is proceeding splendidly, and a fine spirit of co-operation continues to be shown by local business people and the public generally.

Secretary Cuthbert, however, was instructed to prepare a letter to be sent every state federation and city central body in the territory where the Atlantic and its various affiliates and subsidiaries operate, notifying friends of labor that the concern has been declared "unfair" by local labor, and asking co-operation of organized workers and their friends in making known the attitude of the corporation toward Chattanoogans.

The "Don Cherry Tire company," believed to be another of Roy McDonald's many and varied business enterprises, was formally declared "unfair to organized labor" by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council at last Monday night's regular meeting of that body.

Action was taken following report of the executive committee, which had interviewed Mr. Cherry, manager of the concern, respecting large spaces used by the latter in McDonald's "Home Stores" advertising sheet, which was established by the grocer, baker, dairyman, printer, publisher, tire dealer, druggist, etc., admittedly as a sort of stepping stone to the daily newspaper field. That the venture into the publishing field, however, was not very encouraging is demonstrated in the fact that, although McDonald claims to print more copies of his "Home Store" sheet than are printed by either of the dailies, very few local business houses have ever recognized it as an advertising medium, and all these have been temporary. No local advertising is carried at present except that of the "Home Stores," which McDonald "sold" to the various managers when the code went into effect, and the tire concern. For several weeks a large advertisement was carried for a stomach-ache remedy which is sold in the so-called "Home Stores," but recently even this has been discontinued, and rumors of the demise of the sheet have been persistent.

Executive committee of Central Body reported Monday night that Mr. Cherry explained the "Home Stores" did a large amount of business with the tire company, and therefore he is obligated to continue to patronize the throw-sheet.

The queer economic philosophy of McDonald, as recounted from time to time in these columns, long ago was responsible for his grocery chain and other wholesale and retail business ventures being declared "unfair to organized labor," and that the local business public approves labor's action has been evidenced in various ways, most convincing of which, perhaps, is their refusal to patronize his throw-sheet.

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

APPROVES OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Columbus, O.—Ohio voted overwhelmingly in favor of an old age pension law, a proposal to establish such a law carrying by more than 858,000 majority. The law provides for pensions to indigent citizens of 65, who have resided in the state fifteen years and do not have property valued at more than $3,000. The grants are limited to $25 monthly.

Washington.—The American Federation of Labor has granted 824 charters to national and international unions, federal labor unions, and local unions since July 1, Frank Morrison, secretary of the federation, announced.

The new unions are located in every part of the United States and Canada and include all classes of working men and women.

Long terrorized and enslaved by the arrogant practices of antilabor employers who forced the notorious company union down the unwilling throats of their employes, the workers have sensed their freedom under the national recovery act, which guarantees the right to organize in bona fide trade unions without interference from employers, and have come to the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated unions by hundreds of thousands.

Robert Cuthbert Visiting in City

Robert Cuthbert, father of our own "T. R.," is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Cuthbert over the week-end. Mr. Cuthbert, Sr., is a well-known and active member of Nashville Typographical union, No. 20, and also delegate from his local to the Nashville Trades and Labor council.

Film Union Sues Theater Owners On NRA Violation

New York City, Nov. 30.—Charging that 150 independent theater owners and corporations have violated the President's Re-employment Agreement, Local Union 306 of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Machine Operators has filed suit against the owners and corporations for $1,000,000 damages and an injunction. The defendants operate 420 neighborhood theaters in the New York area.

The union charges that the defendants signed the re-employment agreement to better business conditions by hiring more men, increasing wages, and cutting working hours to 35, but instead they cut staffs in half, reduced pay and increased the working week to 52.

"With astounding brazenness, before the ink of their signatures to the President's Re-employment Agreement had a chance to dry, many of the defendants discharged from their employ members of Local 306 because of their membership therein," President Harry Sherman of the union said.

The injunction application seeks a restraining order pending the trial of the action prohibiting the defendants from continuing an alleged conspiracy against the union and its members, excluding them from employment, cutting their pay, increasing their working time, disorganizing the union and taking advantage of an oversupply of projection men.

Sherman said that he took his charges first to Grover A. Whalen, local NRA administrator, who investigated, he said, and found them to be true. The defendants promised Whalen to cease the acts complained of, but have broken the agreement, it is alleged.

Mrs. John Crump Goes to Florida

Mrs. John H. Crump left this week for West Palm Beach, Fla., where she will spend the balance of the winter recuperating from a serious illness. Helen Rush Crump, 4-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Crump, has recovered from an attack of scarlet fever.

ECONOMIST SAYS NRA HAS QUALITIES OF PERMANENCY

New York.—NRA policies have qualities of permanency, C. T. Revere, economist for the stock exchange firm of Munds, Winslow & Potter, says in a survey of economic and business conditions.

"If one is justified in basing his judgment on recent expressions, editorial and otherwise, in the current press, he would be inclined to the view that there is a growing sentiment against NRA policies," says Revere. "This was unfortunate and perhaps inevitable.

"Opponents of the NRA seem to have forgotten that business and industry for several decades, in respect to markets and prices, at least, had been attempting to do much the self-same thing demanded by the NRA codes, but they always had been barred from such co-operation by the archaic antitrust laws. When this co-operation was made compulsory, however, a spirit of antagonism arose.

"Again we state our conviction that the basic philosophy of NRA has unquestioned qualities of permanency. In respect to details, we may be warranted in looking for substantial modifications."

Enforcement of Labor Law Demanded by Cuban Jobless

Havana.—Unemployed have held many demonstrations in Havana to demand enforcement of the 80 per cent labor law, under which four-fifths of the business and industrial workers must be native Cubans. President Ramon Grau San Martin addressed a crowd of 2,000 gathered at the presidential palace, promising to issue a decree making 50 per cent compulsory as a beginning of enforcement of the law.

General strikes have been in progress at Matanzas, Union de Reyes and Placetas.

HERE'S PICTURE OF INDUSTRIAL TRAIL-BLAZER

Tobacco Magnate Flays Selfish Interests.

REFUSES SALARY INCREASE FOR SELF

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 29.—Too much "take-out" in business with not enough going to producers and consumers was described as one of the greatest troubles of the country by Wood F. Axton, president of the Axton-Fisher Tobacco company, who aroused widespread comment by refusing a salary increase proposed by leading stockholders.

Ray Ellis, of New Albany, Ind., one of the stockholders, said that the company did a $40,000,000 business last year; and that President Axton was paid only $10,000 which, Ellis said, was not enough. Colonel Axton rejected the suggestion by saying, "If there is any pay raising in this factory, it will start at the bottom and not at the top."

At the dedication of a new addition to the 22-acre Axton-Fisher plant, which has added 600 workers this year by operating on three shifts, Colonel Axton announced that the company would entirely absorb the new federal tobacco processing tax to aid tobacco growers, without increasing prices to consumers.

> "One of the greatest troubles with the country is that business executives are taking too much for themselves," said Axton, "and if we want to overcome the depression, the people must have enough to buy back the products of their labor. The processing tax is a just tax and one that the farmer is entitled to, and everyone ought to be glad to pay it. We are going to absorb this tax by more efficient methods and through every economy we can find."

"You know," Mr. Axton continued, "there always has to be a general. There is one great general, our president, and he has asked us to restore prosperity. That's not to be done unless every man is willing to make a sacrifice. I once heard Theodore Roosevelt say that the prosperity of this country had to be passed around. Now we have Franklin Roosevelt trying to pass it around.

"I want to tell you one thing," Mr. Axton declared, "in 1931 the tobacco industry of this country earned a net profit of $148,000,000 and it paid the farmers only $69,000,000 for its raw material. There is no wonder with that kind of licks that we've got depression in this country."

Mr. Axton said one cigarette machine in the factory could make as many cigarettes in a minute as a man could make in a day. He declared the same is true of other machines and expressed the opinion that 1,000,000 men could make as much today as 10,000,000 could make a generation ago. The thing to do, he said, is to increase the buying power of the 1,000,000 by ten.

> "If you give the people of this country enough to buy back the products of their labor, we'll never have a depression in this country."

He urged everyone to back the president squarely, predicting the success of the president's recovery plans.

Discussing the processing tax, Mr. Axton said: "If we can't pay it back through our business then we aren't competent to run our business and ought to get out. We're going to absorb that tax and all the other taxes and are not going to pass it on to the consumer. We are going to do it and like it."

Peter Campbell, secretary of the Kentucky Federation of Labor, declared that Colonel Axton "is one of the most progressive employers in the nation and a 100 per cent Blue Eagle operator. I do not believe that there is a firm fairer to union labor," he added.

Good Citizen Passes

In the passing of J. J. Mahoney, who succumbed Tuesday at a local hospital following a brief illness, the city loses a valuable citizen. Since his retirement from active business life some two decades ago, Mr. Mahoney had demonstrated an increasing interest in progressive civic affairs and institutions.

Most recently he had taken a deep interest in the NRA compliance board, of which he was a member, and his activities along this line proved invaluable to the board and to the victims of would-be "chiselers."

The compliance board will miss him, as will many major civic and patriotic projects and institutions to which he gave unselfishly of his time and talents.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Did Samuel Gompers oppose capital punishment?

A.—Yes. He once said, "I am opposed to capital punishment under all circumstances."

Q.—What famous American said: "I rejoice at every effort working men make to organize. I hail the labor movement. It is my only hope for democracy?"

A.—Phillips Brooks.

Q.—Did the American Federation of Labor advocate workmen's compensation laws when it was first organized?

A.—One of the first acts of the A. F. of L., in 1881, was to adopt a plank in its platform declaring "stricter laws should be enacted making employers liable for all accidents resulting from their negligence or incompetency to employes." Workmen's compensation laws were supported from their beginning.

Why Get Excited Over Kidnapings?

The entire nation is "all het up" over the lynching of kidnapers in California, and Governor Rolph's subsequent asinine public approval of the action of a mob in that state which took summary vengeance on two prisoners. Whether or not the executive believed mob action was justified, he had taken a solemn oath to support and enforce the laws of his commonwealth, and his brazen announcement not only condoning but complimenting the lynchers was, in our opinion, not only an open violation of that oath, but smacked more of a political gesture for the favor of a citizenship wrought up over a public outrage.

But there is a deeper significance to the present wave of resentment at kidnaping. This apparently increasing form of crime is bad, surely; but after all, kidnapers do not operate against people who are penniless, the main object being almost invariably material gain; true, also, temporary anguish is suffered by loved ones, and those responsible should be made to pay the penalties which the laws provide.

But what of the mill and factory owner who "kidnaps" a child of tender years, and through long hours, starvation wages and working conditions bordering closely on slavery, destroys every opportunity, every ambition, every hope and every possibility for substantial citizenship?

Nor is it always the juvenile who is a victim of this system. In many cases men and women of mature years are forced, in order to exist, to accept any terms and conditions which a conscienceless and money-mad industrialist chooses to force upon them. And the pitiful part of this is that neither the laws nor the benevolent intervention of the United States government, thrown into the breach in the form of approval of collective bargaining, has feazed this type of industrialist, who seems to feel that he is commissioned by God to carry on the work of the world, and that laboring men and women are born to serve his selfish and arrogant will.

We are at all times for the orderly process of law, and favor summary punishment for kidnapers and criminals of other types, but if we must have mobs, it is a waste of time and energy to wreak vengeance upon one or two men who have committed one crime, when there are others whose entire lives and activities have been a menace to society as a whole.

Greenfelder's Low-Wage Scheme

One of the advantages derived from the hearings on the codes of fair competition held by the national recovery administration is the revelation they give of the low living standards for workers which many employers would even now impose if they were not restrained by strong trade unions and other progressive agencies.

A striking illustration of this was given by A. P. Greenfelder, assistant vice-president of the Construction League of the United States, at the reopened hearing, asked by the American Federation of Labor, on the proposed master code for the construction industry and supplemental codes for its various branches.

After declaring that one of the objects of the Construction league is to build houses for poor people, whose living standards have been debased by low-wage employers, Mr. Greenfelder proposed that the wages of organized building trades employes should be drastically reduced in order to promote his hallucination of enabling contractors to sell houses at a good fat profit to the lowest paid wage-earners. M. J. McDonough, president of the Building Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, emphatically and truthfully replied that the high cost of housing is not due to high wages, but to the financing methods imposed by the banking fraternity.

In its final analysis Mr. Greenfelder advanced the unthinkable and reactionary policy of ascertaining the lowest wage scale which employers are able to impose upon their workers, and then slash all other wages to that level in order to equalize the house-buying power of the masses.

Progress consists in raising, not lowering, wages and living standards. The house-buying ability of the low-wage workers must be made possible not by reducing other workers to their economic level, but by raising their wages and buying power to higher levels.

It is no wonder that Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, recovery administrator, at the conclusion of the hearing appointed a committee with two labor representatives to redraft the construction industry code so that it will not reflect Mr. Greenfelder's subversive labor policy.

Labor-Displacing Machinery

A new interpretation of the relationship of labor-displacing machinery to the workers whose jobs are destroyed and to general social progress is raised by the proposal of President I. M. Ornburn, of the Cigar Makers' International union, that a tax be placed on machines to provide a fund to assist in sustaining the jobless workers until they are absorbed in other industries.

> The machine, if introduced merely for the sake of saving labor without regard to the repercussion of this saving upon the general welfare, is now well understood to be an enemy. If, on the other hand, it is introduced in an orderly and responsible manner, it may well be looked upon by all as a friend.
> As labor has often said, we must make a servant of the machine instead of allowing it to become a master over our economic destiny.
> There is no greater tyranny than that exercised by wholly impersonal forces once they have escaped control. Once the dislocations brought about by them become set, they cannot be corrected without great and painful effort. Therefore, the sooner the effort is made the less it will cost.

Step by step organized labor's contention that machinery in production must be brought under social control to protect the right of all workers to earn a living is marching ahead with an emphasis that will brook no retreat.

New Fleecing Scheme

Applicants for jobs in a new clothing factory at Dickson, Tenn., are asked to sign an agreement to pay 6 per cent of their weekly wages to the town of Dickson if they obtain work. The applicant must give his age, residence, name as many as three merchants with whom he trades and tell where he will live while working at the factory. Furthermore, the applicant agrees to trade in Dickson and "support all its commercial interests." The factory building, which is to be occupied by a firm from Scranton, Pa., was put up by the town of Dickson.

This is something new in this supposed land of liberty. Apparently the town is out to teach a thing or two to other localities in holding the worker to his job and making his "support" the town in which he is employed. One wonders what the national recovery administration will think of the Dickson scheme.

The Duke Millions

Much slush has been appearing in the daily newspapers about Miss Doris Duke, called the richest girl in the world. Miss Duke, daughter of the late James B. Duke, tobacco magnate, came into fossession of some $30,000,000 on her 21st birthday, on Nov. 22. She has "five palatial homes, a corps of servants and every luxury that wealth can bring," to quote the tabloids.

How much better it would have been if Miss Duke's father had left her less and during his lifetime given more to his employes and to the farmers who raised the tobacco used in his factories. His daughter has many, many more millions of dollars than she has any use for. Distributed in the form of higher wages among the Duke employes and in the form of higher prices for tobacco, the money would have been productive of infinitely more good to society.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Great was the beating of tom-toms when Dr. O. M. W. Sprague resigned as a United States treasury factotum. Here was a big man of the world of money who took it on the lam when he couldn't have his way Unlike others who have crept away from the Roosevelt cyclone, he didn't go quietly out into the night. He made a big noise and the big noise newspapers helped make the welkin ring.

Soon Mr. Sprague will be a forgotten man. But let us not forget what the thing means. Sprague is a man among big money men. The newspapers talk about sound money, but really it's big money they mean. That's what Mr. Sprague means, too, little lambs. Big money with a capital B and a capital M.

There is every reason to believe that Dr. Sprague's important friends are in Wall Street. It is clear they are not in the White House. It is clear that this event draws to a finer point the bitter hostility between Wall Street and Roosevelt. The nation isn't paying enough attention to that hostility.

Unless all signs are wrong, the present occupant of the White House is determined to shear Wall Street of its power to rule American industry and politics. In other words, he intends to give Wall Street a sharp cleave across the neck, completely severing the head. Wall Street is just about dead now and doesn't know it.

Thumbs are down on excess profits, unlicensed privilege and the general whoopee with which Wall Street got that way. Unless that is considered along with the Sprague exit the story isn't half unfolded.

Labor is for sound money, too. Make no mistake about that. Labor wants no tin dimes or shrinking dollars. Labor's trouble has been to get enough good dollars to be good for anything. But labor has no intention of being tricked into worrying about the fate of sound money just because a Wall Streeter doesn't stick around to see the new deal worked out.

Unquestionably Wall Street is shedding tears in the hope that it will create an example for the rest of us, so that we will dig in and help the Royal Gorge of New York save its bacon. Capitalists have always tried to put a square cap on labor's head, to make him look like that kind of a blockhead, but it just doesn't work out that way. Labor is wiser than its foes give it credit for being.

RETAILERS ARE WARNED NOT TO VIOLATE CODE

New York, Nov. 29.—Retailers of New York City were warned by Grover Whalen, local NRA chairman, that violations of the NRA retail code "are severely punishable." Speaking at a dinner in his honor by the Retail Stores Executives association, he explained that the retail code authority will not be "a prosecuting agency" and that "our primary concern is compliance, not conviction." He added:

"At the same time I want the retailers of the city to know that we will countenance no wilful violation of the code. Anybody who violates the code is committing a crime against the retail business and against the people of the United States. Need I add that violations are severely punishable?"

Taking a vigorous slam at profiteers who attempt to cloak the anti-social activities behind the Blue Eagle, he said:

"I suppose the chiselers, like other violators of the law, will always be with us. And I am glad that Gen. Hugh S. Johnson is going after them. I know that the general in that customary way of his, which has become famous, is going to take for a ride some of the retail hijackers who have been boosting prices beyond reason. More power to him."

Washington, Nov. 23.—Labor has begun a fight to secure incorporation in NRA codes of the principle that provision be made for workers displaced by introduction of machinery.

The issue was raised by the Cigar Makers' International union at a hearing on the proposed code for the cigar manufacturing industry and immediately was given the strong support of President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Green notified President I. M. Ornburn, of the Cigar Makers, that he would do everything possible to back the union's proposal for meeting the problems of technological unemployment by regulated contributions from the profits earned by machines.

The Cigar Makers' union is calling for contributions from machine to carry workers "through the period of readjustment and replacement," though not to pension displaced workers permanently.

"I do not see," said Mr. Green, "how the administration can fail to see the wisdom of the proposal, which makes human needs, rather than machine capacity, the measuring stick of industry.

"The Cigar Makers' International union deserves and will have the full support of all labor in the effort to win recognition, in codes, of the principle that the so-called labor-saving effected by machine operation be spread among the workers, so that unemployment and poverty shall not be the one striking result of invention and mechanical progress. Mechanization of the cigar and cigarette industries has been responsible for swollen profits and for poverty-stricken workers."

Wisdom

The race of mankind would perish did they cease to aid each other. We cannot exist without mutual help. All therefore that need aid have a right to ask it from their fellowmen; and no one who has the power of granting can refuse it without guilt.—Walter Scott.

Rain and Colder

Editor Labor World:

You know that I am nothing if not scientific. (And I haven't been scientific much lately!) And I've been sitting around so much that I began to think of the appalling frequency with which the days rolled around and passed away, and of just where all the rush was carrying us all. And that brought up the idea of just how far a person really traveled in the course of twelve months if he sat perfectly still in a chair and did not leave his room. You'd be surprised! So I called up Mr. Clarence Jones, who is an architect by trade, and an astronomer for the fun he can get out of it, to get a few distances that only an astronomer knows, and he very kindly supplied them to me. I did the calculations myself, so I can't guarantee they are exact, but they are approximately right. I feel sure plenty to give you and your beloved readers something to thing about! To begin with, every day of twenty-four hours we travel clear around the earth in this latitude, a distance of approximately 21,000 miles, and in one year that equals 7,665,000 miles. During that twelve months the earth has made a complete trip around the sun on its orbit, which is double the distance to the sun, plus the sun's diameter, in decimals, which is 186,886,000 miles, which we multiply by 3.1416 (approximately 3. 1/7), to the circumference of 587,373,000 miles, that the earth travels on its orbit about the sun. At the same time the sun, carrying with it all its planets, is traveling through space towards the star Arcturus, or the North star, at a conservative rate of only twelve miles a second, which is only about three-fifths as fast as the earth travels around the sun, and in the course of a year this will amount to 378,691,200 miles, which gives us a grand total for the year of 973,729,200 miles, which, in fact, is not nearly exact, because, of course, the earth must make a long spiral course about the sun as it travels to the north three-fifths as far as the earth travels about the sun, which would add many million miles. But we have enough, heaven knows! to satisfy any man for a year's travel. When we sum up the total of daily trips around the earth, one grand circuit around the sun and our progress to the north and get 973,729,200 miles which, while not as fast as a radio wave, is certainly going some! And when I stop to think that I have traveled each an appalling number of miles every year since I was born, it sets me to wondering just where I was then and just where we are all heading for in such an "alfired rush."

Now, there is another number of miles we should add to this grand total, because of the fact that the earth's orbit about the sun is not a circle but an elipse, and during our summertime the earth is much farther from the sun than in winter, which probably accounts for the Arctic region being so much colder than our Arctic regions, as it is winter down there during our summer here.

So with many thanks to Mr. Clarence Jones for his kindly information as to distances, I leave it with you, only hoping you don't fall off and get left in the rush before we get there.

Yours hopefully and with much love,

H. F. B.

INJUNCTIONS IN LABOR DISPUTES ARE SCORED

New York, Nov. 23.—The general use of injunctions to break strikes was attacked here by representatives of the American Civil Liberties union and others at a hearing held by the state commission on the administration of justice of which Senator John L. Buckley is chairman. The purpose of the commission is to recommend legislation on the subject.

Testimony was given by Louis Waldman, attorney for many unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and state chairman of the socialist party; Karl N. Llewellyn, law professor, Columbia University Law school; Paul F. Brissenden, assistant professor of economics, Columbia university; O. E. Fraenkel and Phillip Wittenberg, all representing the Civil Liberties union.

Matthew Woll, a vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, announced that he would file a brief with the commission.

Mr. Waldeman directed the attention of the commission to many cases in which he alleged that judges construed injunctions and subsequent contempt proceedings to work definite injustice and pronounced hardship on labor organizations during strikes. As remedies he urged state legislation similar to the Norris-LaGuardia federal act and trial by jury instead of before judges in contempt cases.

Prof. Llewellyn and Mr. Wittenberg supported Mr. Waldman's views.

Prof. Brissenden placed before the commission statistics showing the manner in which the injunction is used to favor employers in labor controversies.

The suggestion that employers be held responsible for damages in labor disputes was made by Mr. Fraenkel.

Philadelphia Judge Allows Union Use of One Picket

Philadelphia.—Judge Kun in court of common pleas No. 1 granted a preliminary injunction against the Kosher Butcher Workers' Local No. 101 and restricted the union to the use of one picket at a time in front of the meat shop of Minnie Rutberg.

The court held that the presence of more than one picket at a time in front of the shop would be an "unfair and unwarranted interference with the rights of the plaintiff."

NATIONAL LABOR BOARD ENDS PITTSBURGH BAKERS' STRIKE

Washington, Nov. 17.—Senator Robert F. Wagner, chairman of the national labor board, announced settlement of the strike called in the plants of the Ward Baking company and the Bauer Bros. Bakery, both of Pittsburgh, Pa.

About 500 workers were immediately involved in the strike which, it was feared, would spread to about 5,000 workers in all other Pittsburgh bakery plants. It was agreed that the strike was to be called off at once and all employes returned to work without discrimination.

It was also agreed that the company will negotiate for wages, hours and working conditions with representatives elected by the workers on Oct. 12 and with the union officials of Local Union 485 of the Bakery Wagon Drivers, Chauffeurs and Helpers, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs and Helpers, and of Local No. 12 of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers' International union, representing their members.

UNION SECRETARY DEAD.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—George Jones, secretary of Local Union 33, Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers' International union, died here recently. Mr. Jones, who was a veteran trades unionist, had attended many conventions of his union and the American Federation of Labor. Though in poor health, he attended the last A. F. of L. convention in Washington to witness the dedication of the Gompers memorial.

Financial Assistance Asked For Austrian Trade Unions

London, Eng.—The General Council of the Trades Union congress decided to open a fund for the assistance of Austrian trade unionists.

A statement issued by the council said the Austrian trade unions "are threatened with destruction." The council opened the fun with a contribution and appealed to the individual unions throughout Great Britain to give it their support.

TEXTILE WORKERS' STRIKE IN AUGUSTA AREA SETTLED

Augusta.—Striking workers in textile mills in Augusta and the neighboring Horse Creek valley of South Carolina have returned to work, as a result of an agreement reached between operators and strike leaders following conferences with representatives of the National Cotton-Textile Industrial relations board. The settlement provided for re-employment of all strikers without discrimination except for "acts of sabotage or violence."

H. F. Broening, Baltimore Labor Leader, Dies at 52

Baltimore, Md.—Henry F. Broening, prominent trade unionist and president of the Baltimore Federation of Labor for twelve years, died here on Nov. 9. He was in his fifty-third year.

Mr. Broening was a member of the Baltimore local of the International Union of Journeymen Horseshoers of the United States and Canada. He had been an active member of his trade since his youth and had devoted his talents to the furtherance of the trade union movement.

He was a member of the Maryland legislature, a member of the national recovery administration adjustment committee, and had been giving himself unsparingly to activities in support of NRA principles.

Hosiery Workers Call on Nation To Support NRA

Declare Act Has Benefited Labor—Urges Unions to Fight Attacks on Law.

Philadelphia, Nov. 23.—Close to 60,000 hosiery workers throughout the United States, ranked under the banner of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, are chalking up substantial gains under NRA.

They cited its effects in speeding up industry, spreading buying power and winning for them increased wages and decreased hours, in a resolution passed by the national executive board of the federation at a three-day meeting at national headquarters here.

The resolution declared that the recovery act has had generally beneficial effects in the hosiery industry, pointed out that an organized attack is now being made on the act and called upon all hosiery workers and the public to rally to the support of the act and protest against any tampering with its provisions or weakening of its administration. The resolution further called upon labor to undertake a campaign of education to win support for the act and to "strengthen and make more effective the regulation of industry in the interests of the workers, the legitimate employers and the community as a whole."

Attempts by special finishing plants to avoid teeth of the code for the hosiery industry as far as wages and working hours are concerned were scored by the executive board. These specialized finishing plants are trying to push a code of their own with wages lower than those for finishing in the hosiery code, and with hours longer.

To kill these "chiseling" activities of the finishing plants, the board decided to begin an intensive drive to organize the finishing plant workers.

Five organizers, it was decided, will be assigned to North Carolina to start a drive to force labor wages there up to a par with wages earned by northern workers. The efforts of the Reading workers to preserve their organization and to further its struggle were indorsed and the federation will lend moral and financial support to the Reading workers.

SENATOR WAGNER TO REMAIN AS LABOR BOARD CHAIRMAN

Washington, Nov. 23. — Senator Robert F. Wagner, chairman of the national labor board of the NRA, has announced that he will not resign the chairmanship when congress convenes.

That the principal congressional champion of the recovery act has decided to stay with the job of adjusting labor disputes is interpreted to mean that the president has asked him to remain. Senator Wagner has answered all similar queries in the past by saying that his senatorial duties would require his full attention when congress meets.

LABOR REPRESENTATIVES ON ALL CODE AUTHORITIES AND POLICY BOARDS URGED BY PRES. GREEN

A. F. of L. Chief Holds That the "New Deal" Partnership of Industry, Labor and the Government Is Not a Real Partnership With Labor Barred from Administrative Functions.

Washington, Nov. 29.—In a statement upholding the request of the NRA labor board, of which he is a member, for labor representation on all code authorities, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, issued a statement in which he declared that labor was resentful because it has had to fight for even minimum representation on code administrative boards. Mr. Green's statement follows:

"Labor is as much interested in securing representation upon code authority organizations, labor policy boards and industrial relations boards set up in connection with the administration of industrial codes of fair practice as it is in securing favorable minimum rates of pay and shorter hours of employment.

"Labor holds that if there is to be a partnership between industry, labor and the government, each partner should be treated with equal consideration. The success of the industrial recovery act depends upon cooperation on the part of three partners—the government, industry and labor.

"At the present moment labor is resentful over the fact that it has to fight for even the minimum representation upon boards and administrative organizations created for the purpose of administering industrial codes for fair practice.

"Specifically, labor holds that a duly accredited, publicly known representative of labor should be on the code authority of the bituminous coal code and labor should be adequately represented upon all other administrative boards created for the purpose of administering the bituminous coal code.

"Labor will continue to contend vigorously for appointment upon code authority committees, upon industrial relations boards and upon all other boards having to do with the administration of industrial codes of fair practice."

$100,000,000 FOR UNITED STATES SLUM ELIMINATION WORK

Washington, Nov. 30.—Ignoring the opposition of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States to the use of funds by the federal public works administration to finance business projects designed to compete with private enterprise, the newly organized Federal Emergency Housing corporattion has approved allotment of $100,000 for slum clearance and low-rental housing projects.

Secretary of the Interior Ickes, in his capacity as public works administrator and president of the Federal Housing corporation, announced the allocation of the fund and the first project under consideration — a $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 enterprise of slum clearance to be undertaken in Detroit.

The decision of the public works administration, as indicated by Secretary Ickes, amounted to direct reply to the recent resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, recommending that the public works administration "announce a policy against such use of federal funds." While Secretary Ickes has insisted that the government's housing corporation does not intend to compete with private industry in the real estate and construction business, he believes many things can be done which would not be done if left to private or semi-public enterprise.

It is planned to spend between $3,000,000 and not more than $4,000,000 on the Detroit project designed to provide $6.30 a month rooms, which would serve as a demonstration of what the federal government can do in the low-cost housing field.

Green Denounces Exploitation of Laundry Workers

Labor Head Scores Evil Conditions in Industry and Calls for Code Maximum 35-Hour Week.

Washington, Nov. 30.—Fireworks flared up in the hearing on the laundry industry code when President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, attacked the "bitter and ruthless competition, complete lack of regulation, and merciless exploitation of workers" in the industry.

President Green said a 30-hour week must be established for all industry and presented recommendations for a laundry code calling for (1) 35-hour maximum work week; (2) time and one-half for overtime; (3) waiting time of employes to be counted as working time; (4) abolition of all wage differentials based on geographical location or sex; (5) minimum wage of 40 cents per hour for plant employes, 65 cents per hour, engineers, firemen and maintenance employes, $15 per week for deliverymen and $16 for office employes.

Referring to wages, Green said "it is incredible that I have to come here today to present arguments against a minimum wage as low as 14 cents per hour."

The code proposed by the laundry industry would establish geographical division of six territories with wages ranging from 14 cents per hour to 50 cents per hour. Objections to this were made by representatives of National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and by social agencies, who asserted it was impractical and unjust. A maximum work week of forty-five hours would be set. Re-employment in the industry since the president's re-employment agreement has meant addition of 15,000 workers, testimony showed.

The talking movies have a never-ending possibility, but we shudder to think of a slow motion picture of a man stuttering.

"Sound Your A"

Which, Interpreted, Means Here's the Latest Dope on the Musicians

By GEORGE RODGERS

Hello, everybody. I just want to call your attention to the annual meeting this Sunday. It is most vital that each and every member be there, as a brief resume of the year's activities will be discussed, and last, but not least, the election of officers for the following year. Therefore, let me urge that you all be there.

Taken as a whole, the music business has been much better in '33 than it was before the days of codes and Hoover. The great majority of our members have enjoyed much more work this year than last. Of course, the dance bands have done the great majority of the work, with some few theater engagements thrown in. Nonunion competition has not been quite so keen in the dance field, but as long as we have musicians I guess we will have that.

The theater managements seem to be much more interested in the return to the flesh. In fact, "Green Pastures" played to a capacity house, and I imagine there will be some few road shows playing our leading houses during the winter season, which leads up to the fact that there will be work for some of our members. Also, the dance bands seem to be getting their share of work with the holiday season coming on. So, all in all, 1933 will not have been such a bad year after all.

There are five Plymouth automobiles in Jimmy Cox's orchestra: One owned by Mom O'Neal, one owned by Burkhart-Schier Chemical company, the rest owned by Jimmy Cox, Cub Buchanan, J. T. Holdam, and the Citizens Auto company being the principal owner of the latter three. . . George Ryerson's arrangement of "Spanish Jungle" is the nuts. Ralph Miller is playing third sax—I wonder if he still has that head lick. . . The writer has a standing bet with Neal Peak that every time he plays the trombone in "Smoke Rings" I buy a bottle of beer and every time he flubs it, Peak pays off. I haven't bought one yet. Give the boy time, he is a prima donna, you know. . . Did you ever see Harold Cadek take off on a cello? Don't think he can't. . . Lester Cohn's interest in music still remains with his first love, the cash register at the Violet studio. His conception of "Sophisticated Lady" is like absolutely nobody else's—I don't know whether he can still go for an opus or not. . . Herman Dodd has a big guitar with two strings lost. Anyone finding same will be rewarded to keep them. . . Frank Worthy is trying to get well with a non-union orchestra. . . See you Sunday at 10:30. . . Don't forget if you are not there it will cost you a buck. . . Bet we have the best attendance of the year.

Prentiss Terry, of the department of commerce, asserted that "If all the employers of this country had done what Mr. Axton has we wouldn't have the code troubles we do. The only thing that has gone down in this plant is the hours of labor."

R. E. S. Woolsey, representing Louisville bankers, said that if the business leaders of the country were all of the same type as Colonel Axton "we would not have had this terrible situation."

WEAVERS STRIKE AGAINST SIXTY-LOOM STRETCH-OUT

Fall River, Mass.—Weavers in the plant of the American Printing company here struck against the determination of the company officials to install the stretch-out system whereby each weaver was assigned sixty automatic looms.

Nathan Lurfee, vice-president of the company, stated that he could not compete with other mills on any lower basis than sixty looms per weaver, and intimated that the mill would remain closed unless the weavers complied with that rule.

SEE INCREASED PRICE FOR ICE 'AFTER THE WAR'

Local Citizens Predict High Rates Next Summer.

NO MONOPOLY YET ON PRICE OF COAL

Probability that the people of Chattanooga will pay 60 cents, or possibly more, per hundred for ice next summer is seen by many in the sudden 50 per cent cut in prices locally initiated this week.

The "larger companies," the daily papers tell us, explained the "ice war" was forced on them in order that they might "meet competition." Local citizens hold, however, that competition in the ice business in Chattanooga is more or less a joke, and the latest farce termed an "ice war" will hardly be taken seriously by many, as such.

Chattanoogans see in the situation, however, one bright feature. No one corporation has a monopoly on the price of coal, and there are many different retailers from whom to choose when purchasing this commodity. It was also remarked this week that both gas and electric refrigerators are still being sold in Chattanooga, with prices for these modern household additions lower than ever before, and which may now be bought on easy-payment plans which are declared to make the ultimate price of ice much cheaper to the householder.

The Atlantic Ice and Coal corporation, "one of the larger companies" (no foolin'), as the name implies, sells both ice and coal in Chattanooga and throughout the southeast, under various names of subsidiaries. The Atlantic company also is said to have distribution rights throughout this territory for Lion Pilsener beer.

The Atlantic company and its subsidiary, the Southeastern Brewing company, were several weeks ago declared "unfair to organized labor," after officials of the concern had allegedly "soft-soaped" local workers while a bottling plant for the beer was being erected by non-union workers.

The organized labor movement, however, had no part in the incident in which the local NRA compliance board forced the great corporation to pay back time to a worker who had received less than the code price set for labor.

Representatitves of the Atlantic corporation, which has general headquarters in Atlanta, are said to have boasted that the concern is a "two and one-half million dollar" corporation, and that it intends to do business in Chattanooga, and "make the people like its methods."

Labor men are wondering if the people of Chattanooga will give three cheers for the chain corporation if and when the price of ice is hoisted to 60 or 75 cents per hundred, "after the war."

Secretary T. R. Cuthbert, of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, this week addressed a letter to each state federation and city central body in the territory where the Atlantic operates, notifying working people of the attitude of the concern toward local labor.

Dairy Workers Change Schedule

The Labor World is asked to announce that the Dairy Workers' local union has changed its schedule of meetings, and instead of assembling weekly, as in the past, the organization will in future meet each second and fourth Tuesday night in the month, at Roosevelt hall.

It was said that many details incident to getting the local started to functioning have been attended to, and the twice-monthly schedule will be sufficient to carry on the business of the union.

3,000,000 Hired On Public Works, Ickes Estimates

Washington, Dec. 7.—The $3,300,000 federal public works fund is now giving employment, directly and indirectly, to about 3,000,000 men, Harold I. Ickes, secretary of the interior and public works administrator, reports.

Secretary Ickes showed "by actual count" the number of workers and the projects on which they are engaged under the public works fund.

"The facts speak for themselves," the secretary said. "Nobody can intelligently appraise the public works program without studying these figures."

Steady Rise in Workers.

Steady, continuous increase in the number of men called from relief rolls to payrolls and in the amount of work actually started and the value of contracts awarded was disclosed in a series of tabulations covering the period from October 5 to November 25.

It was estimated that the total of those directly and indirectly employed on Nov. 25 on PWA projects had risen to 1,462,470, "with the figure mounting daily." The administrator's statement added:

"Including 1,183,267 employed by the civil works administration under an allotment of $400,000,000 from the public works fund and also of 347,623 of all classes employed under the civilian conservation corps now financed by PWA, 2,998,360 men are now working under PWA allotments, the best carefully checked reports to the administrator showed at the end of November.

"The figure now being watched most closely by PWA—that showing employment on strictly federal construction projects—for the past seven weeks had a continuous, steady rise of from 6 per cent to 13 per cent increase over each previous week and a cumulative percentage of increase of 195 per cent."

Deceased Members Paid High Tribute

At the regular monthly meeting of Chattanooga Typographical union last Sunday afternoon the following resolutions, offering tribute to Frank J. Weber and John Tinker, long-time valued members who had passed away during the past month, were passed:

Whereas, on Nov. 5 Frank J. Weber, aged 72, and on Nov. 24 John Tinker, aged 62, members of Chattanooga Typographical union, No. 89, passed from this life; and,

Whereas, for many years these two brothers were true and active members of our union; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we hereby express our deep sense of loss in their deaths.

Brother Weber gave his best thought and endeavor to help the organization and was especially noted for his sympathy and aid to members in distress. While not ambitious to hold official position his advice and assistance in matters of interest and for the benefit of the union was sought and appreciated by members and officials.

Brother John Tinker was for many years an outstanding official, serving as president and in many other official capacities with credit to himself and for the benefit and honor of the organization. He was prominent and efficient particularly in fraternal and civic bodies and the community mourns his loss.

These two brothers labored long years and have left enviable records which will inspire many others to do their best for the organization.

Resolved, That we hereby tender to the surviving relatives of our deceased brothers our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on our minutes, a copy furnished the families of our deceased brothers and a copy be given The Labor World for publication.

Roosevelt NRA Plan Has Full Support Of AFL, Says Green

A. F. of F. Chief Tells Detroit Audience That Those Who Own and Control Industry Are Responsible For the Millions of Jobless—Old Jungle Method of Production Is Abolished and a New Order Established.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 6.—"I hold that if there is any one right which should be recognized above every other right—a right that is inherent, a right that is personal, a right that ought to have been incorporated in the Declaration of Independence when it said that the men and women of this nation are entitled to the right to enjoy life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—it is the right to work.

"I would amend that declaration, if I were writing it now, by stating that men and women, in addition, have the right to earn a decent living."

The enunciation of this militant principle by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, is an address in the Naval Armory here under the auspices of the Detroit Federation of Labor, brought forth prolonged applause from the vast audience which filled the hall.

The entire assemblage, in which there were many automobile workers, organized and unorganized, sensed that the progressive position taken by the head of the A. F. of L. constituted a profound challenge to the economic policies applied by those who own and control American industry, for it was these policies which since 1929 have thrown millions of working men and women into the army of the unemployed and imposed upon them and their families a degree of suffering and destitution which not only is an outstanding disgrace to American institutions but a deep indictment of the "rugged individualists" who even now persist in attempting to revitalize these suversive policies and thus throw society back into the economic jungle from which it is gradually extricating itself under the "new deal."

Complete Support for Roosevelt.

Mr. Green followed this significant statement with the declaration that American institutions have been saved from chaos by the appropriation of $500,000,000 of federal funds for the relief of unemployment and the enactment of the national industrial recovery act, and pledged the unalloyed support of the millions of workers in the A. F. of L. to President Roosevelt in his transcendent efforts "to do something for the masses of the people."

Unemployment Crisis.

"Imagine what would have been the situation if we had no national recovery act this winter," he said. "Suppose we faced the rigors of this winter under the old order. Suppose there were still fourteen millions idle and the credit of our cities impaired, our taxpayers taxed beyond their ability to pay, impoverishing them, no money for food?

"What would have happened in every city with hungry men and women suffering for food? Would we not have had a most terrible condition in every city, town and community throughout the nation?

NRA Saved Social System.

"I say to you that every thinking American, everyone who appreciates the seriousness of the situation as it is developed, might well thank Almighty God that congress passed the national recovery act and subsidiary measures when they did in order to save our social system.

4,000,000 Idle Get Jobs.

"Since March 4 armies of unemployed have been marching back to work. An army of four million is a pretty good sized army. Our figures, not the figures of the government, the figures of the American Federation of Labor, figures which we have checked and double checked, as Andy and Amos say, figures that we have proven, show that four million men and women have gone back to work since last March.

"In addition the purchasing power of the nation has been lifted from 15 to 20 per cent. That means that the people can buy more and that means that business is going to improve. More goods are to be sold. People will be able to pay their debts better. The volume of business and the sale of goods will increase and slowly, surely, progressively.

Back Up the President.

"In my judgment, if we stand shoulder to shoulder, behind our great president, Mr. Roosevelt, we are going to march out of this depression into the employment of a better day and a better life.

"I have no patience with those who condemn and find fault with the national recovery act. Labor has not fared perfectly under it. We have complaints to make—many of them. We have not gotten all out of it that we hoped for or that we were entitled to, but the friends of labor, the masses of the people, are not going to condemn the national recovery act because it does not bring us over night all that we think we are entitled to.

"The American Federation of Labor and its hosts, the millions of workers whom it has the honor to represent, are going to stand behind a great fighting leader, a great president of the United States who actually is trying to do something for the masses of the people.

Apostles of Misery and Despair.

"I have heard these criticisms coming from captains of industry, from those who chafe under the restraint, those who want to go back to the old order, those who believe that the fact that government is making them behave themselves is a transgression upon the rights of capital.

"Many of their statements read like the lamentations of Jeremiah, the prophet of old, and like the advice given by the three pretending friends who advised the persecuted Job to curse God and die. They represent the hosts of misery and despair.

"We are in the army of progress, the army of hope and we are going to fight on until we overcome this terrible condition of unemployment."

Employers Responsible for Jobless.

Mr. Green's impatience with industrial magnates who do not give wholehearted support to the recovery act was accentuated by their gross failure in the management of industry which resulted in unemployment for millions of workers.

"I do not think they made a good record for themselves," he said. "It does not seem that they were able to manage their own business in a proper way.

"I do not think that the fact that there were fourteen million unemployed workers in the United States for two or three years is very complimentary to management.

Impotency of Management.

"Labor waited patiently for management to find a remedy. They admitted their impotency and their helplessness.

"They brought us into a fine mess, didn't they? Behold the picture! Industry managing itself — conditions becoming worse, millions of unemployed, profits vanishing, dividends wiped out, stockholders losing their money.

"Labor was not blamed for that because labor had no voice in management. It was their own picnic. They managed it. They were responsible for it. They owned industry. They would not allow labor to help them. They resented every recommendation labor made for improvement of economic and employment conditions."

Johnson Agrees To Give Workers Representation

Washington, Dec. 7.—Labor has won its fight for representation on NRA code boards. At a conference with members of the NRA labor advisory board, Gen. Johnson, recovery administrator, approved the principle of labor representation on code authorities.

Agreement of Gen. Johnson to labor's demand came as the climax to a vigorous fight for representation waged since the American Federation of Labor convention here in October. The convention strongly championed the naming of labor representatives on all NRA boards and agencies.

The first appointment under the new ruling will probably be that of John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, as one of three government representatives at large on the national bituminous coal industrial board.

Gen. Johnson has hitherto been opposed to labor representation on code authorities, it is said, though at the A. F. of L. convention he discussed the responsibility of labor under the NRA and promised that it would be consulted on every phase of code-making and enforcement. At the conference with the labor advisory board, the administrator made known his change of mind and gave his views on labor's proposal. A formula will be worked out by the board for his approval.

It is reported that Gen. Johnson mentioned several objections to labor's proposal, one of them being that if labor received a place on code authorities, valuable patent rights and trade secrets might come under the scrutiny of persons not directly engaged in a particular industry.

President Lewis is said to have inquired what trade secrets the coal operators had that were not known to the union representatives.

Washington, Dec. 7. — President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, in a vigorous criticism of the National Recovery Administration for its failure to include labor representatives upon the industrial board of the bituminous coal code, voiced anew the demand that labor be given membership upon all boards concerned with the administration of the recovery act.

President Green's statement brought out into the open the dissension and difference of opinion between NRA officials and spokesmen of organized labor over the question of giving the workers a voice on code authority boards and committees. Secretary of Labor Perkins and other members of the cabinet supported Green's contention, as did also the NRA Labor Advisory board.

"Labor is as much interested in securing representation upon code authority organizations, labor policy boards and industrial relations boards set up in connection with the administration of industrial codes of fair practice as it is in securing favorable minimum rates of pay and shorter hours of employment," Green said in his statement.

"Labor holds that if there is to be a partnership between industry, labor and the government, each partner should be treated with equal consideration. The success of the Industrial Recovery Act depends upon cooperation on the part of the three partners, the government, industry and labor.

"At the present moment labor is resentful over the fact that it has to fight for even the minimum of representation upon boards and administrative organizations created for the purpose of administering industrial codes of fair practice. Specifically, labor holds that a duly accredited, publicly known representative of labor should be on the code authority of the bituminous coal code, and labor should be adequately represented upon all other administrative boards created for the purpose of administering the bituminous coal code."

Supporting Green's stand, the NRA Advisory Board made a formal request to General Johnson that representatives of labor be placed on all code authorities. The board also proposed the establishment of an adequate information and reporting service, joint industrial relations boards for the promotion of industrial peace and quality standards for commodities.

COURT CHECKS PRINTING AT COLLEGE PLANT

Ooltewah School Out of Commercial Field.

STUDENTS PAID 25c HOUR AS SALARY

Nine-Tenths of Such Paltry Sum Was Applied on Tuition.

In a written opinion handed down by Chief Justice Grafton Greene, of the supreme court of Tennessee, Chancellor Garvin's decision restraining the Southern Junior college from engaging in the commercial printing business was upheld and the school ordered to cease its commercial printing activities in competition with legitimate printing shops.

This school, which is located at Ooltewah, was sued by the state of Tennessee on behalf of a number of Chattanooga printers. They are operating tax-free under a general welfare charter, and it was claimed by the printers that by engaging in the commercial printing business they were openingly violating the privileges granted to them by this charter. Chancellor Garvin ruled in favor of the Chattanooga printers and the college appealed to the supreme court, with the result stated above.

Among other facts brought out in the suit, it was shown that instead of being incidental to the regular studies and activities of the school, their outside printing business had grown to such an extent that approximately two-thirds of the work done in their plant was commercial printing. The chancellor pointed out that under the circumstances (the institution being both wage and tax-free) it would only be a matter of time until regular commercial printing plants could be driven from the field should the college or similar institutions attempt to increase the size and facilities of their printing department and go after business as they had done in the past.

Another interesting fact brought out was that the college paid their students who worked in the printing department from 10c to 25c per hour and they actually only received about one-tenth of this amount in cash, the other nine-tenths of their wage (?) being credited to their tuition. Only two regular printers were employed; the other twenty or more employes of their printing plant were admitted to be students of the school.

The details of the suit were handled mainly by Neil J. Crowley, president of the Intertype Composing company, and a member of Typographical Union No. 89, and Henry L. Morris, of the Angel Printing company, a member of Pressmen's Union No. 165. The printers were represented by the law firm of Sizer, Chambliss & Kefauver, while the Southern Junior college had as its attorneys W. E. Wilkerson, who is also commissioner of education, and son, Will Allen Wilkerson.

The list of members of the official family of Local 415, as a matter of fact, looks very familiar, and it appears that the Barbers prefer experienced men to direct their work. All of those named below, who will serve with President Perry, have given long service to the organization:

Secretary—G. W. Helms.

BUILDING INDUSTRY GAINS

The construction industry in 37 states for the first half of November showed a 35 per cent gain over the same period last year, largely traceable to the Public Works program, L. Seth Schnitman, chief statistician of the F. W. Dodge corporation, reports. Contracts totaled $71,350,700, he said, a gain of ten per cent over the first half of October.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—How many charters has the American Federation of Labor granted in recent months?

Wagner Promises to Keep Eye on Levee Conditions

New York City.—Despite his taxing duties as chairman of the National Labor Board settling labor quarrels under the NRA, Senator Robert F. Wagner has promised the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to keep "a watchful eye" over any developments which might affect unfavorably the negro workers on flood control projects.

Bad Taste in Mouth, Sour Stomach

"I have suffered a great deal from biliousness and constipation," writes Mrs. D. C. Jones, of Waterloo, Ala. "When I get bilious I have a bad taste in my mouth, have sour stomach, my color is bad, and I get dizzy and feel awfully bad. I have headache constantly. When I take Black-Draught it relieves me and I feel like a new person. I don't think there is a better medicine than Black-Draught."

How Far Would You Walk?

Some months ago the labor press generally published stories to the effect that the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco company, manufacturers of Camel cigarettes and Prince Albert smoking tobacco, employed negro girls in its operations, paying as low as 10 cents per hour for labor. It was charged that the billionaire head of this corporation built a palace for a home, which included solid gold bathroom fixtures, etc.

Last week The Labor World's news columns contained a story from Louisville, Ky., quoting the head of the Axton-Fisher Tobacco company as refusing a merited salary increase, with the statement that any increased pay in his plant would begin at the bottom. The only way to get out of the depression, this gentleman held, is to increase the purchasing power of the worker ten-fold. The Axton-Fisher company did $40,000,000 business last year, and every package of cigarettes and tobacco sold contained the label of the tobacco workers' union.

Yet there still remain a few union men who will unblushingly take from their pockets a package of Camels or a can of Prince Albert.

Do That Christmas Shopping Now!

A little Washington girl, just turned 4, says, "After a few little days Christmas will be here—just a few little days." The little girl speaks truer than she knows. Nothing goes faster than time, as most persons realize when they begin to accumulate years, and Christmas will be upon us before we know it.

Which behooves all who are in a position to do any Christmas buying to get busy at once and give early assistance to Santa Claus. Unfortunately, some millions are unable to help Santa and others are able to give only a little assistance. But those who can will benefit themselves and others by doing their shopping without delay, before the last grand rush begins.

By buying now (of course, in stores that advertise in The Labor World) Christmas shoppers will have the advantage of better stocks and better attention from sales people. They will also have the advantage of an unhurried selection. Even more important, they will be helping the store clerks, who are always overworked at the height of the holiday season.

Representation on Code Authorities

The recommendation made by the Labor Advisory Board to the National Recovery Administration and by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, for adequate labor representation of all NRA code authorities and labor policy boards exemplifies such a just principle that the wonder is it was not applied when the first code was established.

NRA codes consist of two major sections. One section prohibits various forms of unfair practice which business concerns have restored to in order to swipe trade from each other. These practices run all the way from price cutting to commercial bribery. This section of the codes attempts to civilize commercial transactions, and largely concerns the owners of industry.

The other major section of the codes is the labor section. This section guarantees the right of the workers to organize into bona fide trade unions without interference from employers and establishes a number of rules the observance of which is made mandatory. These rules prohibit employers from paying less than the minimum wage rates or working employes longer hours than the code establishes, and from making company union membership compulsory as the price of a job.

In the hearings before the NRA on practically every code the organized employers, speaking through their trade associations, persistently and militantly fight adequate wage rates, decent hours, the right of the workers to organize in effective trade unions for their protection and are especially vindicative against the company union prohibition. In short, while the employers are friendly to the unfair practice section of the codes they are hostile to the labor section, the proper administration of which is of vital interest to the employes.

In view of the well-known opposition of most of the trade associations to the labor section of the codes, it seems reasonable and appropriate that to secure impartial administration of the wages and hours restrictions and right-to-organize mandates that there should be adequate labor representation on the code authorities which administer both the business and labor sections. But so far the code authorities consist almost exclusively of the trade associations, which compiled the codes without consulting the workers, organized or unorganized, modified in certain instances by the inclusion of a small voteless representation of the NRA.

This is an anomaly that should be promptly corrected. As President Green of the A. F. of L. said: "Labor holds that if there is to be a partnership between industry, labor and the Government, each party should be treated with equal consideration." This equal consideration so vital to the success of the National Recovery Act will only become a fact when labor is adequately represented on all NRA code authorities and labor policy boards.

A Relic of Feudalism

President Edward Flore, of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers and Bartenders' International Alliance, gave the unfair and unjust tipping system a well merited trouncing at the hearing on the proposed restaurant code. Denouncing a provision in the code which would virtually compel the public to pay a large proportion of the industry's wage bill, Mr. Flore said:

"This organization would prefer above all things that the tipping system be abolished entirely and we should be glad to cooperate to that end. It is a relic of feudalism, a disgraceful thing, an unfair practice. We would prefer a fair and directly paid wage. No such wage is proposed and we despair of being able to secure it at this time. But in its absence it is the heighth of unfairness to propose that those who have been compelled to depend upon tips for their living should not be deprived of that necessary sustenance by an industry which has throughout its whole history recognized and fostered that system."

The tipping system has no place among free men, yet it endures because of the medieval outlook of the restaurant and hotel industry. The proposal denounced by Mr. Flore provides that gratuities shall be deducted from the amount of the minimum wage until 50 per cent. of the minimum wage shall have been deducted. This means that the public would pay half of the minimum wage. This is an astounding proposal, which deserves no consideration from the NRA.

The Labor World joins many friends, particularly among the newspaper fraternity and the older trades unionists, in offering sincere condolences to the bereaved relatives of Mrs. Nell Rogers Donley, who passed away Tuesday following a brief illness. Mrs. Donley was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Rogers. Mr. Rogers, formerly an active trade unionist, has for many years been connected with the editorial department of the Times. Emmett R. Rogers, connected with the Tivoli theater, is a brother of Mrs. Donley.

What Next!

A new food substance, an extract from whale flesh meat, suitable for making soups, is expected to appear soon on the market in Norway and other countries as the result of a new process for preparing such extracts developed by a Norwegian chemist. A report to the American Chemical society recently showed that the extract can be made for about three cents a pound.

WHY THE CLOSED SHOP

An Editorial in the Philadelphia Record.

What is a closed shop?

A closed shop is a factory, mine or business in which all employes belong to a particular union and bargain with their employers through that union.

What is an open shop?

An open shop is a factory, mine or business in which employes—theoretically—have the right to bargain collectively through any one of several independent unions, through a company union, or individually.

Why use the word "theoretically?"

Because—except under the most unusual and exceptional circumstances—an independent union cannot survive in an open shop.

What is the result of an open shop?

Why is it impossible for an independent union to maintain itself in an open shop?

Because the employer's power to hire non-union men and fire union men enables him to wreck the union whenever he so chooses.

Because, even if the union were successful in obtaining better wage and working conditions in that particular business, the union could not maintain itself.

Every labor organization needs money to pay the salaries of its officers so they may be independent of the employer with whom they bargain; so that it may provide sick benefits; so that it may be able to take care of members during unemployment; so that it may build up reserves in case of strike.

Where workers can obtain the benefits of the union in an open shop without membership and without paying dues, many of them will not support the union.

The union, without financial support, will be too weak to maintain the balance between capital and labor.

Why are unions necessary?

Because an individual worker cannot hope to "bargain" with a giant corporation, wielding great political influence, retaining the best of legal talent, and having a great labor market at its disposal.

Only by uniting can the workers in any way bargain on equal grounds with the vast industries of the modern world.

Why are independent unions necessary?

Because there must be two parties to a real bargain.

Legal trials would be farcical if one side chose or controlled the lawyers for the other.

If there is to be true bargaining, both sides must be independent of each other.

Company unions are a contradiction in terms.

They represent the company. They are under the company's thumb.

The company cannot "bargain" with itself on behalf of its workers, any more than a lawyer can represent two sides in a suit.

Why is independent unionization so necessary now?

Because under the national industrial recovery act, industry is organized and competition is greatly restricted.

If the consumer and the worker and the nation as a whole are not to suffer from the removal of these older competitive safeguards, there must be new safeguards.

These safeguards are to be found in government supervision, in consumer representation on code authorities, and above all in 100 per cent organization of labor in independent unions.

If all power drifts into the hands of the trade associations, as Swope and Gen. Johnson propose, consumers, workers and nation will be at the mercy of great trusts.

Just as our political government was wisely established on a basis of checks and balances, with congress pitted against president and supreme court against both, so we must have checks and balances in our economic life.

Labor and capital must be able to check each other.

Should either gain the upper hand, the result would be dictatorship.

Is the NRA helping to organize labor?

Yes and no.

It has given labor new heart by the collective bargaining clauses of the national industrial recovery act.

On the other hand, those clauses are being interpreted by Gen. Johnson and by the national labor board and by the regional labor boards in such a way as to preserve the open shop and make real unionization impossible.

How can they do that?

Because the act fails to make clear whether each worker has a right to bargain as he chooses or whether he must go along with the majority in his factory, mine or business.

But the citizen must obey the majority in politics, the stockholder must obey the majority in the corporation.

Why shouldn't the same rule apply to workers, making it impossible for a few dissenters or a minority to block genuine unionization?

Old Aunt (despondently)—Well, I will not be a nuisance to you much longer.

Nephew (reassuringly)—Don't talk like that, aunt; you know you will.

MAGAZINE WRITER BLASTS DAILY PRESS FOR ATTACKS ON N. R. A.

Real America Exposes "Freedom of Press" Howl as Fear of Decent Wage for Writers.

The fight of a large portion of the daily press on the NRA is the subject of an article entitled "Secrets of the Press," written by a newspaper man and published in the current issue of the magazine Real America. The article is a scathing attack on the press who, in the name of "freedom of the press," have tried to shake public confidence in the NRA.

A note injected into the article by the editor of the magazine says: "The fact is that the obligations of the code do not interfere with the freedom of the press, and of course the publishers know they don't. All their bombastic thundering about 'freedom of the press' was—and still is—nothing more than a black smoke screen to hide their real motive, which is to avoid paying a decent wage to their editorial staffs."

Organization of newspaper writers into unions or guilds as approved by the administration's code is advocated by Hart Gilrand, the author of the article, who writes: "Newspaper men naturally have been invited to join the American Federation of Labor during these parlous times. With its mighty organization back of them, their status would be instantly elevated to a place of power and a living wage.

"In many shops the invitation has been accepted and the writing men are now unionized. Such a method has the merit of affiliating with a powerful existing agency, as well as of being the shortest cut to the desired objective."

NORTH DAKOTA GOVERNOR HALTS EVICTIONS IN WINTER MONTHS

Bismarck, N. D., Dec. 7.—Two proclamations to prevent evictions of the "financially helpless" and the seizure of their household goods have been issued by Gov. William A. Langer.

One proclamation ordered judges, constables, sheriffs and other officers of the law to desist from making or executing any process that would dispossess or evict families during the winter. The other barred the taking of necessary household articles to satisfy debt. The orders are effective until March 1, 1934.

The anti-eviction proclamation applies to any home now occupied, whether owned and occupied under any equitable title or under lease, but it provides that tenants may be ousted if it is proved they are financially able to pay rent, in addition to taking care of themselves and family.

"To permit the cold letter of the law to operate and dispossess and evict families in this state during the cold winter months this year would amount to a public calamity, especially in the face of a situation where thousands are asking federal aid in order to live," the order said.

Previously Gov. Langer had ordered sheriffs and county auditors to "desist absolutely" from issuing foreclosure or tax deeds in all foreclosure cases affecting either farm lands or city homes.

Basic Betterment Continuing, Says A. F. of L. Survey

Washington, Dec. 7.—Basic industrial gains are continuing, the American Federation of Labor says in its monthly survey of business.

"While the president's monetary program held the center of business news in November, developments in industry have been encouraging," the survey says. It continues:

"Unemployment, which usually increases at this season, has been held close to September levels. The federation's unemployment estimate shows 10,076,000 out of work in October compared to 10,065,000 in September, and trade union reports for the first part of November show a small increase over October.

Buying Power Gains.

"Payroll totals were moving upward in October and as living costs rose only 0.1 per cent, workers' total 'real' buying power increased from 20.5 per cent (September) to 23.1 per cent (October) above the March level. Farmers' buying power also has been increased by the gain in farm prices in November and by government payments to farmers of more than $100,000,000 on agreements to reduce crops in cotton, wheat and tobacco. With these gains for the farmer, together with government hog purchases and other bonuses, the farmers' income this year is expected to be $1,500,000,000, or 30 per cent above 1932. Farmers' actual buying power, however, has risen considerably less than this, since farmers' living costs are higher than last year."

Steel Outlook Improved.

The federation's report mentions that the gains at last are beginning to reach the heavy industries, which are deemed the key to recovery. Steel production turned upward November 20 and the outlook in this basic industry has improved greatly with increased sales stepping up production.

The report devotes considerable space to a summary of the opposition to the president's gold-buying policy without commenting on the merits of the program.

The survey remarks, however, that "tampering with the currency is a very serious matter, for the buying power of a dollar is of the greatest concern to every American citizen."

Fear of Inflation Widespread.

"Lurking in everyone's mind is the fear of inflation by fiat money," the survey adds. "If we ever started to issue 'greenbacks' without gold value, in answer to demands from farm areas, an orgy of uncontrollable inflation might follow, it is feared, such as that in Germany after the war. The president's method of devaluing the dollar by stating the gold price daily differs greatly from inflation by fiat money. For fiat money has no gold value; it is worth only what people will give for it, and there is no means of control."

DOPE ON THE ELECTRICIANS

"It ain't the guns nor armament,
Nor the funds that we can pay,
But close co-operation
That makes them win the day.
It ain't the individual,
Nor the army as a whole,
But the everlastin' team-work
Of every bloomin' soul.'

Union Head Assails Cheap Labor As Detriment to Any Community

New Orleans, Dec. 7.—Speaking on the views expressed by Col. L. Kemper, chairman of the Association of Commerce's industrial bureau, which was given wide publicity by the four non-union newspapers of this city, G. Pipitone, prominent labor leader and president of the Musicians' union, says: "Col. Kemper, in attacking the national recovery act, states that it has deprived the south of a great advantage in procuring industry—cheap labor. Just where cheap labor can be an advantage to a community is something which I fail to see.

"Cheap labor—labor which can earn only enough to live, and which can spend only for food and shelter—is not an asset to any community. The very restriction imposed upon its earnings keeps it from contributing to community prosperity; the very conditions under which it must live converts it into a body which is a social problem to the community.

"Intelligent industrial heads, when interested in labor, are apt to inquire more about its skill than its price. Industrial heads, when seeking factory sites, are certain to seek good location, railroad and port facilities, cheap land, reasonable taxes, low electric and gas rates, accessibility to markets. These last to them are greater matters than the mere fact that labor can be hired for next to nothing.

"It may be asked if the sudden increase of values in real estate whenever it is learned a factory wishes a site; the public service double charge on electricity during the peak hours; advertising of labor as cheap, may not be among the reasons why we seem to fail in getting more larger industries here. With cheap labor the EZY Opener Bag company left the city. Col. Williams might devote his talent to other subjects and leave the NRA, which has done good, to get a real chance."

Relieves Women's Pains

"I was very thin and pale," writes Mrs. F. H. Scott, of Roanoke, Va. "I suffered from weakness and a severe pain in my back. This pain unnerved me, and I did not feel like doing my work. I did not care to go places, and felt worn, tired, day after day.

"My mother had taken Cardui, and on seeing my condition she advised me to try it. I have never regretted doing so. I took three bottles and it built me up. I gained in weight, my color was better and the pain left my back. I am stronger than I had been in some time."

Cardui, the purely vegetable medicine which so many women take and recommend, is sold by local druggists.

MORE ABOUT NRA PLAN

NRA Comes to the Rescue.

To meet the deplorable conditions of business anarchy brought by the sheer incapacity of the owners and controllers of industry, Mr. Green declared that congress enacted the national industrial recovery act containing a new charter for business and a new charter for labor which guaranteed the workers the right to organize in trade unions without interference from employers and banned compulsory membership in the notorious company unions.

Old Economic Order Abolished.

Declaring that the national recovery act and its administration abolishes the old economic order and sets up a new regime, Mr. Green said:

"I am one of those who firmly believe we will never return to the old order.

"America is reborn. It is being remade. The old order failed, failed completely.

"Industrial processes, management, mass production, and industrial development made failure inevitable. We cannot go back to that. We cannot return to the days of 1930, 1931, 1932. Labor in America cannot permit a return.

"A new order is here, a new deal with labor is brought into the picture.

Labor Representation on Code Authorities.

"Labor is just as much a part of the national recovery act as is industry.

"It must be represented, in my judgment, upon all code authorities, upon industrial boards, upon policy boards, upon all administrative organizations set up for the purpose of carrying out the objectives of the national recovery act.

"We are not going to cease in our efforts to secure that recognition.

Reduce Strikes to Minimum.

"Boards have been set up to which industrial disputes can be referred and for that reason strikes ought to be reduced to a minimum. Industrial warfare is wasteful. Let us refer our grievances to these boards before we go on strike rather than to go on strike and then refer our grievances to the boards.

"That is the new order, the new set-up to settle disputes in an orderly, progressive, modern way, to develop co-operation and understanding, to bring labor, government and management together in an effort to carry on this new deal.

Rugged Individualism Is Gone.

"It is here and we want to make it a vital reality. We cannot do it by practicing rugged individualism. That day has gone by never to return. Business and industry failed. Labor must be in for industry cannot succeed without labor's co-operation.

"So, my friends, workers in the automobile industry, the opportunity is here for you to unite, to do collectively what you want to do individually to bring about a more permanent realization of your hopes and aspirations to enjoy a fuller and freer life.

Happiness for the Masses.

"Through the organization of labor, through collective action, through the organization of industry and the workers, as provided for in the national recovery act, we can create a better order here.

"We can bring happiness and sunshine into the homes of the masses of the people and we can make it more profitable for them as well as for those who have their money invested in industry. Let us work together co-operating in this great, common, humane, heroic effort to bring about a realization of this great ideal."

Forbes Addresses Chattanooga Pastors

George Forbes, acting assistant postmaster, Monday morning addressed the regular weekly meeting of the Chattanooga Pastors' association at the First Methodist church.

Mr. Forbes, a guest of the ministers by invitation of the Rev. Raymond G. Sherrer, chairman of the program committee, discussed the relations of labor and the church, and outlined the aims and purposes of the American Federation of Labor.

At the conclusion of the address, the veteran local unionist invited questions concerning labor's position, and for some time answered queries from his audience covering a wide range.

The address was well received, and quite a few of the ministers offered congratulations.

NRA CUTS USUAL RISE IN TOTAL OF JOBLESS, LABOR HEAD SAYS

Unemployment Increases 11,000 from September to October, Much Less Than in Former Years, But More Than 10,000,000 Are Still Idle, President Green Reports.

Washington, Dec. 7.—Trade union reports and government employment indexes show very little change from the middle of September, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, said in making public the latest A. F. of L. unemployment report.

"Our unemployment estimate, based on government figures, shows 10,076,000 out of work in October (preliminary) as compared with 10,065,000 unemployed in September," President Green said. "This slight increase is due to the fact that although employment gained a little in October the gain was not enough to absorb those seeking work for the first time. Reports from trade unions show 21.8 per cent out of work in the first part of November, as compared with 21.7 per cent in October.

"Both these records indicate that the NRA program is keeping the employment situation under better control than is usual at this time of year. Only once since the depression began has unemployment failed to increase by at least 450,000 from September to October; the one exception was last year with its October business increase.

Part-Time Work Gains.

"In November, trade union reports have always (since 1928) shown an unemployment increase; often the increase affected at least 1 per cent of the membership or more. The effort of employers to keep their men at work, even if only part time, is indicated by union part-time figures which have shown an increase in part-time work in both October and November. The number of union members on part-time has risen from 20 per cent in September to 21 per cent in October and 22 per cent in November.

"Average wages increased somewhat from September to October, but very slightly, the gain being only $1.20 per month, or 1.4 per cent. Since cost of living rose still less (one-half of 1 per cent) the worker made a slight actual gain in real wages for the month of October; but this October gain was not enough to restore the losses due to rising living costs in the last few months, and the individual worker's real income is still below March by 1.1 per cent.

Buying Power Rises.

"The total buying power of all workers rose 2.2 per cent in October when increased living costs have been allowed for. Due chiefly to increased employment the workers' real buying power is now 23.1 per cent above the March level. In dollar buying power, the total income of wage and small salaried workers is above the March level by nearly $600,000,00 per month.

"While these records are encouraging, we must remember that the worst months of winter are just ahead and although we have succeeded in maintaining employment thus far it will be exceedingly difficult to maintain it in December, January and February unless supreme ekorts are made. Over ten millions are now out of work, although a few hundred thousand of these have found temporary work through the public works administration or in forestry camps, and several hundred thousand already have jobs under the civil works administration. To keep unemployment from increasing and to find constructive work under civil works for some of those now unemployed, will require the wholehearted co-operation of our entire citizenry."

ATTITUDE OF CHAIN ICE CO. IS BROADCAST

Central Body Seeks Co-operation Other Cities.

NRA INCIDENT IS RECALLED IN LETTER

State and City Bodies Asked to Register Protests to Officials.

The Atlantic Ice and Coal corporation and its subsidiaries, the Southeastern Brewing company, distributors of Lion Pilsener beer, and the Chattanooga Ice Delivery company, were again the subject of discussion at the regular meeting of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night, and the more than 100 delegates in attendance participated generally in suggestions for furthering the campaign of publicity regarding the attitude of the big chain corporation toward Chattanooga workers and the NRA.

Secretary Cuthbert read a letter which he had addressed to state federations and city central bodies in the territory where the Atlantic chain and its subsidiaries operate, in which attention was called to the trade name of various subsidiaries in southeastern cities, and organized labor and its friends were urged to enter a general protest against the position taken by the chain company's officials in Chattanooga.

A new angle to the controversy was brought out when the delegates were reminded, aside from a general business of selling ice and coal, Lion Pilsener beer, and the storage business, the Atlantic company does a large business in wholesaling fish. Names of several retailers of this commodity were brought out, and the committee which has been handling the affair was instructed to call on these and request them to register their protests against the anti-labor policies of the corporation heads. Names of local produce dealers and others who have been using the Atlantic storage facilities were also mentioned, and personal calls on these institutions were also made a part of the committee's many duties.

Secretary Cuthbert's letter called attention of southeastern trades unionists to the fact that the Atlantic chain and all its subsidiaries, including the distributors of Lion Pilsener beer, have been formally declared "unfair to organized labor," after many weeks of effort on the part of local trades unionists to induce the Atlantic to use organized labor in the erection of a bottling plant for the bottling and distribution of Lion Pilsener beer. After a period of some seven weeks' negotiation, during which the workers' representatives were "soft-soaped" by representatives of the chain corporation, action was taken by Central Body, the letter recalls.

"This company has been convicted by the local NRA compliance board, and forced to pay back wages to an employe that they had chiseled on," the letter points out.

"This company handles Lion Pilsener beer, sells coal, ice and fish, and does a general cold storage business," the letter explains, and request is made that a committee from the body addressed call on the officials of the branch in their respective city and register their protest.

An extremely negligible quantity of Lions Pilsener beer is now being handled in this city, committees reported. The muddle with regard to local ice dealers is being worked out, it was said, and report will shortly be made as to which local ice concerns, if any, are indepedent of the chain corporation.

Graupner Beer Now '100 Per Cent Union'

Officers of Local 79, Brewery Workers, received the gratifying news this week that the Graupner Brewing company has signed agreement with the international union, and henceforth the products of that company will be 100 per cent. union.

Products of this concern, Silver Stock and X-tra Fine, received a large amount of publicity immediately after the return of legalized beer from the fact that the brewery was non-union. A campaign locally resulted in complete elimination of these products from the local market.

The Graupner company was officially removed from the "unfair list" of Central Body Monday night, and local labor officials expressed pleasure that the brewery management had "seen the error of its way" and decided to deal exclusively with organized labor in producing the beer.

Federation Warns Of "Racketeering"

Members of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, have notified The Labor World of a communication received by that body from President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, calling attention to action of the recent convention of the federation declaring war on racketeering in the labor movement. The convention adopted a policy of "no quarter" for these gentry and called upon all labor bodies to watch for any such activities and stamp them out without mercy.

The action was result of "boring from within" on the part of crooks and racketeers particularly in the larger cities and congested industrial centers, where operation of a trade union along approved lines is a task that requires eternal vigilance on the part of officers and members against those who would destroy the effectiveness of the legitimate movement by their unlawful practices.

J. W. Patterson Goes to Reward

Sudden passing of W. J. Patterson, custodian of the Memorial auditorium, Wednesday afternoon was a profound shock to hundreds of warm friends both in and out of the labor movement. Mr. Patterson was one of the oldest and most competent theater employes in Chattanooga. His whole life was spent in close contact with the profession, and he had filled every place "back stage," even replacing performers in emergency cases.

"Pat" Patterson, as he was known to scores of intimate friends, loved and lived his work. He was kind, big-hearted and generous, and numbered many prominent citizens among his close personal friends.

Mr. Patterson had been in failing health for some time, but his passing was without warning. In spite of the encroachment of his eventually fatal ailment, he had religiously attended his duties at the Memorial, and refused to surrender as long as it was physically possible to "carry on."

Funeral services for the veteran stage employe were held Friday morning from the late residence, the Rev. J. H. Hughes officiating. Serving as pallbearers were Neil J. Crowley, Tom Thompson, Jud Littleton, Tom Guider, Polk Smartt and E. E. Finley.

The Labor World joins many friends in extending to the bereaved relatives of Brother Patterson sincerest condolences in their great loss.

Clyde Garrett Back From Sad Mission

Clyde W. Garrett, well-known member and official of Local 415, Journeymen Barbers, returned this week from Atwood, Illinois, where he was called to attend the funeral of his father, Duane Garrett, who passed away in the Illinois town Nov. 24, aged 80 years.

Mr. Garrett was a pioneer citizen of the community where he died, and an obituary notice published in the Atwood Herald recounts that he was highly respected by the people among whom he spent a long and useful life.

Surviving the deceased also are his widow; U. S. Garrett, of Chattanooga, and another son, Claude, of Indianapolis.

The Labor World offers condolences to the surviving relatives of Mr. Garrett.

THEY TURNED ON THE LIGHTS

Furniture Workers Plan Special Meet

A special meeting of the local union of Furniture Workers is called for Saturday, Dec. 23, and every member is urged to be present. "We want all the boys to be present," an officer of the local said, "and swap ideas. There is surely power in numbers, and we want to plan to use to the fullest extent the benefits of collective bargaining in our industry."

The Furniture Workers meet each second and fourth Saturday at 10 a.m., at Central Labor hall, No. 3, Seventh and Market streets.

Carpenters 74 In Open Session Friday

Carpenters' Local 74 planned an open session for Friday night, Dec. 15, to which all workers at that trade have been invited. Features of the gathering were announced as addresses by Paul J. Aymon and W. E. Cheek, president and secretary, respectively, of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and others. Refreshments will be served and a general good time is forecast.

NONE SHOULD SUFFER IN LAND OF PLENTY

Says God-Fearing Nation Should Demand Humane Living Conditions.

Washington, Dec. 14.—Want in the midst of plenty indicts the present social order and calls for bold speaking and bold action, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, told the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, meeting here.

"There must be much of error in a social and economic order where widespread unemployment prevails, causing hunger and human distress," Mr. Green said. He continued:

"An increase in the wealth of the nation, the enlargement of its facilities of production, the creation of a trained and efficient army of working men and women ought to mean

Paper Makers Stage First "Blow Out"

Local Paper Makers will sponsor their first "party" Saturday evening, when it is expected that several hundred will be present at a gathering at Roosevelt hall. Social festivities will begin immediately after the regular meeting of the local union, and a program under the direction of President McCafferty will be given, after which refreshments will be served.

Massey Named Press Agent Shoe Workers

D. R. Massey was named "press agent" of the local Boot and Shoe Workers at the regular meeting Thursday night, and his duties, Mr. Massey told The Labor World Friday morning, are to co-operate in every way possible with this paper, furnishing items of the organization's activities and boosting for our advertisers.

Meeting of the organization Thursday night, he said, was the most enthusiastic and largest attended in the short history of the organization. "We are set to go," Mr. Massey said, "and we want to help our brothers of the other trades as well as ourselves and our paper."

There is still hope for good manners when the drug store man sells you a stamp and says "thank you."

R. D. Brown Heads Machinists' Lodge

R. D. Brown was named head of Lodge 56, Machinists, at the annual election of officers by that body Tuesday night. Mr. Brown is no newcomer to the official family of Lodge 56, and his "assistants" are well balanced as between experienced and "new" officials. Serving with the new executive during the coming year will be the following:

Vice-President—G. W. Axley.
Financial Secretary—W. D. Sivley.
Recording Secretary—W. F. Lange.
Treasurer—M. L. Wergin.
Business Agent—Hugh Cauble.
Sentinel—W. E. White.
Conductor—E. L. Fisher.

Election of one trustee to serve with two "hold-overs" resulted in Joe W. Harden being named on the board with C. H. Hall and William Millsaps.

W. R. Barney heads the newly-elected executive board, with the following members: C. H. Crowe, J. C. Quentel, F. H. Palmer and G. G. Bradley.

Installation of the new officers will take place in January, after which delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council will be named by the new executive.

Delegates Talk About McDonald

Discussion of Christmas shopping days by delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night brought a reminder of the attitude of Roy McDonald, operator of the so-called "Home Stores" and various affiliated wholesale and retail projects, including a throw-sheet which McDonald has been printing to advertise his many business ventures. It was suggested that every energy should be exerted by local working people to advise their brothers, both organized and unorganized, of the position taken by the grocer, baker, dairyman, printer, publisher, tire dealer, etc., etc. It was also recalled that the Don Cherry Tire company, believed to be a "Home Store" adjunct, was declared "unfair to organized labor" at a recent session of the body.

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

Form Southeastern Social Conference

A permanent organization for the promotion of social betterment in the states of Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and Florida was set as the goal by a conference in Atlanta Wednesday, sponsored by the labor department, and at which Miss Frances Perkins, secretary of labor, and other officials of the department at Washington were honor guests.

The organization's purposes were outlined as covering various phases of betterment for workers in the states named, including minimum wages for women, shorter hours, strict enforcement of labor laws, etc. The labor department will furnish a secretary for the conference, and Miss Perkins pledged every co-operation from her department.

Attending the conference from Tennessee, among others, were W. E. Jacobs, commissioner of labor; David Hanly, commissioner of compensation; Paul J. Aymon and W. E. Cheek, president and secretary, respectively, of the State Federation of Labor, and R. M. Cooke, editor of The Labor World.

National Labor Board Ends Tannery Strike

Gloversville, N. J.—The national labor board's proposals for the immediate termination of the seven-weeks' strike of 2,000 tannery employes in Fulton county were accepted by the operators after two amendments had been made which eliminated a proposal for wage arbitration and for the use of the seniority system in taking the men back to work.

P. O. BUILDER COMMENDS LOCAL LABOR

Sutherland Pleased With Union Co-operation.

TELLS LABOR WORLD IS WELL SATISFIED

Thanks Perry, Cuthbert, Aymon and Others for "Tact and Fairness."

"Your splendid co-operation throughout the building of the new Chattanooga postoffice and courthouse is sincerely appreciated," George Sutherland, representative of the Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction company, builders, told The Labor World in a letter this week, written on the eve of the departure of the construction superintendent following completion and dedication of the handsome new million-dollar government building.

"The whole-hearted support of the various labor bodies which we contacted and worked with has been exceptionally fine," Mr. Sutherland continued, and "We hope it will be our pleasure to work with these splendid labor leaders and organizations in Chattanooga again in the near future, as it has been a pleasure throughout the entire project."

Personal tributes are paid by Mr. Sutherland to George W. Perry, then president of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, for his "tact and fairness" during the "hours and hours spent with officers of various labor organizations in conference in the early stages regarding wages and working conditions." T. R. Cuthbert and Paul J. Aymon are also highly commended by the builder for their sincere and tireless efforts to maintain harmony during the course of the big job.

Officials of Chattanooga trades unions Thursday expressed themselves as highly gratified with the completion of the splendid new federal building, and the unsolicited commendation of their handling of various problems incident to the beginning and progress of the work.

"It is but natural, particularly under such stress as obtained during the erection of the postoffice, that disputes and disagreements should arise," an official of Central Body told The Labor World, "and that the project was completed with a minimum of major hitches is due in no small part to the fairness of the Sollitt company, which has long been operated as a 100 per cent. union concern.

"In such differences as did arise, we found Mr. Sutherland ready and willing to give every consideration to our position, and we are, justly we think, proud of our part in the job."

Central Body To Have 'Forbes Night'

Next regular meeting of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, which would fall on Christmas night, has been postponed until the evening of Wednesday, Dec. 27, and in line with the season will be turned into a "get-together" in honor of George Forbes, who will resign his connection with organized labor on January 1, when he officially becomes assistant postmaster.

Mr. Forbes has a lengthy and honorable record in organized labor locally, and delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night decided some recognition should be given to the "old-timer" on his official departure from the ranks.

The meeting will be open to all local trade unionists, and a program will be arranged befitting the occasion.

The small boy was much interested in watching a baldheaded man scratch the fringe of hair around the side of his head. The man kept it up so long that the boy finally reached over and said in a loud whisper: "Say, mister, you'll never catch him that way. Why don't you run him out in the open?"

Labor and the NRA

Statements in certain newspapers that the American Federation of Labor is against the national recovery act are completely erroneous. The position of the federation was stated by President Green in his recent Detroit speech. Mr. Green said:

> I have no patience with those who condemn and find fault with the national recovery act. Labor has not fared perfectly under it. We have complaints to make—many of them. We have not gotten out of it all that we hoped for or that we were entitled to, but the friends of labor, the masses of the people, are not going to condemn the national recovery act because it does not bring us overnight all that we think we are entitled to.
> The American Federation of Labor and all its hosts, the millions of workers whom it has the honor to represent, are going to stand behind a great fighting leader, a great president of the United States, who is actually trying to do something for the masses of the people.

Beginning with the code of fair competition for the cotton textile industry, the first one set up under the recovery act, the officers of the American Federation of Labor have held that the maximum work week in the codes, usually forty hours or more, is too long to provide employment for the millions of jobless and have endeavored to have the hours materially reduced.

The A. F. of L. officers have also insisted that the minimum wages in the codes are all too low to materially increase the buying power of the masses, without which the return of prosperity is seriously retarded, and have recommended drastic increases in the wage rates. In addition, A. F. of L. officers have urged the necessity of certain changes in the administration of the codes deemed necessary for the adequate protection of the workers.

These activities are among the duties imposed on organized labor by the recovery act itself. If the A. F. of L. did not endeavor to secure higher wages, shorter hours, and administrative changes regarded as vital to the interests of labor, it would not only be recreant to its obligations under the act, but would be disloyal to the workers whose lives are so materially affected by the labor sections of the codes.

At the same time, the officers of the American Federation of Labor and its millions of members wholeheartedly support the national recovery act, and, as Mr. Green truly says, "stand behind" President Roosevelt, who "is actually trying to do something for the masses of the people."

Facts Answer Roosevelt's Critics

The recent barrage of carping criticism of the president's recovery program shot forth by subversive business leaders and politicians who still cling to the decadent theory of "rugged individualism," with its accompanying low wages and long hours for the employed workers and unemployment and destitution for millions of others, is strikingly dissipated by the handful of statistical facts made public by the administration with regard to the progress of re-employment through the program adopted by the civil works administration.

Harry L. Hopkins, emergency relief administrator, reported to the president that two million unemployed workers were removed from relief rolls and provided with jobs at living wages during the first two weeks of the administration's employment program, and that before the end of December the number would be increased to four million.

Facts like these smash into smithereens "boloney" assaults and similar hot-air sapping and mining aimed at the president's program, which is restoring to millions of unemployed workers and their families the modest happiness that results from receiving a living wage.

Child Labor Amendment Wins Iowa

The ratification of the proposed child labor amendment to the federal constitution by Iowa raises to sixteen the number of states which have approved this meritorious proposition.

At the regular session of the Iowa legislature several months ago the house indefinitely postponed action on the measure, which had previously been approved by the senate. Since that time members of the legislature had received definite disapproval of their action by the concerted action of the Iowa State Federation of Labor and other progressive organizations, with the result that the house adopted the amendment by a vote of 61 to 42.

The child labor amendment does not legislate on the employment of children. It merely confers upon the congress of the United States the power "to limit, regulate and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age."

Including Iowa, the sixteen states which have approved the amendment are: Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Washington, Wisconsin.

As a result of the organized efforts of the American Federation of Labor and the state federations of labor, ten states approved the child labor amendment last year. The favorable action of twenty more states will be necessary to bring the number up to thirty-six, required to write the amendment into the constitution.

A First-Century "Chiseler"

By ALEX G. McKNIGHT, in "Labor"

Here is the story as it appears in Holy Writ:

"And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own: but they had all things in common. * * *

"Neither was there any among them that lacked; for as many were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold,

"And laid them down at the apostles' feet; and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need. * * *

"But a certain man named Ananias sold a possession and kept back part of the price and brought a certain part and laid it at the apostles' feet.

"And Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land? * * * Thou has not lied unto men, but unto God.

"And Ananias, hearing these words, fell down, and gave up the Ghost. * * *

"And the young men arose, wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him."

Ananias, apparently, in his first burst of enthusiasm for the new deal, had signed the code which had been established by these first followers of the Master.

But, his native hue of resolution was sickled over by the pale cast of thought, and, when he was put to the test, he "chiseled"—he held back part of the price which, under the code, he was obliged to contribute to the common fund.

And it is significant that not only was he smitten to death for his dereliction, but the young men wound him up.

There may be a suggestion in this story for our great president as to how he ought to deal with some of the business concerns that are following in the footsteps of "Chiseler" Ananias.

A new electric painting machine, announced to be "five times faster than the brush," has been placed on the market. It uses no air, paint being thrown out by centrifugal force in a fan-shaped spray. The gun is said to handle 1,500 square feet of wall an hour, saving 60 per cent of the cost of brush operation. The spray can be varied from an inch to half a yard in width to paint door frames, moldings and baseboards.

Mr. Loree Becoming Absurd

(An Editorial in "Labor")

Leonor F. Loree, head of the Delaware & Hudson railroad, is going to and fro among the chambers of commerce and walking up and down in the bond clubs, making, almost unchanged, the same speech that he has been delivering for years.

He contends that everybody is hard up except the workers. In his latest speech he declares capital is getting only half as much as a century ago, management, particularly railroad management, is "notoriously underpaid"; while labor is getting seven times as much as in 1838.

"Everything gravitates to labor," says Loree, dolorously.

It might be a good plan to contrast what the railroads have paid labor with what they have paid Mr. Loree. Loree is a multi-millionaire; and he has made his money out of railroads.

When railroad wages were at their peak, not more than 10 per cent of rail workers were getting wages which were at all adequate, according to standards fixed by governmental authorities.

Mr. Loree's salary, on the other hand, at one time was about as much for one year as the wages of the highest paid locomotive engineer for twenty-five or thirty years; and his wealth today probably is greater than the total unincumbered possessions of all the employes, other than officials, on the D. & H. railroad.

Yet Mr. Loree talks as if railroad managers walked in rags while railroad workers wore silk shirts, and as if all railroad troubles would end if he had the privilege of working his men ten hours a day without paying overtime.

Loree, though he doesn't know it, is preaching red revolution; for revolution would come in short order if his doctrines were carried into practice. Fortunately, the American people show no disposition to follow the leadership of the "Master of the D. & H."

"Split Shift" in Hours Denied Tobacco Chain

New York.—Grover A. Whalen, NRA administrator for the state of New York, announced that the local NRA compliance board had denied the petition of a large tobacco chain to work its store employes on a "split shift."

The decision affected not only the chain operating stores here, but an affiliate operating several hundred stores.

The company's employes now work eight hours a day in conformity with the provisions of the president's agreement.

The officials of the tobacco chain proposed to work its employes four hours, have them take four hours off in the slack period of the day, and then work four hours during the late afternoon rush.

The compliance board ruled that the proposed "split shift" would establish a workday equivalent to twelve hours. The board also held that the approval of the plan would defeat the purpose of the NRA, which is to shorten hours for those who have employment in order to create jobs for those who are idle.

Notice to Delinquent Tax Payers

When the last legislature enacted the Craig bill, which suspended interest and penalty up to and including December 31, 1933, if paid on or before that date, on delinquent taxes of the 1922-1931 levies, it provided taxpayers with an unparalleled opportunity to save money on their delinquent taxes.

Beginning January 1, 1934, the delinquent tax attorney will be forced to collect these taxes by law, including all interest and penalty, and the taxpayers will have no recourse.

If your net unpaid tax for 1929, for instance, is $100.00, and you don't pay it by December 31, 1933, it will cost you $47.00 more the next day, or

If your net unpaid tax for 1930 is $100.00, and you don't pay it by December 31, 1933, it will cost you $33.50 more the next day, or

If your net unpaid tax for 1931 is $100.00, and you don't pay it by December 31, 1933, it will cost you $22.00 more the next day.

I deem it my duty to convey the above information to the taxpayers, that they may not fail to take advantage of this great saving, if it is at all possible for them to do so.

Sincerely,
WILL CUMMINGS, County Judge.

Slash in Postal Clerks' Pay Big Wallop at Buying Power

Washington, Dec. 14. — Buying power for the six months ending Dec. 31, 1933, was reduced by $3,060,000,000 due to deductions from the wages of postoffice employes alone of the federal workers, according to an estimate in the current issue of the Union Postal Clerk, official organ of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks.

This statement is based on the estimate that the approximate deductions amounted to $51,000,000 and that a dollar in a wage envelope turns over at least five times in a month.

This considerable slow-down in buying power was with slight effect on government expenditures, the article continues, in that only 4 cents out of every tax dollar goes for the salaries of all government workers.

"If outright dismissal of all federal employes was resorted to as an emergency measure, your federal taxes would remain practically the same," it is said.

According to the Union Postal Clerk, the postoffice clerks alone of the federal workers lost $34,218,000 in the fiscal year 1933 as a result of the furloughs. The 15 per cent wage cut deducted over $20,500,000 more.

The average loss to the individual postoffice clerk will amount to over $200 for the six months ending Dec. 31, 1933.

BOSSES FORCED TO MAKE GOOD ON WAGES UNPAID UNDER NRA

New Orleans, Dec. 14.—Several hundred workers in New Orleans shops, stores and factories are rejoicing because the watchful eye of the Blue Eagle has discovered instances in which employers had failed to live up to NRA requirements in the matter of wages. Between $1,500 and $1,600 has been paid to the workers as a result of the activities of the New Orleans compliance board of NRA, a statement by the board reveals.

According to this statement, the board has successfully adjusted 440 complaints out of 953 complaints of violations of NRA codes. The board has removed the Blue Eagle from one firm, has made recommendations of a drastic nature in several other cases and has forced employers to pay the board about $1,600 which was turned over to the underpaid employes.

One instance of this was of a business establishment employing fifty girls where the board discovered the underpay amounted to about $700. This was collected and the girls received pay envelopes from the compliance board containing from $3 to $50, depending on the amounts they had been underpaid.

WOMEN VOTERS LEAGUE ASSAILS LABOR CLAUSES IN TWO CODES

Washington, Dec. 14. — Protests against the labor provisions of the restaurant and laundry industries codes were registered in statements issued by the board of directors of the National League of Women Voters, alleging discrimination against women workers.

Graduation of rates by population of cities and geographical areas, with deductions for tips, is alleged to so reduce the wages that "an employe might pay her employer at the end of the week more than the employe received in wages." The effect of the exemptions affecting small towns and eating places is declared to remove the protection of the code for women at the very places where it is needed most. The statement claims also that a guaranteed minimum wage should be required commensurate with other codes. Reconsideration of the laundry code is asked and revision of wage provisions, which are declared to be "so low that they defeat the purpose of the act."

Employers and Union Enter Unusual Pact

Volume of Business to Determine Wages Under Agreement Made by Machinists and Manufacturers.

Plainfield, N. J., Dec. 7.—An agreement under which future wages may be dependent to a large extent upon the volume of business has been signed by the machinists' union and two large newspaper machinery manufacturers.

The agreement was signed by Walter Scott & Co., newspaper press manufacturers, employers of 430 men; the Wood Newspaper Machinery corporation, employers of 190 men, and Richard D. Scott, business agent of Machinists' Union 167.

The agreement outlaws strikes and lockouts and says: "All disputes shall be settled by meetings and conferences."

Labor and capital, after conference, shall establish a rate of pay six months in advance of the day it goes into effect. Three months after the rate is set, if capital finds that it has been unable to sell its goods, it so advises labor and gives labor its recommendations of the rate it believes the market will permit. Labor then would make a decision on its future policy.

Machinists in the employ of the two Plainfield companies, under the contract, will continue to receive 70 cents an hour until January 1, 1934; 80 cents from then until July 1, and from July 1 to January 1, 1935, it was tentatively proposed that the rate would go to 90 cents. The 90-cent rate would be contingent upon the other press makers signing similar agreements with employes. The companies also would be obliged to notify the machinists by March 1, 1934, if the 90-cent rate were impossible because of business conditions.

CHURCH COUNCIL HEAD ASKS UNITED SUPPORT FOR PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S RECOVERY PLAN

Washington, Dec. 14.—President Roosevelt's recovery program embodies "Christian social ideals for which we of the churches have long contended," declared Dr. Albert W. Beavin, president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, in an address here before the delegates to the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration of the organization.

Insisting that human values are first in God's sight, Dr. Beavin, who is also president and professor of practical theology in Colgate-Rochester Divinity school, called for "the most whole-hearted and unselfish support of all these co-operative enterprises of good-will" by the 22,000,000 adult members represented by the twenty-five communions affiliated with the federal council. He challenged theories that "the church should confine itself to religion, and not interfere in questions of industry, war and peace, or in control of such traffics as liquor, arms, motion pictures and other powerful factors in modern life."

Denouncing the "exploitation of childhood and of men and women for power or money" as "the unpardonable sin," Dr. Beavin declared that "any system which leaves men and women starving in the midst of plenty, takes care of the favored few and leaves the mass impoverished and helpless, is a tragic reflection upon the judgment with which God has equipped us."

The head of the council called upon the churches for a renewal of faith and of morale with which to meet the economic crisis, and to rise above narrow and bigoted nationalism to a better realization of international relationships and obligations, and so "to catch the vision of the age-long purposes of the Almighty."

"Altogether too easily have we accepted the thesis that men would not act unless they could selfishly gain," he said. "All too eagerly have we fallen down to worship the gods of gold, only to find the very temples of our selfishness come crashing about our heads."

MORE ABOUT SOCIAL ORDER

happiness and prosperity for all.

"No one should suffer for the bare necessities of life in a land of plenty and in a nation with granaries filled to overflowing and material wealth which cannot adequately be appraised, Only a faulty and inequitable method of distribution could produce such a result.

"A God-fearing nation influenced by high ethical standards and the principles of religion should be possessed of such a social conscience as to develop an economic order which would serve to distribute the wealth produced by all its people in such a way as to provide a good life and a decent living for all.

Challenge to Church Seen.

"No one can truthfully charge that the existing, dislocated economic situation is due to any lack of interest manifested by the religious forces of the nation. Instead, it is clearly evident that it is directly traceable to the maladministration of our financial, economic and industrial institutions by those who own and control them. The existence of economic wrongs, the maladjustment of our economic forces and the public demand for the application of a remedy, which is being made with increasing emphasis, all present a direct challenge to the church, to religious forces and to religious organizations.

"For more than four years unemployment has increased with tremendous severity and, as a result, millions of people have suffered from hunger, distress and a sheer lack of the bare necessities of life. The peak of unemployment was reached a few months ago when figures disclosed that more than fourteen million working men and women were idle. The home, civic and community life of the nation have all been affected and the service of our educational institutions has been greatly impaired. The blighting effect of unemployment has been apparent on every hand. It has seriously affected the religious, fraternal, educational and social life.

Distress Not Necessary.

"None of this distress or unemployment can be traced to natural causes. Our fertile farm land has produced as abundantly as ever. Our natural resources are adequate for all human needs, our transportation and production capacities have reached their highest point and the creative and inventive genius of the people has met every standard of excellence.

"What agency can more properly and soundly lead in the development of a national social conscience, social outlook and a sense of social responsibility than the church? It occupies a strategic position in all the affairs and activities of human life. For this reason it cannot be regarded as a special pleader for a particular class. This question seems to be completely answered in a sentence which appears in the labor Sunday message of the executive committee of the Federal Council for 1933, which reads as follows: 'It is the church's business to teach, to inspire, to provide the moral and spiritual dynamic for basic change. The time is at hand. Lest blind selfishness destroy civilization let us move forward more boldly in our economic life to the realization of our ideals of justice and human brotherhood.'

Time for Bold Action.

"I like the use of the word 'boldly,' as contained in the above quoted sentence. It represents the spirit and attitude called for by the exigencies of the national situation. The time has arrived for bold speaking and bold action. Our economic house must be put in order. Men must be taught and shown and converted to the fact that the day of individual isolation, irresponsibility and social exclusiveness is gone. There must be individual and collective adjustment to basic social changes.

"All of this involves the social interest in the distribution of earnings of industry in the application of remedies for unemployment, in the distribution of relief, the elimination of poverty, the care and protection of children, the adoption and application of a social justice policy which will provide for the care of those injured and the dependents of those killed during the course of employment and of those who become dependent because of age, or who are the victims of age discrimination on the part of industrial management."

In closing Mr. Green said:

Church Must Back New Order.

"The cause of the helpless and oppressed must always receive the support of the church. It is deeply concerned with the advancement of spiritual and social values. In this new day so richly filled with new economic thinking, when men and women are inspired with a new vision and a new determination that henceforth, within our own land, there must be a wider distribution of material blessing and a diffusion of prosperity, so that it may be enjoyed by all rather than by the favored few, the church must boldly stand in support of the new social deal and new economic order."

U. S. EMPLOYES MAY GET PART OF PAY SLASH BACK

Washington.—It was announced that President Roosevelt favors restoring to government employes as quickly as possible 5 per cent of the 15 per cent pay cut imposed on them by the last session of congress as part of the "economy" program.

A number of members of congress are reported as favoring the restoration immediately instead of waiting until the beginning of the new fiscal year on July 1.

The American Federation of Labor and the American Federation of Government Employes, affiliated with the A. F. of L., insist that the entire 15 per cent was unjustly taken from the federal employes originally and should be completely restored without delay.

NION MEN FIRED FOR AFFILIATIONS

The United States government is hrowing away" the CWA money hich is being spent to give employ- nt to destitute citizens, according an official of the Tennessee Stove orks, says a letter sent The Labor rld this week by E. J. Bramblett, n charges he lost his job because joined a union affiliated with the nerican Federation of Labor.

Spokesman for the Tennessee plant, cording to Mr. Bramblett, "told all us we would be fired by Christmas, d it seems they have nearly made d their threat."

Mr. Bramblett states that he had n employed by the stove concern nine years, and had never been off until he joined a union.

"We have reported every time they e fired one of us," he says. "Won't government enforce the law?"

The Tennessee Stove Works is a oriously non-union, cheap-wage fit, and after the NRA had guaran- d the right of every worker to join union of his choice many of the ders and stove mounters employed the concern made application for mbership in an AFL union. Accord- to Mr. Bramblett, however, com- y officials have flouted the law are discharging such employes as dared to take advantage of the ts guaranteed them under the re- ery act.

Mr. Bramblett's letter follows:

Editor The Labor World:

The Tennessee Stove Works red me from my job on account joining the Stove Mounters' nion. I asked Mr. Allison Cald- ell if that wasn't the reason for being fired, and he said he didn't know if it was, altogeth- ." This makes 18 or 20 (I don't now the exact number) who have en discharged for the same rea- n.

Mr. Allison told me to ge and t some of the money that the vernment is throwing away— .10 per hour jobs. I think if the esident don't stop throwing ay money, that the Tennessee ove Works will have him and eneral Johnson both fired.

George Mathews, foreman at Tennessee plant, told all of us would be fired by Christmas, d it seems they have nearly de their threat good. Can't nebody stop this? We have re- rted every time they have fired of us; won't the government force the law? I have been rking for this company nine rs, and have never been laid until they put a non-union man my place.

Musicians Offer Contribution to Forbes Tribute

A major contribution to the program at the special "Forbes night" session of Central Body, which will be celebrated next Wednesday night at Roosevelt hall, will be furnished by Local No. 80, American Federation of Musicians. Through the efforts of George Rogers, president, Jimmie Cox and his orchestra, one of the best-known and most popular musical organizations in the city, will entertain members of the body and their guests from 7:30 to 8:30.

The session will be given over, in the main, to a sort of "farewell party" to George Forbes, who has been an active worker and official in the local labor movement for many years. Mr. Forbes will officially become assistant postmaster on January 1, which will necessitate his retirement from his local union, the Postal Clerks, and which will automatically make him ineligible for further activities in the trade union movement as a whole.

A program of speaking and other features is being arranged by Central Body officials, and refreshments wil be served. Matt J. Robinson and Tom Hall, old-timers," it is announced, will review the accomplishments of the labor movement during the past quarter-century, and will offer tribute to Mr. Forbes for the part which he has taken in the struggle.

The meeting will be open to all local trades unionists, and it is expected that a capacity crowd will be present.

A. C. Kamin, president of Central Body, will preside.

Compliance Board Hears Hedges Case

Local compliance board, sitting as a special courtesy to the national labor board, this week heard the cases of seven machinists discharged by the Hedges-Walsh-Weidner company because they saw fit to affiliate with an American Federation of Labor union.

Proof was introduced by Attorney Gus Wood, Jr., on behalf of the corporation's victims, calculated to show that the workers were "fired" for the sole reason that they had joined the union. Opposition to the organization of a union on the part of one Weigel, superintendent, and Scott Probasco, local banker, was brought out, and the proof submitted indicated little doubt that the complaining workers were discharged for the sole reason that they had joined.

Representatives of the company failed to submit any evidence against the charges, contending merely that the complaints antedated the code for that industry.

Neil J. Crowley, member of the board, called attention to the fact that the concern received a large government order with the understanding that the code would be observed.

Tobacco Company To Accept Union

Winston-Salem, N. C., Dec. 21.—The first break in the anti-union front of the big tobacco companies has come here. The British-American Tobacco company, which has plants here, in Petersburg, Va., and Louisville, Ky., has announced it has no objection to its workers organizing under the banner of the American Federation of Labor. The company also announced that it had increased wages.

Lounging robes are usually given to men who have no time to lounge.

An Unfortunate Occurence

That was an unfortunate and deplorable spectacle staged by a group of southern manufacturers at the Hotel Patten this week. Called for the ostensible purpose of checking up on and "assisting" the NRA, the conference was apparently dominated by such men as John E. Edgerton, president of the National Association of Manufacturers and operator of a sock mill at Lebanon, Tenn.

Edgerton, running true to form, took advantage of the occasion to offer his usual insults to the southern worker, and granted an asinine interview to the daily press which was a reflection on the intelligence of every working man and woman in the south. Not to be outdone, also, J. Harvey Wilson, who appears to be the spokesman for the Richmond Hosiery mills, reiterated his opposition to the NRA, and related an experience with union labor which, according to the trades unionists referred to, was about as accurate and according to facts as could be expected from one who is so blindly prejudiced and unreasonable as Wilson.

As a matter of fact, Edgerton, Wilson and others became so "raw" in their insults to southern workers and the NRA that the Kiwanis club, with whom the delegates were invited to lunch, publicly disclaimed any responsibility for the wild ravings of certain speakers.

Edgerton, whose puerile philosophy is well known to working people in this section, will be remembered for his statement before his national body that the system of offering prayer at the beginning of the workday in his plant at Lebanon has resulted in greatly increased efficiency of his workers. Wilson is known locally for his labor-hating tendencies, as well as for his opposition to the United States government in its efforts to restore prosperity to a suffering people.

The plant for which Wilson speaks, according to the Times' account of his speech before the convention, "knows no rule but employes' needs," indicating contempt for the federal laws supporting the NRA. Local unionists suggested, incidentally, that the rules must have been suspended in the case of a young woman who presented a pay envelope showing she had received the magnificent sum of 57 cents for sixty hours' work in the sock mill presided over by Wilson.

In all fairness, however, it should be said in comment on the meeting that apparently the majority of the delegates did not agree with the wild statements of the self-appointed leaders. Outstanding among the statements of several who attended the affair was that of Mr. E. J. McMillan, of Knoxville, head of the Underwear Institute, who, according to the News' account of the session, "opposed the idea of a 30 per cent differential, explaining that he did not take into consideration the negro problem or certain heavy industries. He warned against an inferiority complex, declaring that in his own mill there are native-born Americans who he is willing to put up against any others, and with the 9 per cent differential in the code his workers could hold their own. He criticized the chambers of commerce for stressing cheap labor in the south," according to the afternoon paper. "He declared 'we got down where people weren't making enough to live on' and welcomed the opportunity to boost wages. He did not like the labor provision, he said, but added that mills having the most trouble were the people who hadn't played fair."

The antics of Edgerton, Wilson and others before the meeting are not surprising. It is hard to understand, however, why directors and officers of the Richmond corporation will allow anyone to speak for them who defies the United States government, and whose antipathy toward labor is so pronounced and brazen.

The whole affair was unfortunate, and those employers who spent their money to attend the convention in the belief that some constructive results might be obtained were doubtless disappointed.

The main object of the meeting, which apparently was to force a 30 per cent. differential in wage rates for the south, was practically lost sight of in the mad ravings of the labor-haters. Question of obtaining this differential, however, had already been settled by Gen. Johnson, who stated plainly in an Atlanta speech recently that the effort of southern manufacturers along this line is hopeless.

Printers Offer Appreciation for Moral Support

Appreciation of the support of members of organized labor and their friends against the reactionary position of Roy McDonald, chief mogul of the so-called "Home Stores," is offered by Chattanooga Typographical union, No. 89, in a large display ad in this issue of The Labor World.

"During the past year," the typos recall, "we have encountered opposition from Mr. Roy McDonald and the operators of the so-called Home Stores and other enterprises, and we have appealed to you for support against the reactionary philosophy of the head of this concern. Co-operation extended to us in this matter has been wonderful, and we owe to our brother and sister trades unionists, as well as to our friends outside the ranks, a debt of gratitude for this whole-hearted and effective support."

McDonald operates a chain of grocery stores, a bakery, a creamery, a tire concern, a job printing plant and publishes a weekly throw-sheet which is used for advertising his various enterprises. Break with the typos came when he established his throw-sheet, which he hoped to build up as an advertising medium for local business houses, with the intention, admittedly, of eventually converting it into a daily paper. McDonald's ambitions, however, suffered a set-back when local merchants "shied" at his sheet after being informed of his reactionary policies.

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

BAKERS HEAR ADDRESS BY MATT ROBINSON

Local 25 Reports Interesting Session.

ORGANIZATION IS GROWING RAPIDLY

Correspondent Sends Cheering News for Labor World Readers.

Local 25, Bakery and Confectionery Workers, has postponed the regular meeting of that organization from Dec. 23 to Jan. 6, at 2 p.m.

Regular session of Local 25 on Dec. 9 was featured by an address by Matt J. Robinson, and according to the correspondent of The Labor World from that organization the remarks of the old-timer were well received by the members.

The Bakers and Confectionery Workers are making splendid progress, according to officers of the local, and increasing interest is being shown in the work of the organization.

The Bakery and Confectionery Workers held their regular session Saturday, Dec. 9, 1933. The meeting was well attended and much enthusiasm was shown in the activities of the local union. There were three applications issued for new members, who were present at this meeting. The Bakery Workers' union is making considerable headway in its effort to organize a successful and sorely needed labor organization.

Matt J. Robinson, member of the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, was a guest of the bakery workers, and made a very forceful talk, in which he urged every bakery worker to come into the organization as soon as possible. He also said that it was up to every individual man or woman to do their part and not expect too much from the government. Mr. Robinson said it is his belief that the government expected the prompt organization of all workers, when it (the government) made it possible for them to do so, even to the extent of protecting them by law.

Mr. Robinson recalled the time when once before he helped to organize the bakery workers of Chattanooga and other southern cities. He said this was about 1915 or '16 and that it was most unfortunate that the World war draft at that time caused the collapse of the organization.

"It is evident," Mr. Robinson said, "that the bakery workers have at last awakened. They are now beginning to realize the urgent need of a strong and resourceful labor organization, through which they may bargain collectively and forcefully with their employers."

Mr. Robinson's talk was met with much applause and many remarks from the floor, many members stating their determination to do all in their power to make the Bakery and Confectionery Workers International union an organization both admired and respected by the great baking industry.

Santa Claus Brings Cuthberts Baby Boy

Old Santa Claus came early to the home of T. R. Cuthbert this year, and a "bouncing baby boy" was delivered at Children's hospital on Tuesday morning. The youngster has been named Jerry Wilson, and T. R. wants it distinctly understood that same is not after one J. Harvey.

Mr. Cuthbert declares that the newcomer's first words were "Daddy, this Edgerton is up to his old tricks, but don't let him kid you."

Mother and baby are doing fine. "Daddy" is standing the shock as well as could be expected.

Christmas, 1933

One of the greatest stories of the Christmas season, written in the English language, is "A Christmas Carol," by Charles Dickens. His story of the transformation of the character of Scrooge, the miser, on Christmas eve by the power of love will endure. For Scrooge was a "squeezing, grasping, clutching, covetous old sinner! Hard and sharp as flint from which no steel had ever struck out generous fire; secret and self-contained, and solitary as an oyster!" Yet Scrooge, after his night's visitation from the ghosts of his better self, arose on Christmas morning with a spirit of joy in his heart and went forth into the community from which he had shut himself off by his hard-fisted, miserly ways, and in the true spirit of Christmas gave both of his goods and his affection to all with whom he came into contact. He became his true self in the act of giving, and in the words of the novelist, became "as good a friend, a master and man as the city ever know.

So ever the Christmas message is not only "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men," but also peace to men of good will who show forth their love of their fellowmen in human service.

"Unto Us a Child Is Born"

"For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

And the Father chose a manger for the birthplace, and willed that the Son should walk among the lowly of His people. From the time the Star of Bethlehem guided the Wise Men to the King of Kings, a weary, sin-cursed world—an enlightened world of many races and classes of people—has turned to Him for surcease from all ills to which humanity is heir.

To the four corners of the earth on next Monday His name will be sung. Millions of voices will be raised in praise of One who walked the earth immaculate two centuries ago, healing the sick and ministering to the unfortunate among His people. King and peasant will bow their heads together in reverence to the Prince of Peace, and love and kindness will reign wherever civilization has reached.

Custom has made of Christmas a day of feasting, of giving and receiving, of joy and gladness. Hard-hearted indeed is he who has not the capacity to enter into the spirit of this greatest of all festivals. Captains of industry, whose mad rush through a busy commercial world leaves little time for sentiment 364 days of the year, will lay aside their cares on this day and join the glorious throng proclaiming "Peace on earth, to all men good will." The laborer is in his heart a king, and the children of rich and poor alike will honor the mythical saint who personifies to their immature minds the spirit of the season. Thousands of those blessed with abundance of the material things are made happier because they have sought out and aided the less-favored ones.

It is a day of "home-comings," of reunions when families and friends who have been separated come together again to partake of a feast of love and fellowship.

Preachers and publicists may inveigh against the tendency of the times toward wickedness, licentiousness and blasphemy, but a world that can pause even on one day of the year to do homage to a lowly Carpenter who lived on this earth 2,000 years ago is surely not beyond redemption.

It is only a pity that the wonderful spirit of this day could not be extended in our business and commercial activities throughout the year. In the stress of our daily lives, whether we be capitalist or laborer, high or low, we thoughtlessly do and say many things which are unworthy of our duty to our fellowman.

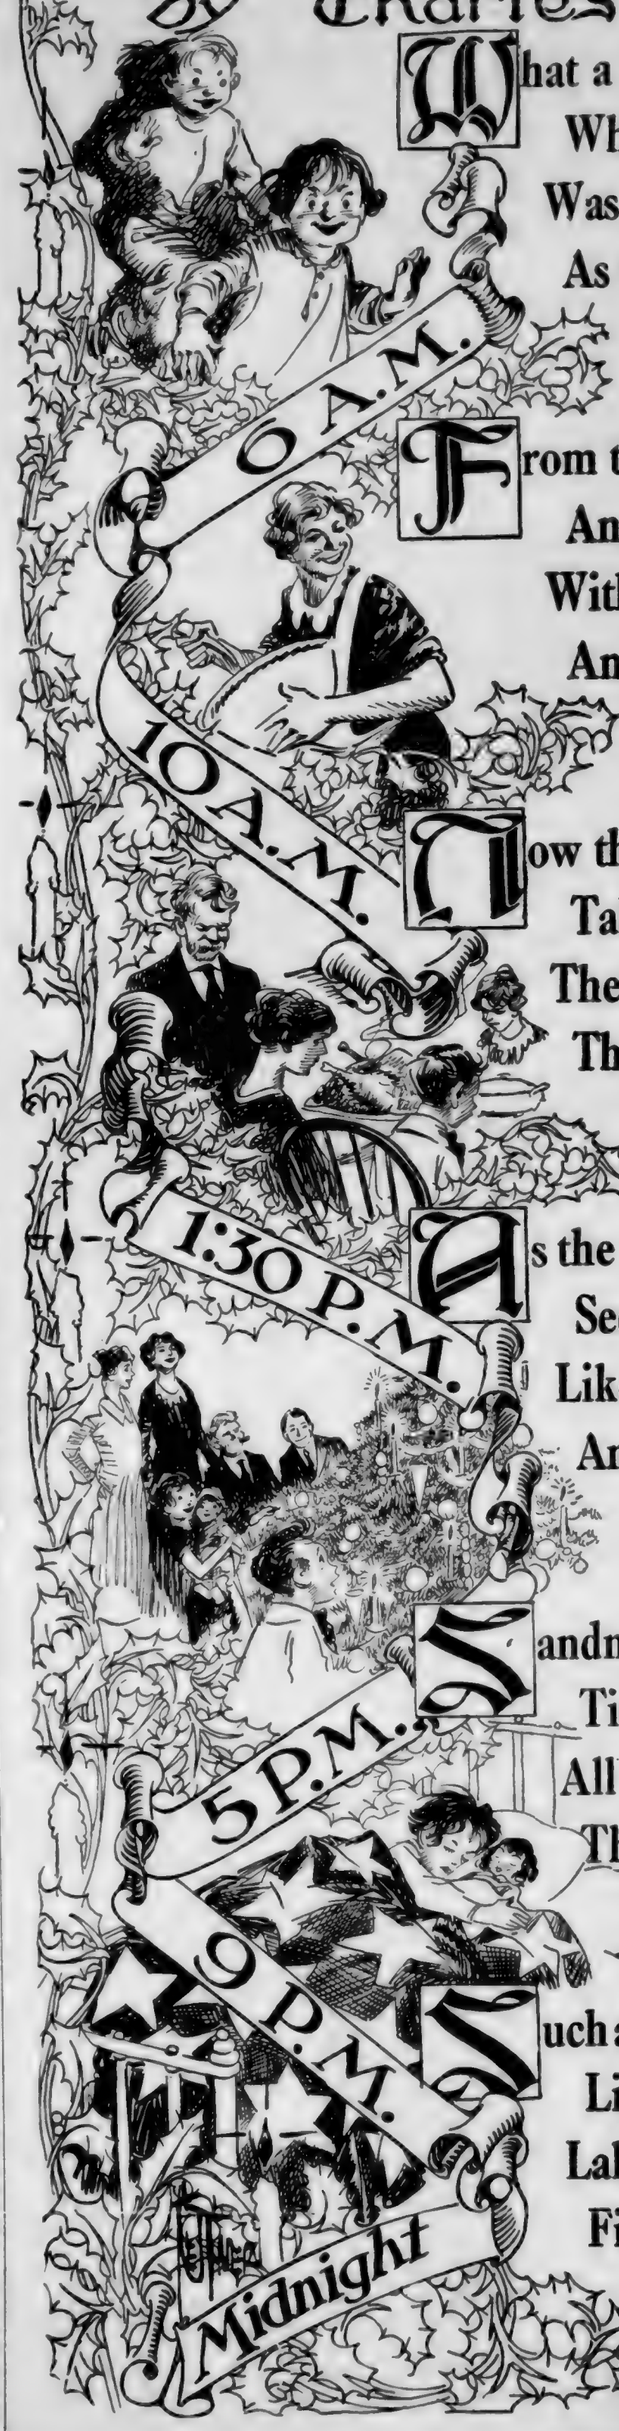
But there remains this day, when reverence to the Christ-Child is first in our hearts, and we rejoice in extending to our fellowmen sincere greetings and well-wishes.

The Labor World wishes for all who read these lines—

"A Merry Christmas and a joyous New Year."

Wonderful Hours of Christmas

By Charles Frederick Wadsworth



What a pattering and scampering of eager little feet!
What a look of joyous wonder in the little eyes that stare!
Was there ever Christmas morning more exciting, more complete,
As the little hands explore the piles of presents everywhere?

From the kitchen comes the whirring of the beater in its haste,
And the sklop-sklop of the spoon as Mother stirs another cake,
With the clicking of the oven as the turkey gets a baste,
And a hundred teasing odors dinner preparations make!

Now the dining-room is crowded as the folks come trooping in,
Take their seats and bow in silence as Dad says the Christmas grace,
Then the clatter and the chatter and the laughter make a din
That's a tribute from each merry heart and happy, smiling face.

As the darkness settles down again the lights upon the tree
Seem to glow a benediction on the gladness of the day,
Like the star that stood o'er Bethlehem for all the world to see
And to lead the Wise Men to the place where little Jesus lay.

Time to gather all the trinkets up and put each one away—
All except a doll or teddy bear to cuddle up in bed—
Then the nighties and pajamas and the little prayers to say.

Such a jolly trip through Dreamland with the streets all paved with pie!
Light and phone poles made of candy and the wires of popcorn strings!
Lakes of ice cream, cakes for houses reaching half way to the sky,
Filled with all the nicest presents that a Christmas ever brings!

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Does the National Industrial Recovery act compel either employers or workers to organize?

A.—This is answered by the American Federation of Labor as follows: "No; it assumes that both parties will have enough common sense to see how important it is for them to organize in order to be benefited by the act. Industry must organize if it wishes to propose codes of fair competition. Labor must organize if it wishes to meet employers on equal terms."

Q.—When is Child Labor Day?

A.—The National Child Labor committee has designated the week-end of January 27-29 as the period for the observance of the day.

Q.—Is legislation regulating the employment of children at night general in the United States?

A.—All states and the District of Columbia have such legislation.

Marble is being sawed out of an Arkansas hillside by means of a quarter-inch steel cable, 1,400 feet long, which is driven by an engine at the rate of 20 feet per second. The actual cutting is done by sand, which is fed into the groove the wire makes in the stone. The cable cuts a complete section out of the hillside without wearing out or breaking, and the entire operation is carried on by one workman.

"DON'T you like it, all this?" asked Joel.

"Oh, well enough," replied Sonia, without enthusiasm.

It was evening, but the snowy path through the woods was easy to follow. Their feet broke through the crust with a crisp crunching.

"I thought this would be so different," explained Joel, "I'm fed up on the usual Christmas parties. Sometimes it seems as if we were not trying to remember Christmas."

The spruce trees on either side stood silent, and laden with snow. There was no sound in them but an occasional soft soughing, as if they sighed in anticipation of some expected miracle.

"Noise, people . . . dancing . . . I've liked it all as well as you, Sonia. But lately I've wanted something more. I've felt as if I were missing out, letting important things get by, and not really knowing it."

Sonia walked with a light, quick grace. She wore a white sports suit topped by a red cap and a tassel. She was very quiet—Sonia the sparkling, the much-sought-after, the most popular girl at parties. Joel moved closer. "I don't want to spoil your Christmas fun by insisting on this country stuff . . . but I sort of thought—" he tried to keep his voice from sounding wistful—"we might even understand each other better if we got away from routine pleasure. Look ahead there, dear . . . see? There's a faint, clear light in the east." Impulsively he put his arm around her. "Who knows? Maybe a star will rise for us!"

Sonia said maybe there would. Her tone was listless. She had too gracious a nature to be disagreeable, but Joel felt hurt at her unresponsiveness. He moved away, and they went on.

A rabbit darted across their path. An owl deep in the woods gave a faint, far call, almost human. "Come on, Sonia, let's sing a carol. I feel just like it. Let's sing a carol to the Christmas star," begged Joel.

"You're a silly boy," she said. But she kindled to his enthusiasm.

Sonia joined in. Their voices rang eerily through the white, silent woods.

The very trees seemed to listen. As the final note died away, thinning to a mere thread, they heard again that far, strange call of the owl.

"That's the loneliest sound I ever heard!" cried Sonia. "Wouldn't the gang at home laugh at us for this crazy stunt at Christmas Eve?"

The girl reached for his hand, her voice bravely taking up the refrain. On through the blackness they walked, and their voices seemed to reach ahead of them, instead of floating upwards.

"There, what did I tell you!" Excitedly Joel pointed to the top of a tree. Just at the tip hung a star, beautiful beyond belief, trembling with a clear radiance. An ice prism caught the gleam and shattered it into a thousand glancing rays. "Our Christmas star, Sonia," breathed Joel. So they stood a moment, both caught up in a hush of wonder.

"Forgive me if I sound too solemn, Sonia—but somehow I think of Christmas as being a time of reverence as well as revelry. I wanted you to feel this, too, tonight with me. When we're married we've got to have some fine things to hold to, something bigger than ourselves; something that means Christmas—the real spirit of it."

She smiled up into his face. "You're a funny boy, but I'm awfully fond of you. I . . ." she broke off, startled,

A step crunched through the snow at the other side of the bridge. The figure of a man staggered into view. "Hey!" he called, as he clung to the bridge rail for support. His voice barely reached them; he was panting for breath. "Them carols you sang . . . heard 'em away off . . . mighty pretty . . . I lost my way . . . couldn't find the road. I kept a-hootin', hopin' someone would hear me . . ." He swayed, caught himself. "I been a-walkin' and walkin' for hours, but when I heard them songs, it put new courage into me . . . and I stivered as fast as I could, straight for 'em! Maybe they saved my life . . . gittin' awful cold and still tonight . . . couldn't have walked much longer."

Decorations for the Yuletide

DECORATING the home has become almost as important a part of the Christmas celebration as decorating the table, and making the Christmas table attractive is as essential as having the turkey properly seasoned and the plum pudding piping hot. Certainly, the traditional use of holly and mistletoe is as acceptable as ever; but many new and unusual treatments have been developed for those who crave something a little different, a little gay and festive, especially for this year of all years.

Of course, the Christmas tree itself belongs to the children and should be decorated to suit them with all the gay little ornaments so dear to their hearts. During recent years, many people have used only one color on the tree, such as blue or silver. This year a red, white and blue scheme might be tried, with one layer of blue glass balls, one of red and one of white or silver—and so on, up the tree. An added bit of joy might be provided by appliquing a two dimensional Santa Claus on a sheet, which would be suspended on a wall beside the tree. Lack of technical skill in the execution will make this feature even more amusing.

In many homes, the tree is placed in nursery or upstairs sitting rooms and for these, a tree of different type might be used for the living room decoration. Flat trees, made of such materials as plywood, sheet metals or folded cellophane, might be placed on the mantel shelf or against a bare wall space; while real trees, in miniature sizes, are attractive on either side of the fireplace or at the entrance door to the room. The artificial trees could be in any color to match some decorative note of the room and might be trimmed with white cords or tassels, ropes of tinsel or painted pine cones, as well as the more usual but always lovely glass balls. An airy fairy type of tree might be constructed by pasting feathers on a cardboard tree; while nothing could be lovelier than a tiny evergreen, hung with real flowers, particularly some flowers of white.

The decorative touches for the room itself may be either as simple or elaborate as is desired. A huge bowl of the ever-present glass Christmas tree ornaments may be placed on the piano; while a mass of fruits and sweetmeats, surrounded by springs of holly would be effective on the mantelpiece. Very inexpensive white lamp shades can be decorated with printed designs of Santa Claus and his reindeer or hung with sprays of real leaves and poinsettias. Another idea is to place candles in the wall brackets and have the entire room beautifully candle-lit.

More pretentious schemes provide for the decoration of the walls themselves. Swags of leaves may be suspended from the picture moulding, draped up at intervals with glass balls, mistletoe or poinsettias, the leaves being green on white walls and silver, gold or white against various colored backgrounds. If preferred, the reverse scheme, with swags of colored balls caught up with sprigs of holly or pine cones might be developed. Windows, too, may be given a festive air by swags of red or green cords or ribbons, entwined with painted berries; or if the drapes do not permit of extra decoration, wreaths made of the glass ornaments, silver leaves or tinsel and poinsettias combined, may be hung from the tassel or cords.

The center of interest in the dining room is the table and a host of new ideas are available in preparing for the Christmas feast. For the children's table, a tiny Christmas tree might be hung with strings of popcorn or cakes baked in interesting designs. Tiny gifts, placed around the table, might be attached to the tree with red and green ribbons. For the elders, the basis of the scheme might be a tablecloth of tarleton or doilies of oilcloth, decorated with figures painted on or cut from gift paper. Painted pine cones could be used for place cards or candle holders and centerpiece might be a bowl or glass ball or a cornucopia of fruits, surrounded by poinsettias, holly leaves or gilded nuts and berries.

Very little expense, combined with ingenuity and thought in handling the decorative scheme will add immeasurably to the festive spirit and the joy of Christmas day.—Josephine Walter, in St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

There aren't many people, says Jack Lindsay, that you can find on the same side of the fence every day in the week.

Season's Greetings!

To the Readers of The Labor World:

Chattanooga Typographical Union, No. 89, takes this means of extending to you, through our paper, The Labor World, heartiest greetings of the season.

This organization has been extremely fortunate, and in the past we have seldom had occasion to call upon our brothers and sisters in the Trade Union Movement for support. During the past year, however, we have encountered opposition from MR. ROY McDONALD and the operators of the so-called HOME STORES and other enterprises, and we have appealed to you for support against the reactionary philosophy of the head of this concern. Co-operation extended to us in this matter has been wonderful, and we owe to our brother and sister trades unionists, as well as our friends outside the ranks, a debt of gratitude for this whole-hearted and effective support. In return for this splendid co-operation, we pledge to you for the future, as we have endeavored to extend at all times in the past, our best efforts to advance the cause of Organized Labor in Chattanooga.

We wish for The Labor World and its readers a very merry Christmas, and happiness and prosperity throughout the year to come.

Christmas Dinner On a Battleship

By Charles Frederick Wadsworth

MR. AND MRS. BLANK, let us say, are having some of their kinfolks for Christmas dinner, on a farm, ranch or plantation, or in a cottage somewhere in America.

The conversation turns to a boy of the neighborhood who is in the navy.

"Navy beans and sowbelly, I betcha," opines Grandpa, who served in the Civil war.

"Let's see," says Pa. "Frank's on a battleship, isn't he?"

"Yes, it's the Arkansas." This information from Ma.

"Then he'll have a swell feed," comments little Bill, who reads a lot and thinks maybe he will join the navy himself some day.

Just to satisfy the curiosity of Pa and Ma Blank, Aunt Josie, Uncle George, Grandma, Grandpa, little Bill, and the neighbors generally, suppose we all step into the quartermaster's office on the U. S. S. Arkansas and sit at a mahogany desk with Chief Commissary Steward Jimmy East and find out all about what the boys on a battleship have to eat at Christmas time.

"First," says Chief Jimmy, as he takes out his fountain pen and reaches for a sheet of letter paper with "U. S. S. Arkansas" printed at the top, "I'll give you the menu we served last Christmas."

MENU
Celery Hearts Olives Sweet Pickles
Fruit Cocktail
Cream of Tomato Soup
Saltines
Roast Young Turkey
Oyster Dressing
Cranberry Sauce Giblet Gravy
Mashed Potatoes Green Peas
Cauliflower Candied Sweet Potatoes
Butter Sauce
Hot Finger-Rolls
Tomato and Lettuce Salad
Thousand Island Dressing
Assorted Fruits Nuts Hard Candy
Hot Mince Pie
Ice Cream
Chocolate Cake Coffee
Cigars and Cigarettes

"That dinner," says Chief Jimmy, "was served to the crew of 1,100, at a cost of $1.10 per man. In addition, the crew had as guests 200 orphans and other needy children."

"Is that customary?" Chief Jimmy was asked.

"Yes, the crews of ships in port make that a regular practice," was the reply. "Last Christmas the Arkansas was in port at San Diego."

It was suggested that the quantities of food required for Christmas dinner on a battleship might astonish some of the folks "back home."

And Chief Jimmy made this memorandum of the main items, reading each aloud as he put it down:

Celery, 400 lbs.; olives, 20 gals.; canned tomatoes, 150 lbs.; crackers, 200 lbs.; turkey, 1,200 lbs.; cranberries, 300 lbs.; Irish Potatoes, 600 lbs.; sweet potatoes, 600 lbs.; green peas, 200 lbs.; cauliflower, 300 lbs.; hot rolls, 2,400; ham, 400 lbs.; lettuce, 200 lbs.; fresh fruit, 1,200 lbs.; nuts, 300 lbs.; candy, 500 lbs.; pies, 200; ice cream, 40 gals.; cigars, 1,100; cigarettes, 1,100 pkgs.; coffee, 100 lbs.

At this point Grandma might well have exclaimed: "My gracious! Six hundred pounds of Irish potatoes! It would take a week to peel them!"

"How about that, Chief? Do you have any labor-saving devices in the galley?" ("Kitchen" to landlubbers.)

"Oh, yes," says Chief Jimmy. "The potatoes are peeled by power peelers, of which we have two, each with a capacity of a hundred-pound sack in approximately five minutes. But the boys dig out the eyes with paring knives in the good old-fashioned way. We also have eight navy standard oil-burning ranges, and twelve steam boilers, each of sixty-gallon capacity, for vegetables and so forth. The meal is prepared under my direction by twenty ship's cooks and eight bakers. Fifty-five mess men serve it."

"Of course you serve a good quality of everything?"

"Only the very best," says Chief Jimmy. "Besides the regular government inspection, all foodstuffs are again inspected at ship-side, and any offering that is not up to specifications goes right back!"

And there you have the story of a Christmas dinner aboard one of Uncle Sam's battleships.

The Church Christmas Tree

By Alice B. Palmer

THE little church at the end of Grace street was one mass of brilliant, sparkling Christmas decorations wherein great preparations were in progress for the usual community Christmas tree. The largest forest tree ever obtained had been donated by a neighboring farmer, and was standing at the altar as if conscious of its wonderful privilege of being accepted as host for this glorious occasion.

Several volunteer members were engaged in trimming the tree, while happy thoughts were bursting with pride at this opportunity of expressing themselves in love for mankind.

For many years Clara May had faithfully attended this church and had never missed a single celebration of the community tree. She had always done her part with fine enthusiasm and many times even more than her share. But somehow her work had been unappreciated and seemingly unnoticed.

Clara May had a secret! In all these years she had never received a gift from the great tree of love, although she had wrapped and tied many of them, with which to make others happy. For several years she had swallowed her pride at not hearing her name called out, and then one year something snapped—she just couldn't stand it any longer! She had written her own name upon some of the parcels and concealed them among the others at the foot of the tree.

This year, however, Clara May had decided to omit her own parcels from the great celebration. What's the use? she thought. No one cares anyway, whether I receive anything or not!

Midst the joyous co-operation of all, Clara May was lovingly twining the tinsel about the pine-scented branches of the tree. As she did so, the spirit of forgiveness came to her as plainly as though a voice had spoken. 'Twas the Christmas spirit and all other encumbering thoughts had vanished leaving her free and happy. She smiled contentedly as she reached the very top of the tree to hang the Star of Bethlehem.

The others about her sensed the same spirit through Clara May's most unusual smile and were overjoyed but somehow puzzled, for they remembered that Clara May had not smiled in such a manner for many years. It appeared to them as if a statue had suddenly burst into human facial expression and they marveled.

Christmas Eve all was in readiness and the church was a bower of loveliness, bordering on fairyland. Gifts carefully and lovingly wrapped and tied with glistening tinsel were heaped high and Santa, himself, sat at the foot of the tree, his jovial good will an inspiration to all.

After many beautiful Christmas carols had been sung by the choir and the children had delightfully entertained with their sweet, young voices of Christmas cheer, the distribution of the gifts was begun.

A hushed silence fell over all as each one, young and old, anticipated the hidden treasures about to be delivered by Santa Claus. A great wave of enthusiasm was present, holding all within the grasp of the great Universal Christmas Spirit!

Name after name was called out by the cheerful voice of Santa Claus, and each gift was received graciously and most expectantly.

But what was all the excitement? Everyone was looking in the direction of Clara May. She was receiving so many gifts she was really becoming quite embarrassed. She did not know where to put them all, nor how to get them home. Such a shower as never before had descended upon her, and tears of gratitude were streaming down her face.

That smile of the Christmas Spirit while trimming the tree had brought the true spirit of brotherhood to all and each and every one of them had paid his debt of gratitude to Clara May.

Little Chairs

Small chairs are easily fashioned from soap boxes. One box, a straight piece of wood for the back, a coat of bright paint, is the simplest formula. This may be elaborated upon to the extent of dad's time and skill. See what you can do with your hands this year—your hands, a little wood and inexpensive paint. It will be a happy Christmas, for our hands can put love and the Christmas spirit into gifts so much more easily than they can be instilled into an expensive, unworked-upon present.

A man caught a boy in his orchard stealing apples, and handed him over to the police. As it was the boy's first offense the judge let him off, but told him never to yield to such temptation again, adding:

Judge—You should have flown from the evil one.

Boy—So I did, sir, but he grabbed me before I got over the fence.

PEABODY HOWARD

Saying Merry Christmas

By Mary Meade, in Chicago Tribune

JOYEUX Noel!
Schtastliye vianoce!
Gluchliche Weihnachten!
Wesotych Swiat!
Merry Christmas!

Hundreds of ways to say it, and it all means the same—joyous things—abundant health, steadily increasing security, new friends, and above and crowning all, a love for the adventure of living such as no year has ever brought before!

Christmas seems made to talk about Christmas, and no matter how many gay and entrancing tales we have heard in our lives about the Yuletide season in foreign lands—customs, oddities, and delightful native foods—we always love to hear more.

You've doubtless heard it said that Christmas is a tremendously old custom—far older than the opening of the Christian era. That is partly true. However, as a generally celebrated ecclesiastical festival, Christmas is less than 1,600 years old, having brought with it the midnight mass which is still the center of the people's celebration in all the Latin countries of Europe and South America, having brought, too, the home-made creche of the Infant, first worshiped in the Middle Ages, and still later brought the carol singing and the gift giving by St. Nicholas, the children's saint.

But the other side of our Christmas gayety—the purely secular merrymaking—began to accompany the carols and religious services while England was still in the Middle Ages, and it was these ceremonies of the boar's head, the Yule log, and the evergreen tree, the wassailing and feasting and the masking and mumming which found their start back in far-off pagan times and which, though now much changed in meaning and practice, still cling to our holiday merrymaking and speak of hospitality, good will, and renewal of old friendships.

All this while, Yuletide gayety in Merrie England grew faster and faster, until, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and King James it reached a sort of frenzied peak, to drop almost at once quite out of sight, with the advent of Cromwell and the Puritans, who rigorously banned Christmas by law.

But before the ban at Christmas time every Saxon table boasted wassail—the spiced hot ale swimming with roasted apples and drunk with toasts to health, happiness, and long life. But the more the years the more the fare! By the end of the Fifteenth century the tables groaned indeed while Henry VII ate his astounding feast of one hundred and twenty dishes. It opened by the ceremonial entrance of the boar's head on a golden platter and was climaxed by a roasted peacock with tail outspread!

And what of the other one hundred and eighteen dishes! One we know which was always present in all homes from the king's palace to the hut of the cottager was the Christmas roast beef and the "minced pies" which were really meat pies pure and simple. Of the rest we hear stories of swans, sturgeon, conger, herons, and blanc mange cleverly formed into still more animal shapes. Plum porridge, or frumenty, were early English favorites and probably the grandparents of their stiffer successors, plum puddings.

Roast goose was another old time Christmas custom in England and probably entered trussed, spitted, and garnished somewhere between the boar and the peacock. The baron's cook would have told you, as will any old English cook book, that the true feast calls for "green" goose which, being interpreted, means a bird that is young and tender—a youngster of about four months weighing between nine and twelve pounds. The same test will determine its "greenness" today as in the old days.

And when the goose "hangs high"?

Those words signify that the green goose has been singed, washed, and dried within and without and generously salted.

Today, in modern England, brandy is still blazing about fat plum puddings, crackers are being pulled amid much merriment, time honored toasts are being drunk, and roast turkey (an American inspiration), plum pudding, and mince pies are still undiminished.

But while early England was applauding and condemning Christmas, Germany, passing through the Reformation, added two more pleasures to the Christmas tradition—the lighted tree and the children's carol singing.

Santa Claus

By Alice B. Palmer

TOMMY MOORELAND was a pitiful sight as he sat upon the hard rough bank of the railroad tracks, covered with Christmas snow which he never bothered to remove.

Tommy had been the eldest of a large family of brothers and sisters and had always played a most important part in the Christmas festivities—that of being Santa Claus. It was of this very thing that he was now thinking most deeply and reverently.

The sudden crunching of footsteps in the snow behind him caused him to turn quickly, expecting to hear—"Move on!" Instead, he saw a little girl, the sky blue of her coat speckled with snowflakes. She truly looked as if she might have emerged from fairyland.

She stood weeping before him.

"Mother says there is to be no Santa Claus tonight," she wailed.

Blinking through the mist of now fastly falling snow he looked at her hungrily, all the years of his tramphood dropping from him at that moment.

Then with an effort to keep back the tears from his own eyes, he tried to persuade her that Santa would surely come.

"Where do you live, little girl?" said Tommy.

"There's the house, right over there, the one with the big yard around it."

"You had better skip home now and wait for Santa, for I am sure he will come!"

"How wonderful!" thought Tommy, all the Santa Claus instincts aroused within him, "if I could make this little family happy by being their Santa just for tonight!"

Intoxicated with inspiration, Tommy started to walk toward town and had not gone far when he was stopped by a kindly gentleman who asked if he were in need of work.

The Children Almost Tore Santa Claus to Pieces.

Tommy was delighted, for the job made him a Santa Claus for the Salvation Army Christmas tree, and for which he was well paid.

Later, with permission to borrow the outfit and after some Christmas shopping, he hurried over to his adopted home. With Santa's pack upon his shoulders, he joyously rapped upon the door. To his surprise it was opened by the little girl, herself.

But what was it all about? Mother and father came rushing in. Before they could speak Tommy pulled the mask from his face and shouted, "Mother! Father!" He had found his own home and parents and brothers and sisters in the "House with the big yard around it!"

THE YULE-TIED

"The Yule-tied refers to those couples who get married on Christmas day."

Roosevelt Halts Strike Of Southern Pacific Ry.

Washington.—President Roosevelt ordered an investigation of labor disputes on the Southern Pacific lines in Texas and Louisiana, thus halting a strike called for the following day.

Acting under the railway labor law, he declared that an emergency existed and ordered a special board of three convened to make the inquiry. During the thirty days allowed for the investigation the strike must be held in abeyance.

The president issued his proclamation after Chairman Winslow, of the federal mediation board, reported that John Williams, a member of the board, had been unable to compose the labor differences after eight weeks of effort.

CYNTHIA'S CHRISTMAS

by Martha Benning Thomas

CYNTHIA tried to be gay over the holiday parties, but somehow she just couldn't get into the spirit of things. With sun shining, flowers growing, and a warm wind from the sea, nothing seemed right. "I like snow and sleigh-bells and feet creaking. Can't help it; this is lovely, but —" she would fall into wistful silence, and her dancing partner would be puzzled and a little hurt.

Cynthia had not heard from Sam for a long while. Perhaps he was forgetting her. They had been such good friends always and lately a new warmth and tenderness had crept into their relationship—that is just before Cynthia had left for the west coast. But probably Sam was very busy. Probably he didn't get time to write. Oh, well . . . And her eyes would become misty with looking, not at the immediate beauty of shore and sea, or lovely gardens, but at far away things.

Sam lived next door in the old days, a rough little boy who tumbled her curls, made fun of the way she switched her skirts, washed her face with the greatest rudeness in snow, and once, quite by accident, nearly killed her.

Sitting one day under an orange tree, she reviewed that episode, and it all came back to her as clearly as if she were seven years old instead of twenty-two. Sam had called to her to come out to play. She hesitated, knowing how rough and unmannerly he might become. She was wearing a new muff with a ribbon round her neck and a little blue bonnet that matched her eyes. She did not wish to be mussed up or to have tricks played upon her.

"Aw, 'fraid pussy! 'Fraid pussy!" he had taunted her. So she came down the steps, and soon they were playing together in the snow, and Sam wasn't as rough as usual. It was the day before Christmas and after a while Sam began describing the things he wanted. Among them was a small cannon. "With a ball that goes bang . . . like this!" Before Cynthia quite knew what happened, Sammy had hit her with something icy cold and hard. She fell over, and did not know anything for a long time. When she came to, Sam's red, agonized face bent over hers. "I didn't mean to hit you . . . it slipped . . . I was just showing you about the cannon ball. I'm sorry . . . please, please . . . don't be dead!" That episode had sealed their friendship. It had just naturally gone on for years after this.

Christmas Eve there was a package for her. It was a little heavy and quite cold. "Came in a refrigerator car," said the errand boy, "and had to be delivered packed in ice."

Cynthia undid wet wrappings. In the last one she found a snow-ball. On it, traced in small red berries were these words, "You don't need a snow-ball to knock me cold. Merry Christmas. Love, Sam."

First Toy Soldiers Date Back to the Middle Ages

THE toy soldiers which will figure in a number of Christmas stockings can boast of a long and distinguished pedigree. The children of ancient Rome played with miniature warriors, and some of the toy soldiers of the Middle Ages are real works of art.

A number of them are still preserved in British museums, and are elaborate models of knights in armor of real artistic value. But they were originally made as children's toys.

Later, in the Seventeenth century, miniature soldiers were made which were really pioneers of the modern mechanical toy, as they could go through the regulation drill of the time.

Notice to Delinquent Tax Payers

When the last legislature enacted the Craig bill, which suspended interest and penalty up to and including December 31, 1933, if paid on or before that date, on delinquent taxes of the 1922-1931 levies, it provided taxpayers with an unparalleled opportunity to save money on their delinquent taxes.

Beginning January 1, 1934, the delinquent tax attorney will be forced to collect these taxes by law, including all interest and penalty, and the taxpayers will have no recourse.

If your net unpaid tax for 1929, for instance, is $100.00, and you don't pay it by December 31, 1933, it will cost you $47.00 more the next day, or

If your net unpaid tax for 1930 is $100.00, and you don't pay it by December 31, 1933, it will cost you $38.50 more the next day, or

If your net unpaid tax for 1931 is $100.00, and you don't pay it by December 31, 1933, it will cost you $22.00 more the next day.

I deem it my duty to convey the above information to the taxpayers, that they may not fail to take advantage of this great saving, if it is at all possible for them to do so.

Sincerely,
WILL CUMMINGS, County Judge.

Telling the Christmas Story

IT WAS Christmas Eve. Outside the snow was falling in great feathery flakes, turning the bleak winter landscape into a thing of beauty. It clung to the stretching arms of the trees; it covered roofs and lawns with a mantle of white.

"How beautiful!" Helen Marsdale whispered to herself, as she gazed out of the window. "A symbol of the cloak of happiness that the spirit of Christmas has flung around the world."

She turned at the sound of a word. "Mother, won't you read the Christmas story now, while we wait for Dad?" It was pretty, dark-haired Patsy who spoke, but in a minute the other children echoed her request.

Mrs. Marsdale sat down in the softly-lighted room. The very atmosphere of Christmas was there. Holly wreaths hung in the window, a Christmas candle was burning on the table, and a log fire blazing upon the hearth.

Opening the Bible at the second chapter of St. Luke, she began the beautiful story that has thrilled the world through the centuries. Her voice grew in richness and volume as she went on.

"And she brought forth her firstborn son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them at the inn.

"And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the fields, keeping watch over their flocks by night.

"And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid.

"And the angel said to them, Fear not: for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all the people.

"For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

"Mother, how beautiful your voice is. It—it sounds just like music." Robin, a slender boy of twelve was speaking, and his own tones were tremulous with emotion.

"It is the beauty and simplicity of the story, Robin, which you feel. One can almost see and hear as they read—Mary and Joseph—and—and the Christ Child."

There was silence in the room for a minute. Again Robin was the first to speak: "I—I wish I could go like the shepherds and adore Him," he said, his blue eyes shining.

"Robin, that isn't possible for us now, but we can show our love for him in many other ways at Christmas. By being thoughtful and kind, by making others happy, by remembering those who are in need." Mrs. Marsdale reached out and patted her son's blond head as she read:

"And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

"And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

"And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into Heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord had made known to us.

"And they came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the Babe lying in a manger."

So intend were the family, so wrapped up in the beauty and absorbing interest of the story, that James Marsdale stood in their midst before they knew it.

"Oh, dad!" Robin cried, "Mother has been reading about the coming of the Christ Child—about the shepherds—and—and—everything. I wish you had been here."

"I wish I had," James Marsdale replied, as he lifted Robin in his arms. "I can never forget the beautiful picture you made as I entered. All of you listening, and—and mother's beautiful voice falling like music in the room." He smiled with rare understanding at his wife as he finished speaking.

Helen Marsdale returned his smile. "We shall wait for you next year," she said; "this beautiful hour is going to be a part of our Christmas for always."

Black-Draught
Clears Up Sluggish, Dull Feeling

"I have used Thedford's Black-Draught for constipation for a long time, and find it gives relief for this trouble," writes Mrs. Frank Champion, of Wynne, Ark. "I think it is good for spells caused from gas on the stomach. If I get up in the morning feeling dull and sluggish, a dose of Black-Draught taken three times a day will cause the feeling to pass away, and in a day or two I feel like a new person. After many years of use we would not exchange Black-Draught for any medicine."

Injunction Asked As Steel Company Defies Labor Board

Chairman Wagner Asks Attorney to Take Action to Force Concern to Permit Collective Bargaining Election.

Washington, Dec. 21.—The National Labor Board has recommended to Attorney General Cummings that the Department of Justice obtain an injunction to permit the board to conduct an election for collective bargaining at the plant of the Weirton Steel company, Weirton, W. Va. The company has bitterly fought the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers and done everything in its power to encourage a company union among its employes.

In a telegram to E. T. Weir, president of the company, Chairman Robert F. Wagner, of the labor board, said:

"Inasmuch as you have refused to permit our representatives to conduct the elections under the rules of the National Labor Board and in accordance with the agreement signed by you, and have in addition interfered with the choice of representatives of your employees in violation of Section 7 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the board will therefore proceed to take such action as it may be advised to enforce the agreement and the rights of the employees."

The board abandoned its effort to hold the election on Dec. 15, as originally planned. The company, although it agreed once to permit the board to supervise an election, later told the board's election supervisors they would not be allowed on the property.

The proceeding he had in mind, Senator Wagner said, would be for the attorney general to go into a federal district court and obtain the injunction.

Whether heads of the company would be prosecuted for violation of the industrial recovery act has not been definitely determined, he said.

"Our first purpose," he added, "is to see that the men have a fair chance to express their preference for representatives for collective bargaining."

The agreement between Weir and the board to have the board supervise the election ended a strike at the Weirton plant several months ago.

A. F. of L. Rejects Plan For Probationary Unions

A proposal to amend the constitution of the American Federation of Labor to empower the Executive Council to charter probational federal labor unions was rejected by the 1933 convention of the A. F. of L. The proposal provided for chartering of the probational unions in special situations, pending determination of conflicting jurisdictional claims or other matter in controversy.

The convention declared it recognized the purpose of the proposal "to be in direct contradiction to past as well as present policies, practices and principles governing jurisdiction rights, and is convinced that if approved it would lead to immediate and irreconcilable misunderstandings and conflicts, which would retard rather than promote permanent organizations; also that any temporary or probationary arrangement if accepted would prove unfair to those enrolled under such a plan, which in the end will be impossible of solution in a manner generally acceptable and satisfactory."

THREE BLUE EAGLE WAGE CHISELERS PENALIZED

Washington.—Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, recovery administrator, struck a definite blow at wage and hour chiselers by ordering all Blue Eagle insignia removed from three restaurants for violation of the wages and hours provisions of the president's re-employment agreement. The penalty was imposed on the following concerns: The Coconis company, Inc., Chicago; Neal, Hibbard & Co., operators of Nealard's in Evanston, Ill., and J. J. Bierbower, proprietor of the Black Hawk cafe, in Grand Island, Neb.

The restaurants were ordered to surrender their NRA insignia after local NRA compliance boards had submitted evidence charging the proprietors and operators with persistent refusal to pay the wage rates and apply the hours specifically set forth by President Roosevelt as necessary both to provide employment for millions of jobless and restore prosperity by increasing the purchasing power of the masses.

Quotas Upheld and Barring Of Filipino Labor Demanded

Immediate effective immigration restriction of Filipino laborers was demanded by the 1933 American Federation of Labor convention, which reaffirmed the A. F. of L. policy of upholding immigration quotas and urged congress to resist any attempt to liberalize the quota provisions. The convention pointed out that Filipino labor is still admitted to the United States and its territories without any restriction whatever.

Defends South

Editor The Labor World:

During the last few days much has been said at the manufacturers' meeting in Chattanooga about the difference in efficiency of the northern and southern worker.

They claim they must have a 30 per cent differential in wages in the south. This to compete with the more efficient worker of the north.

If this be true, then the fault lies with the manufacturer himself. Why does he not train his men on their particular jobs?

Why does he not have the up-to-date equipment to do the work?

These are the things that the northern manufacturer does to get production. If you get your production, then the cost of the finished product is as cheap here as anywhere.

Some of the southern companies give their employees free medical service, cheap house rent and a plot of ground to raise a garden. That is a good idea, and should be done by more. But you can not do that and work the laborer for less money in hope that the cheapness of labor will make up for the lack of proper and up-to-the-minute machinery.

The writer has worked with men all over the country and he finds just as good workmen in the south as anywhere in the country.

Lady Took Cardui And Got Rid of Pain In Her Side

"Last summer, my health was bad, so I began taking Cardui," writes Mrs. H. E. Slaughter, of Norman, Okla. "My mother had given me Cardui in girlhood, so naturally I turned to it when I felt I needed it. I felt run-down and a general weakness. I had bad, dizzy headaches when everything would seem to dance before my eyes. My right side pained me so much, but since taking Cardui the pain has left me. I have taken several bottles of Cardui and have improved a great deal."

Cardui is sold at drug stores here.

Local Labor Honors Unselfish Service Of A Veteran Unionist

"Old Timers" Offer Tributes to George Forbes.

PROMOTION AT P. O. IS APPROVED

Central Body Delegates and Visitors Express Appreciation for Quarter-Century Record of Popular Postal Clerk.

"Farewell party" for George Forbes, which replaced regular business session of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Wednesday night at Roosevelt hall, proved to be one of the most pleasurable affairs of this nature ever staged by local labor forces.

The writer uses the word "pleasurable" advisedly, because throughout the entire evening it was stressed that the "old-timer" is not leaving the labor movement in person or in spirit, but is merely forced by circumstances to sever official relations with organized workers.

On January 1 Mr. Forbes will formally become assistant postmaster, and as such it becomes necessary for him to resign his membership in the local branch of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks. That the appointment is a most popular one could not be denied by any who attended the "party" Monday night, for it appeared that the 150 or more delegates and guests were of one accord in paying tribute to the long and honorable record of Mr. Forbes, and of expressing their personal gratification that his ability and integrity has been thus honored and rewarded.

Committee which arranged the program Wednesday night selected as speakers, for the most part, fellow-workers who had been associated with the veteran for years in his efforts to advance the cause of labor. Postmaster Ernest Dennis and officials of the state and local Postoffice Clerks' organization were also among the speakers.

W. E. Hays, president of the State Association of Postal Supervisors; J. E. Daugherty, vice-president of the Tennessee Federation of Postoffice Clerks, and G. G. Griggsby, veteran member of the local branch, were among the fellow-workers of Mr. Forbes who offered their tribute to the new assistant postmaster. Others on the program were Tom F. Hall, who dates his service to labor from the days of the formation of the "Knights of Labor;" Matt Gerlach, who served seventeen years as secretary-treasurer of the local Central Body; W. E. Eckenrod, former president of the body and active worker in the ranks for more than a quarter-century; Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor; Ben Williams, representative of the United Mine Workers of America. The honor of presiding was "wished on" the editor of The Labor World by President Kamin, who announced that the entire meeting would be turned over to the "old timers."

FORBES HAS LONG AND HONORABLE RECORD

George Forbes, recipient of the unusual honors accorded by the special session Wednesday night, has a long and enviable record of service to the workers of Chattanooga. Possibly no major problem has faced the organized labor movement of Chattanooga for more than a quarter of a century that has not in some way called for the advice and counsel of the new assistant postmaster. He has filled practically every office in the gift of the membership of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, and perhaps in no one year of the past twenty-five or more has his name been missing from the list of major standing committees. He has many times represented local workers in the state body and other parent organizations, and has served his own immediate fellow-workers in various capacities, including several terms as president of the Tennessee Federation of Postoffice Clerks. For the past five years he has been chairman of the board of directors of The Labor World. Aside from his labor activities, he has found time to become active in various civic movements, and, as a representative of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council in the Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce, served with honor as a member of the board of directors of that body. He also served with credit as a member of the county finance advisory committee.

Mr. Forbes has been a continuous delegate to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council for the past sixteen years. He was at one time a vice-president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

A sketch of his activities, furnished The Labor World for a "Who's Who" edition in the spring of 1828, was read at the meeting Wednesday night, as follows:

Name, George Forbes. Address, 207 Liberty street. Born at Ovid, Michigan, July 17, 1878. Removed to Chattanooga, fall of 1886. Joined Local Union No. 192, 1915. Offices held in local union, vice-president one term, president three terms, president Central Body one term. Single, Lord, no. Married to Miss Dora Childress, Dec. 16, 1905, at Chattanooga. Number of children, three, all girls.

Milked and scattered fertilizer two years, sold newspapers, Western Union messenger, cooper shop, tailor shop, cigar factory, brewery, tinner, plumber's helper, tannery, wagon works, army, ranch, wheat fields, telephone construction gang, laborer, dishwasher, miner, bouncer in beer hall, stage hand, bar tender, stevedore, shipbuilder, Pullman company, city directory, sailor, city fireman, molder (joined Molders' union in Detroit, 1902). Been at postoffice eighteen years and filled every office from special messenger to secretary of war.

Figure it up and I'll be about 90 years old. I might mention that I also write poetry (?) and have dreams.

I am prepared to take an oath that I have done all these and more.

The meeting Wednesday night was made more pleasurable by the contribution of Local No. 80, American Federation of Musicians, who sponsored the appearance of Jimmie Cox's orchestra, one of the most popular musical organizations of the city, who entertained for about one hour, featuring George Rogers, president of the local, in vocal selections and closing a selected program with a splendid rendition of "Auld Lang Syne."

Sandwiches and coffee prepared by the "old master," W. A. Witt, were enjoyed at the conclusion of the program.

The Labor World joins hundreds of friends in congratulating George upon his promotion, and approves the sentiment expressed in the following verse, which was submitted in tribute to the old-timer by the mother of one of Chattanooga's old-time trades unionists, Mrs. Marie Batterham Lindesay:

We shall miss our staunch old war horse,
In the many "meets" to be,
When he passes on his journey
In the good old postal sea.

Long has he been our standby,
In council and in hall,
We hate to see him leave us,
And this say one and all.

We know he'll not forget us
In his new place of power,
We wish him every blessing,
From fleeting hour to hour.

Says Empire State Contractors Want to Pay Labor 5 Cents an Hour.

Washington, Dec. 28.—Complaints of Gov. Talmadge, of Georgia, that the civil works administration wage scale of 30 cents an hour for road work is too high for private competition brought the retort from Director Hopkins that "rates as low as 5 cents an hour have been paid for some Georgia road work." He said the civil works administration is paying 30 cents an hour for the same work and the controversy reflected in the complaint of Gov. Talmadge arises from the desire of contractors to continue on a 5-cent-an-hour basis.

"I can see no possibilities of pumping purchasing power into the country at 5 cents an hour," Hopkins said. "Thirty cents an hour is $9 a week if it doesn't rain and men can work. We were told last fall that 30 cents an hour meant no cotton would be picked but cotton reports indicate it was picked, and it will be planted again next spring, too."

'Sunny Maid' Bread Makes Appearance With Union Label

Dixie Bakery Offers Tasty Product for Approval of Labor and Its Friends.

Delegates and visitors to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Wednesday night were privileged to enjoy, for the first time in this city, bread made by union bakers and bearing the label of that organization.

The product is to be featured by the Dixie bakery, 340 East Ninth street, and already many grocers and others throughout the city and suburbs are stocking the bread. Approximately 150 attended the farewell party to George Forbes Monday night, and many enjoyed sandwiches prepared by W. A. Witt for the occasion with the union labeled bread.

The advent of the bakers' label locally is an outgrowth of the organization, some months ago, of a local of the United Bakery and Confectionery Workers of America. The union progressed very satisfactorily, and the larger bakeries, with the exception of the Colonial, are said to be almost 100 per cent. organized. In the case of the Colonial, it will be recalled that workers at this plant were active in the first demands for unionization, but after signing as charter members, for some more or less mysterious reason the Colonial employes left the ranks. Conferences with the management in an effort to develop reasons for the apparently sudden change of heart failed to clear up the matter, and there are yet no members of the local at the Colonial bakery.

The new bakery is under management of B. I. Shapiro, who is a veteran trades unionist, and a delegate to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council.

Brother Shapiro is to be congratulated on his enterprise, and with a product of excellent merit, it is practically assured that the venture will be successful.

Barbers Postpone Regular Meeting

Due to the fact that Monday, regular monthly meeting night for members of Local 415, Barbers, will be New Year's day, the session will be held on Tuesday night, Jan. 2, instead, it was announced Thursday by George W. Perry, president of Local 415.

The Barbers meet at Roosevelt hall.

SECRETARY OF LABOR EXTENDS GREETINGS

Editor The Labor World:

Will you please extend, through your excellent publication, my appreciation to your readers for the aid, counsel, cooperation and encouragement the department of labor has received from so many of them during the past year? Every wage-earner should feel that the department is at his or her service at all times on every matter affecting the working conditions of wage-earners. It is being administered so as to foster, promote and develop the welfare of the country's workers, to improve their working conditions and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

We have been through a long period of depression during which millions of our people were without work with many of them dependent upon relatives or upon charity. The strain under which wage-earners have been is appreciated here. Now conditions are improving.

It seems, in view of millions of men and women who have returned to work in the last nine months and an increase of more than two billion dollars in purchasing power put in pay envelopes, that we should be able to look forward confidently to more jobs and steadier ones.

It is my sincere wish at this season that 1934 will mark the beginning of better opportunities and a broader, happier, more satisfying life for every wage-earner in America.

FRANCES PERKINS,
Secretary of Labor.

George L. Berry Given New Honor By National Board

MAJ. GEORGE L. BERRY

Washington, Dec. 28.—National Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson announced the appointment of Maj. George L. Berry to temporarily relieve Gen. C. C. Williams as divisional administrator, effective Jan. 1, 1934. Gen. Williams, former chief of ordnance of the army, asked to be released, Gen. Johnson explained in a formal statement, because of illness in his family. "Whenever his situation permits he will return," Gen. Johnson added.

Maj. Berry is president of the International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' union and a member not only of the labor advisory board of the recovery administration, but also of the national labor board. He is a charter member and a former senior vice-president of the American Legion.

In announcing the appointment, Gen. Johnson said: "George Berry has the confidence of both industry and labor. In the whole course of this administration I have known nobody who more fully understood or who was more devoted to the president's program. We cannot here appoint crusaders for any particular point of view but, after consultation with leaders of every faction, I have been advised that Maj. Berry's appointment will be welcomed by all groups."

In his new capacity Maj. Berry will be in charge of the code for, among other industries, the boot and shoe and chemical industries.

Santa Claus Visits All "Kiddies" Of Harriman Strikers

Arrogance of mill barons of Harriman, Tenn., who, like others of their kind in the south are hurling defiance at NRA boards by flatly refusing to carry out instructions of the governmental agencies, failed to prevent Old Santa Claus from stopping at the homes of the victims of this 1933 industrial autocracy, and the old saint, through the generosity of fellow-trades unionists, made glad hundreds of little tots on the day of "peace on earth."

A letter received by The Labor World this week from Mrs. Edna L. Gossage, recording secretary of the local union whose members are effectively challenging the mill barons, offers appreciation to Chattanooga trades unionists whose contribution to the good cause helped to make the happy situation. "If ever the time comes when you need our help," Mrs. Gossage says, "I hope we will be in position to help you as generously as you have helped us. We can keep up the fight with renewed vigor thanks to you kind and generous friends," this staunch trades unionist declares.

Mrs. Gossage's letter follows:

To the Members of All the Trade Unions of Chattanooga:

Words cannot express our appreciation for the generous response you made to our appeal for our children's Christmas. Thanks to you brothers and sisters there wasn't a single child that Santa failed to visit. My only regret is that you who made it all possible could not share with me the joy of giving out the gifts, of seeing tears of happiness shining in the eyes of the parents as they tried to express their appreciation that their little ones would not have empty stockings to greet them on Christmas morning. You who were not faced with that possibility cannot know what it really meant, but whether you understood or not you certainly showed hat you had the spirit of Christmas in your hearts.

We were able to buy a small doll for all the "littlest" girls, some kind of truck for all the little boys, puzzles, marbles, guns for the older little children, and a nice treat of oranges, apples, candy and nuts for every one.

We can keep up the fight until the end with renewed vigor thanks to you kind and generous friends. If ever the time comes when you need our help I hope we will be in position to help you as generously as you have helped us.

Thanking you for your courtesy and kindness and wishing you a very Prosperous and Happy New Year, I am,

Fraternally yours,
MRS. EDNA L. GOSSAGE,
Recording Secretary, Local 1757,
U. T. W. of A.

Closing Year Marked Epoch in Progress Of America's Workers

Publicity Campaign In Local Disputes Will Be Renewed

Atlantic Ice - Southeastern Beer, Home Store Matters to Be Aired More Fully.

Following a lull during the holidays, campaign of publicity regarding the position of at least two local concerns which have indicated unusual contempt for the rights of Chattanooga workers will be vigorously renewed, it is announced by officials of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, and will be continued indefinitely.

The year of 1933 brought two major attacks on the progress of local workers, when the so-called "Home Stores," through Roy McDonald, manager, and the Atlantic Ice and Coal corporation, through a subsidiary, the Southeastern Brewing company, indicated their opposition to fair wages and working conditions for local labor.

The ice corporation, a representative of which is said to have boasted of its two and one-half million dollars capital, built a plant for the bottling and distribution of Lion Pilsener Beer, a New York product for which the corporation is said to have exclusive agency in the southeast. After allegedly "soft-soaping" representatives of local workers for some seven weeks, the management was declared "unfair to organized labor." Members of Local 79, Brewery Workers, were discharged in the meantime.

The chain corporation sells coal, does a general cold storage business, wholesale fish, and distributes ice through the Chattanooga Ice Delivery company, also said to be a subsidiary. This, of course, in addition to the distribution of Lion Pilsener beer.

McDonald, "Home Stores" manager, operates a chain of groceries, a bakery, a creamery, a tire agency, a printing plant and issues a weekly "throw-sheet" originally intended as a stepping stone to entry into the daily newspaper field, but which, due to failure of the local business people to approve a non-union outfit of this character, has developed into an advertising sheet for the grocery chain.

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

13 STRIKERS SENT TO JAIL FOLLOWING MASS TRIAL OF 17

Ville Marie, Quebec.—As a result of a mass trial of seventy-seven lumberjacks, thirteen were sent to prisons under sentences ranging from six to twelve months, and sixty-six were released with suspended sentences of six months hanging over their heads.

Charges of rioting were laid against the strikers, who were brought here by airplanes from the Rouyn-Clemson district. This is the most notable instance of mass trials in the history of northern Quebec. The authorities seem to have broken the strike temporarily.

WOMEN GAINING IN JOBS.

Washington, D. C.—Reports to the national recovery administration of a survey conducted by the New York division of the NRA show heavy gains in re-employment of women, with shortening of hours and increased earnings. Increases are especially marked in department stores and restaurants. It is planned to make similar surveys of re-employment of female workers in other large cities early in 1934.

Country Took Heart and Began Great Fight.

NATIONAL EFFORT RECEIVED SUPPORT

Labor Starts Forward March Toward Greater Power Under "Hard Times" Legislative Program.

Washington, Dec. 28.—The year 1933 was of epochal importance to all American labor.

Outstanding above all else was the beginning of the first determined effort, backed by virtually unanimous public sentiment, to cope with the four-year-old depression and bring recovery. The national industrial recovery act was the sprearhead of the attack. Other legislation was of tremendous but secondary importance.

When President Roosevelt took office on March 4, the nation was in the depths. Unemployment had increased to unprecedented proportions, with 25 per cent of the population on relief rolls. Fourteen million or more persons were jobless and desperate. The Roosevelt administration tackled the situation with a speed and vigor hardly dreamed possible and in a short time the psychology of the nation was changed from despair to hope. The long fight for recovery was begun.

Banking Collapse Prevented.

First move was the closing of the banks by presidential order, prevently complete collapse of the banking system and stopping the spread of what might have become uncontrollable panic. At the end of the banking holiday, a majority of the banks were permitted to open for business. Many found unable to meet the requirements of sound banking practice were placed in the hands of treasury department conservators, for orderly salvage in cases where they could not be reopened. Since then, thousands of closed banks have been opened and great sums of money released for circulation. Liquidation of banks in the hands of receivers has proceeded, with depositors getting a substantial part of the money, in many cases through government loans made to the banks on "frozen" assets.

Modification of the Volstead act to permit the manufacture and sale of beer, long advocated by organized labor, was one of the first pieces of recovery legislation passed by congress. In record time, the bill modifying the act was put through and the breweries reopened, giving employment to hundreds of thousands of men in more than a score of trades and industries.

Another important piece of recovery legislation was the act establishing the civilian conservation corps, taking 300,000 unemployed young men off the streets and putting them to work at reforestation and other conservation projects.

NIRA Comes Next.

The all-important NIRA soon followed, resulting in large scale re-employment, estimated at 4,000,000, higher wages and shorter hours for millions and great increase in national purchasing power. In addition, the act largely abolished child labor, banished the sweat shop and brought other important industrial gains.

For organized labor, one of the biggest gains from the NIRA was its recognition of the absolute right of labor to organize and bargain collectively, free from all restraint and interference of employers. This right, stated in the famous Section 7 (a)

Wisdom

I do not prize the word "cheap." It is not a word of hope, nor a word of cheer. It is not a word of inspiration. It is the badge of poverty, the signal of distress. Cheap merchandise means cheap men and cheap men a cheap country.—William McKinley.

A Silly Outbreak

The editorial writer of the morning Times (he would) this week reached into his antiquated and obsolete files and resurrected a skeleton for use in one of his periodical attacks on organized labor, which are apparently built on a foundation of vindictiveness and ignorance.

Speaking of strikes, the sage of the Gilded Dome declares that workers will strike for "any reason upon which they may be persuaded by voluble, inflammatory agitators to base their action."

In years long past, before fair-minded people in all groups of society learned that there are two sides to this labor question, editorial writers for daily papers seemed to take particular delight in referring to representatives of the workers as "inflammatory agitators," etc., but in this enlightened age there are few remaining who will use this bogey man as an excuse to attack labor.

Particularly in view of the fact that labor is supporting the Roosevelt administration 100 per cent in the operation of the recovery act is the Times writer's reference silly. Anyone who knows anything at all about current events is aware that every possible effort is being made to prevent strikes, and that walkouts are only resorted to after every other means for securing justice have been exhausted. With employers such, for instance, as the Harriman mill owners, who have openly and contemptuously defied the NRA, labor disturbances are inevitable; but workers everywhere should be given credit for sanity, and to even intimate that labor officials are fomenting trouble is an insult to the intelligence of every working man and woman and is totally without foundation in fact. Local labor officials are in possession of scores of affidavits proving rank discrimination and violations of federal law under the various codes. This fact, however, would mean nothing to the Times' editorial writer.

It might be remarked in passing, that organized labor's record for support of President Roosevelt's recovery program will stand up against the attitude of many of the country's largest dailies which, when it developed they might not be able to have approved their proposed code, said to have been one of the rottenest submitted, began an underhanded and studied attack on the foundations of the recovery act and on the administration itself.

People who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones, or something like that.

Local trades unionists this week expressed surprise and disappointment that the present management of the morning paper should at least passively approve such a nonsensical and obviously prejudiced attack on labor in general, particularly when it is a matter of common knowledge that the organized labor movement of America is recognized as outstanding among the forces standing foursquare for the president's program.

Senator Reed's Brain Storm

Former United States Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, in criticizing the new deal declares that "the government is interfering with every man's business, assuming that the business of the United States can best be conducted by a group of gentlemen who have never transacted any business in their lives."

Evidently Mr. Reed has forgotten that business men, whose business had been managing industries all their lives, were in complete control of industry during 1930, 1931, 1932, and for a few months at least in 1933. On the question of unemployment alone, here is the record of these superb managers: In January, 1930, there were 3,216,000 unemployed. By August, 1930, the number had risen to 4,101,000, and by December to 5,541,000. In January, 1931, there were 7,160,000 jobless hammering the pavements looking for work, and in December of that year the idle reached 8,908,000. January, 1932, started off with 10,197,000 unemployed, reaching 12,124,000 in December. In March, 1933, there were 13,689,000 persons out of work, the largest number ever recorded in the United States.

This is the record of business men in meeting the problem of unemployment—a record of complete bankruptcy of both permanent policies and emergency measures. Other aspects of our industrial life, all in control of business men, reveal similar bankruptcy.

With the advent of the Roosevelt administration and the principles of the new deal in industry, accompanied with legislation designed to make those principles effective, the army of the unemployed decreased by leaps and bounds until recently, when the civic work project was inaugurated, the number was around 6,000,000, a decrease of over 7,000,000 since March.

In the light of the plainly visible inability of business men to meet practically all the crises connected with the depression, and the achievements of the first few months of the new deal administration, the criticism by Senator Reed is not only unfounded, but absurd. Evidently like the traditional ostrich, he has kept his head in the sand for the last three years and been deaf, dumb and blind to current events in our industrial life.

Civil Works Pay Not Too Much

The fellows who want to keep American standards of living at levels reached in the worst days of the depression are yapping about wages paid workers under the federal government's civil works program. They complain that the very moderate civil works pay rates are too high and are taking workers away from private employers. There is little or no truth in the last assertion, as the government is taking great pains to give work only to men and women who have been on public relief rolls or to others who are without employment.

Gov. Talmadge, of Georgia, who does on publicity, is one of the objectors. He says that if the present civil works pay rates are maintained, "private business in Georgia will be up against it for labor next spring." To which Harry Hopkins, civil works administrator, retorted, "All that guy is after is headlines." He might have added that it is impossible to satisfy some "guys."

Talmadge and the other objectors are wrong. Civil works wages are not too high. What is wrong is that wages in private employment are too low.

New Plan Makes Good

The Labor World hailed inauguration of the federal civil works program as a long step forward in civilized and intelligent handling of the relief problem.

The program, we said, "is a big contribution to the maintenance of the national morale. Nothing is so demoralizing as charity. It saps initiative and self-respect and can only be justified if there is no other possible way to give help. Fortunately, the administration has found a way to remove men from charity lists and give them the work which they have so long desired and sought in vain."

Results of the civil works program justify this praise. It is giving renewed hope and courage to millions. One has only to see the faces of the civil works employes to realize what the program is doing for men and women driven almost to desperation by unemployment and its attendant train of evils.

Quick Relief Needed

The urgent necessity for swift action in providing adequate unemployment relief was forcibly stated by Senator Robert F. Wagner recently in appealing for continuance of relief work by private agencies.

"No future wave of prosperity," Wagner said, "will ever be able to wash away one-tenth of the evils caused by the depression. Spiritual disintegration and physical collapse must be checked before they become complete. Next spring will be too late in hundreds of thousands of cases. The tragic warning of the great classical poet resounds through the ages, 'Easy is the descent into the depths. But to regain the heights, alas, what a hopeless task.'"

Senator Wagner touched on a point that has not been sufficiently emphasized. Human deterioration can reach a stage beyond remedy. This has taken place in too many cases already. It is certain it will take place in even more unless relief comes quickly.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Happy New Year!

It's a nice wish, often said in passing just because it's the thing to say, just as so many say "morning," without any meaning whatever—sort of an off-hand pleasantry just to let passers-by know you're not sore at 'em. But there's a better chance that this year will be a happier one than there was a year ago.

Folks, there's work today—work is being done. That means payrolls and that means groceries and clothes that have been earned. Fundamentally, that's the foundation of happiness.

In thousands upon thousands of homes the year 1934 will start happy right off the bat because work again has shown up. Codes, scold them as you will, have put men to work. The CWR has put millions on payrols. Some call the CWA a camouflaged dole. It isn't. Not by a jugful. That's planned work, with definite fruits flowing therefrom.

A fellow can take a CWA job and call it a job. He can't call it charity, no matter how he tries. Well, not so bad; not so bad.

Happy New Year—and you can drink it down with a stein, too, if you want to, or, in most places even welcome it with a highball.

Whoever wants to can tie old 1933 up in a package with a zipper fastening and lay it away on the shelf. It saw the last of depression. It saw the end of going backwards.

Of course there is no new civilization yet in full flower. Plenty yet to kick about, but let's save the kicking until next week. This week, birthday week, is a good time to just take off all restraint and see the bright side, which is plenty bright when compared with, say last December, last January or last February. Unemployment is on the run, definitely and plenty.

It won't be long before the big fat fellows will be squealing and squawking at the cost of it. Unearned incomes probably are due for the sock of their life. That's all right with most folks. Let it come.

If congress gets obstreperous about appropriations for the good works there'll be a lobby of the millions who have gone to work. Will they speak up? Ah, listen, my children, and you shall hear—plenty!

And so, Happy New Year!

Holidays are Busy days

There is a hustle and a bustle during the holiday season that keeps every member of the family busy. So many things must be done—trips to make—last minute purchases—suddenly remembered details—general confusion.

A time like this emphasizes the value and convenience of a telephone in the home. Almost magically, you can be everywhere at once. Your friends can reach you with equal ease.

As a practical present for the entire family—and practicality is an important consideration this year—the telephone is ideal. Every day in the year it will add to your family's comfort and happiness. In addition to its daily helpfulness, telephone service is an assurance that the doctor, fire department, or police department may be quickly summoned if needed.

Probably the idea of giving a telephone as a present for the whole family is new to you, but it is worth thinking over. For information about the service, just get in touch with the business office or ask any telephone employee.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF NATIONAL RECOVERY ACT BACKED BY JURIST

Justice Black, of New York State Supreme Court, Holds "General Welfare" Clause Gives Congress Power to Enact Legislation to Meet the National Emergency Caused by Millions of Unemployed Workers and Wholesale Reduction in American Living Standards.

New York, Dec. 27.—In the opinion of Justice William Harmon Black, of the New York state supreme court, the national recovery industrial recovery act is in entire accord with both the spirit and letter of the federal constitution. For his legal grounds Justice Black said he relied on Article 1 of Section 8 of the constitution, which confers on congress the power "to provide for the commone defense and the general welfare."

Justice Black gave his opinion at a dinner of the Phi Delta Phi fraternity of Columbia University Law school at the Princeton club. After his speech the students and faculty members present adopted a resolution indorsing his views.

Why Congress Enacted the Law.

In the policy declaration of the recovery act, congress siad:

"A national emergency productive of widespread unemployment and disorganization of industry, which burdens interstate and foreign commerce, affects the public welfare and undermines the standards of living of the American people, is hereby declared to exist."

To meet this emergency and "to provide for the general welfare," congress declared that it was its policy, among other things, "to eliminate unfair competitive practices, * * * to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power, to reduce and relieve unemployment, to improve standards of labor, and otherwise to rehabilitate industry and to conserve natural resources."

Government's Right to Relieve Distress.

In amplification of his opinion that the recovery act does not controvert the constitution of the United States, Justice Black said:

"The other evening at the state chamber of commerce dinner former Representative Martin W. Littleton paid glowing tribute to the permanency and binding power of the constitution. But if I understood his remarks right he followed his tribute to the constitution with a defiance of the recovery program. I gathered that his objection to it was based on the fact that the recovery program invaded the rights of citizens.

"A state or a government under a charter or a constitution too rigid too allow the succor of its people in times of distress does not deserve to endure. Such a government is the victim of creeping paralysis, and is simply 'dead and don't know it.'

"Congress has power to declare war. Can it be seriously contended that congress can declare war and cannot provide for peace by preventing cut-throat competition?

"Every government has the inherent right to provide for the commonweal and do just what our government is doing today. The only thing that ought to keep a government from looking out for itself is some technical provision in its charter or constitution."

LABOR ATTACKS PROPOSED CODES FOR CAPITAL GOODS INDUSTRIES

Washington, Dec. 27.—A general labor attack on codes for the capital machinery industries was launched at hearing on a code for the conveyor and material preparation equipment industry. The codes are being fostered by the Machine and Allied Products institute, known as the MAPI.

E. C. Davison, secretary of the International Association of Machinists, protested against the idea of a master code for all the capital goods industries, asserting that labor had been taken unawares and "had no conception of handling these industrial codes as a mass proposition."

He went on to enumerate the labor demands, which were substantially the same as in the Diesel engine hearing. He asked a 35-hour week and minimum wage for common labor of 50 cents per hour. He declared the code, as worded, would permit work for an unlimited number of hours except that in one six weeks' period the employes could not work more than forty-eight hours a week, and he assumed this was an error or misprint.

Col. Horner, assistant deputy administrator, who conducted the hearing, asked Mr. Swift, the legal adviser, for a legal interpretation of the clause, and Swift said it meant that a 40-hour rule would be observed except in peak seasons when the industry might work forty-eight hours for a six weeks' period. Horner said the provision would be clarified so that there would be no doubt about the establishment of a 40-hour work week for all save the rush season.

Fred Hewitt, labor adviser on the code, made a lengthy statement over the protest of Col. Horner, on behalf of labor's position in connection with MAPI codes. He said he wanted it understood that organized labor wished to co-operate in working out uniform labor provisions in capital goods codes—that MAPI was trying to obtain uniformity and labor agreed this was desirable.

Hewitt said there would be "all sorts of trouble" unless the capital machinery codes were written in language not susceptible to differing interpretations as, he contended, was the case with the code under consideration. "We are having trouble holding our men in shops all over the country," he declared. "They want to strike in industries now operating under NRA codes, but we are asking that they remain at work until we can iron out these matters in Washington."

We hope your New Year diary may begin with "Happy" followed by "Ditto" on every page throughout the year!

Six-Hour Day Asked By Railroad Unions

Chicago, Dec. 28.—The officials of the Railway Labor Executives' association, representing twenty-one standard rail unions, in session here, will conduct an aggressive campaign for the six-hour day for railroad employes, it was announced by Alexander F. Whitney, chairman of the association.

In explaining the demand for the six-hour day, which the association holds should be applied without reduction in pay, Mr. Whitney said investigation by the unions has revealed that, beginning with 1920, the railroads were foremost in creating a large army of unemployed workers.

Since then, he declared, more than 300,000 rail workers were displaced as a result of technological changes in the industry, and this number was further augmented by 500,000 men laid off as the result of the industrial depression.

Any program for improving the efficiency of the railroad industry, according to Mr. Whitney, must comprehend a progressive shortening of the working time, without any reduction in compensation in order to provide work for railway men. Unless the industry shortened the work he saw no hope for the 600,000 unemployed rail workers.

CLOSING YEAR

of the act, gave a great impetus to organization of the workers, resulting in the addition of many thousands of new members to the American Federation of Labor. Organization is still going on at a rapid rate and 1934 is expected to see the A. F. of L. reach record membership.

Labor Loyally Supports Act.

Labor, though not entirely satisfied with the recovery act, gave it loyal and unswerving support from the beginning and has been a great factor in its success. Labor has insisted the act must be upheld and has been a big force in preventing its violation. Great strides were made in bringing all industry under the NIRA codes and 1934 finds the act the dominating influence in the American business and industrial scene.

The recovery act was hailed as marking a new policy and outlook in American life, opening the way to higher standards of life for the masses and spelling a "new deal" for the entire nation. The intent of the act was stated by congress to be "to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purpose of co-operative action among trades groups, to induce and maintain united action of labor and management under adequate governmental sanctions and supervision, to eliminate unfair competitive practices, to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries, to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required), to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power, to reduce and relieve unemployment, to improve standards of labor, and otherwise to rehabilitate industry and to conserve natural resources."

In October came the great convention of the American Federation of Labor in Washington, of vital interest to all organized workers. The convention accomplished much effective work, placing itself squarely behind every sound effort to better the condition of labor. President William Green and all officers were re-elected by unanimous vote.

The 30-hour week was set as the goal for immediate attainment for all industry, the convention declaring that if the NIRA does not bring about reemployment through the operation of codes reducing hours and increasing wages, a bill providing for a compulsory 30-hour maximum work week will be introduced in congress this winter.

As a means of improving the operation of the recovery act, and extending full co-operation, the convention demanded inclusion of labor representatives on all recovery act boards and agencies, whether national, state or local. Following the convention, the A. F. of L. pressed the fight for adequate NIRA labor representation.

Prominent among the actions of the convention was its declaration of a boycott of German goods and services, in protest against Hitler's destruction of German democracy and trade unionism. A feature of the convention was the dedication of the Samuel Gompers memorial. President Roosevelt was the chief speaker.

In the closing weeks of the year came the inauguration of the government's civil works program, which took 4,000,000 men and women off of public relief rolls and put them to work. Also in the closing weeks, came the approval of scores of NIRA codes and greater progress in the government's public works program, which had been slow in getting started, failing to give the expected employment and proving a disappointment to its friends.

Notice to Delinquent Tax Payers

When the last legislature enacted the Craig bill, which suspended interest and penalty up to and including December 31, 1933, if paid on or before that date, on delinquent taxes of the 1922-1931 levies, it provided taxpayers with an unparalleled opportunity to save money on their delinquent taxes.

Beginning January 1, 1934, the delinquent tax attorney will be forced to collect these taxes by law, including all interest and penalty, and the taxpayers will have no recourse.

If your net unpaid tax for 1929, for instance, is $100.00, and you don't pay it by December 31, 1933, it will cost you $47.00 more the next day, or

If your net unpaid tax for 1930 is $100.00, and you don't pay it by December 31, 1933, it will cost you $33.50 more the next day, or

If your net unpaid tax for 1931 is $100.00, and you don't pay it by December 31, 1933, it will cost you $22.00 more the next day.

(On older levies proportionately more.)

I deem it my duty to convey the above information to the taxpayers, that they may not fail to take advantage of this great saving, if it is at all possible for them to do so.

Sincerely,
WILL CUMMINGS ,County Judge.

LABOR THROUGHOUT COUNTRY PLUNGES INTO PLANNING BIG ROOSEVELT BIRTHDAY PARTIES

Committee Named to Bring All Organized Workers Into National Celebration on January 30 to Honor President and Aid Infantile Paralysis Sufferers Throughout Nation.

Washington, Dec. 28.—With tremendous enthusiasm, central labor bodies throughout the country have plunged into the planning of a presidential birthday celebration on January 30.

President Green and Vice-President Woll, as chairman and secretary of the labor division of the national committee, have received more than 400 responses already, with the probability that the response will be almost unanimous within this week.

Three committees have been organized for the arrangement of labor's participation in the national program in every city and town throughout the United States.

A labor advisory committee has been appointed, consisting of officers of national and international unions; a labor co-operative committee consists of officers of state federations and central bodies; a labor press committee consists of labor editors.

One Big American Party.

The national committee has arranged for a one-hour national broadcast on the evening of Jan. 30, so that a program of the best talent obtainable may join the local celebrations everywhere into one great American party.

Warm Springs Foundation, which will benefit by a portion of the proceeds of each ticket, is designed to bring together the whole national effort for treating and combating infantile paralysis and for rehabilitating those crippled by the dread disease. Its work will be tremendously broadened, for the benefit of the masses of the American people, as a result of this enormous birthday celebration. President Roosevelt will address the parties throughout the nation during the broadcast.

Big Celebrations Planned.

Cities already laying plans for tremendous celebrations include New York, Washington, Philadelphia, Chicago, Indianapolis, Miami, Pittsburgh, Galesburg, Ill.; Springfield, Ill.; Fort Worth, Tex.; Grand Island, Neb.; Muncie, Ind.; Pine Bluff, Ark.; Buffalo, N. Y., and many other cities. It is expected that by the end of the week plans will be under way in scores of cities. On the basis of replies already received, Secretary Woll estimates there will be more than five hundred local celebrations as a part of the national president's birthday ball.

PRESIDENT GIVES NLB GREATER POWER TO DEAL WITH RECALCITRANT BOSSES

Washington, Dec. 28.—The national labor board has been given a more definite status, and its powers and functions defined in an executive order issued by the president. The action is preliminary to the attorney-general giving consideration to the case of Weirton Steel company, but leaves open the question of the adequacy of the previous record on which the attorney-general is asked by NRA to take action. The NLB has been acting under the general terms of Section 7 (a) of the recovery act.

The president in his order states that the NLB was created Aug. 5 to "pass promptly on any case of hardship or dispute that may arise from interpretation or application of the president's re-employment agreement," and prescribes that it "shall continue to adjust all industrial disputes, whether arising out of the interpretation and operation of the PRA or any duly approved industrial code of fair competition, and to compose all conflicts threatening the industrial peace of the country." Then he adds that "All action heretofore taken by this board in the discharge of its functions is hereby approved and ratified."

The latter sentence is believed to clear the way for the attorney-general to proceed with the Weirton case, and to make possible a test of the law on the record as it stands.

The NLB has been proceeding as an NRA unit vested with power designated and defined by Gen. Johnson, and acting with his authority, to adjust through arbitration labor disputes and grievances arising in connection with the president's re-employment agreement, or such industrial codes as have been promulgated and approved. In recent weeks the board has assumed more of a judicial status, and its authority and powers have been directly challenged by the Weirton Steel company, of Pittsburgh, and the E. G. Budd company, of Philadelphia. The Budd company declined to appear at a hearing on grievances presented by its employes.

The president's order gives NLB a definite status of its own and removes it from the scope of a unit of NRA acting solely on power and authority delegated by Gen. Jhonson and coming within his sphere as administrator of the recovery act.

Senator Wagner has always held that the NLB possessed all the powers now defined by the president; it has preferred not to use those powers in its arbitration work because voluntary agreements were better than decisions enforced by the government. The Weirton and Budd cases have forced a showdown; the president takes this method of letting recalcitrant employers know that there is to be no trifling with the NLB.

By its retroactive features, the executive order confirms also the operations of the NLB in supervising elections and more or less outlawing company unions.

Mayors Urge 8,000,000 Be Given Jobs Under Civil Works Program

Washington, Dec. 28.—As Harry L. Hopkins, federal relief and civil works administrator, announced that 4,000,000 men had been put to work on the civil works program up to Dec. 15, the United States conference of mayors, in session here, recommended that 8,000,000 be employed on civil works projects.

"There should be a doubling of the quota to be distributed on the basis of need to be determined by the civil works administrator," the mayors' conference urged.

"If work and wages to 4,000,000 additional people are provided, we feel that national recovery will be accelerated, if we are to judge the future by the accomplishments obtained to date through the civil works administration."

Hopkins estimated that of the $500,000,000 appropriated for relief there would be left by Jan. 1 about $170,000,000, which "should last until about March 15." Grants to states for relief and other expenditures have totaled about $320,000,000.

Under the revised rules and regulations governing hours of labor, wage rates and conditions of employment, made public recently, Hopkins estimated that the average pay of civil works employes would be $50 a month.

15,000 PENNSYLVANIA CHILDREN LEAVE JOBS FOR SCHOOL DESKS

Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 7.—Approximately 15,000 boys and girls have been returned to the schools because of NRA codes barring children under 16 from industry, Dr. James N. Rule, superintendent of public instruction, reports. Since the opening of schools in September these children, who otherwise would have been working and attending school only about eight hours a week, have been in schools on full time.

Brushville Native—Oh! It's a pretty lively place for its size. Why, it's not two weeks since we had an eclipse of the moon.

Prospects Dark For City Schools, Dr. Zook Declares

Washington, Oct. 28.—City schools are badly affected by the depression, a survey by Dr. George F. Zook, federal commissioner of education, reveals.

"Prospects reported by city superintendents for the current year," Dr. Zook said in his second recent study of the effect of the depression on schools, "are, as a whole, dark, although there are some bright spots in the national picture.

The commissioner said reductions in current operating budgets for schools had averaged almost 20 per cent since 1921.

"School budget reductions in small cities of the north, central, south central and western states averaged 33 per cent between 1931 and the present school year," he said.

"Very few cities have not made some reduction in teachers' salaries since 1930. The reductions run as high as 40 and 45 per cent. The average increase is probably about 14 per cent. Further reductions are reported in prospect for the current year."

Dr. Zook summarized some of his findings as follows:

"City schools are operating with about 18,000 fewer teachers now than in 1930.

"Enrollment is up sharply—probably 200,000 more than in 1930.

"Expenditures are down. City schools are now running on approximately $133,000,000 less for current expenses than they did in 1931-32.

"Few school buildings are being built. Few old ones have been repaired. Expenses for capital outlay have dropped considerably."

"The school term was reduced in length in one out of every four cities," the commissioner said of the budget slashes. "Kindergartens were reduced or eliminated in eighty cities out of 404 reporting. Playground activity was seriously curtailed at eighty-five out of 502 cities. The supply of free textbooks was reduced in 106 cities and new books eliminated altogether in six of 604 cities which replied."

TEACHERS FAVOR STRIKE FOR UNPAID SALARIES

Scranton, Pa.—Vigorously protesting because the school boards refused to pay them back salaries, 146 teachers in two Lackawana and one Luzerne county communities threatened to join the strike already declared by thirty teachers and close the schools until the salaries are paid. Over 900 school children are already on "vacation" because of the thirty teachers' strike, and the proposed walkout will release 4,000 more boys and girls from classes.

"COMPANY UNION" MEN STRIKE.

New Orleans.—Efforts by the NRA industrial relations board failed to settle a strike of a "company union" longshoremen employe by the Munson line, plying between this city and New York. Work had been done on three ships and the men demanded pay in full. The company refused, but made an arrangement to pay off on two. The men refused to accept the offer and strikebreakers were secured to break the deadlock. The Munson line refused to treat with organized labor affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, but it could operate satisfactorily with a "company union."

LOTTERY LOAN TO PROVIDE FUNDS FOR PUBLIC WORKS

Vienna, Austria.—Austria is floating a new 50-year 4 per cent internal lottery loan for 330,000,000 schillings (about $55,000,000), which is to be used in part for public works to give jobs to the unemployed. The lottery plan, combined with the loan, will provide prizes amounting to 3,000,000 schillings a year for the first ten years. These will be distributed twice annually, in March and September. The principal annual prize is 1,000,000 schillings and there are 2,200 smaller prizes.

ABOR BOARD TAKES UP CASE MILL STRIKERS

arriman Affair To Be Probed To Bottom.

RROGANCE OF BOSSES CONTINUES

efiance of Regional Board, Jailing of Workers To Be Investigated.

News that the national labor board s assumed entire jurisdiction over e case of the Harriman Hosiery ll strike was received in Chatta-oga Friday morning with gratifica-n by members of organized labor. The Harriman case has been one of e most troublesome encountered by uthern workers, the mill manage-ent having openly defied the orders the regional labor board.

That the mill barons have lost none their arrogance is indicated in a ws item quoting a spokesman for e employers, who states that the mpany "will not agree at any time recognize the union, arbitrate upon opositions we are unable to agree on, or to enter into contracts indi-dually or collectively with the work-s."

Several hundred workers at the arriman mill struck some months o following alleged discriminations d discharges of employes for join-a newly organized union, and the ll management subsequently flatly fused to comply with the aerms of settlement agreed upon by the re-onal labor board. The employes are ll out.

The name of J. Harvey Wilson, lo-l mill spokesman, was connected th the Harriman case, but mill own-there denied that Wilson had any terest in the Harriman mill.

An indication of the "co-operation" ven the president's program by the rogant bosses of the Harriman con-rn is seen in the following news ory, carried this week by Interna-nal Labor News Service and its 0 affiliated labor publications:

Harriman, Tenn., Jan. 4.—Not only s the Harriman Hosiery company fused to follow the advice of the eional labor board that the com-ny deal collectively with its union-d employes, but has demonstrated contempt for the NRA still fur-r by having enjoined and arrested r contempt of court more than enty of the workers and H. Han-h, counsel for the local union.

Organizer Fred G. Held, discussing e Harriman situation, says the mpany tried to pretend to the re-onal labor board that it had paid ges no worse than others in the ea. Its pretense appeared in the bor board's report.

Then the company used the pre-se as a basis for a bill of com-aint before the Roane county chan-ry court. An injunction was se-ed prohibiting picketing and other ful strike activities.

Later an effort was made to have court ratify the injunction so as permit picketing, which was done. returning to Harriman from the unty seat, the strikers were in-rmed the court order had been al-red and several workers went back o the picket line.

Immediately over twenty strikers re arrested with Attorney Hannah d charged with contempt of court.

Letter Indicates Wonderful Spirit At Andrews Co.

President of Local Concern Expresses Appreciation for Esteem of Workers.

Copy of a letter furnished The Labor World this week, written by O. B. Andrews to all employes of his company, indicates a wonderful spirit of co-operation and mutual good will at the huge local plants of the O. B. Andrews company.

The letter is in appreciation for a splendid Christmas gift presented the executive by employes in all departments of the company, and offers a moral which might well be noted by other large employers of labor.

Mr. Andrews, who is one of the largest employers of Chattanooga workers, has religiously observed the code covering all departments of the company, and in return has gained the respect and esteem of all his employes, who indicated same in a slight token presented the manufacturer as a Christmas present.

Mr. Andrews' letter follows:

When I returned to my home last night after ten days' absence in New York I was surprised and mystified at the exquisite radio I found resting in my sun parlor. I just couldn't believe my own eyes until I saw the greeting from the employes which was fastened to the gift.

This was so unexpected and such an exquisite present I hardly know how to express my thanks. I can say, however, that I appreciate just as much the sentiment and good-will prompting this present as the gift itself, and both together have made me very happy.

I do not believe there is anyone who enjoys a radio quite as much as I do. I have had all kinds of different makes of them and run mine constantly when I am at home. I had been wanting very much to have a short wave set and somebody must have read my mind.

I wish that everyone of you could see this machine and hear it in operation, as it has the most exquisite tone of any radio I have ever listened to and I was greatly thrilled last night to be able to get foreign countries on it. It is simply perfect in selectivity of tone and appearance. I think I am a pretty good judge of a radio and this one is simply the last word.

I wish it were possible to have each and every one of the several hundred factory employes see and hear this radio, personally, but as this is impossible I hope you will all take this communication personally, as thanks for your good wishes and your thoughtfulness. I am very, very grateful.

I hope that the New Year will bring to you all everything that you desire. I hope that business conditions will continue to improve and that we will all have plenty of time, plenty of money and be happy.

Cordially and sincerely yours,
O. B. ANDREWS.

NATIONAL LABOR BOARD FORCES 'HARD-BOILED' BOSSES TO SIGN UNION CONTRACT

Declares Employer Who Refuses to Make Written Agreement With Employes Is "Paying Lip Service at Most" to NRA—"Only Signed Contract Can Give Both Parties Sense of Certainty and Security Essential to Industrial Peace."

"The employer who protests his willingness to deal with the representatives of his employes, but who categorically refuses from the outset to make any written agreement with them, is paying lip service at most to Section 7 (a) of the National Recovery Act."

Thus did the national labor board pillory those employers who are professing to believe that the N. R. A. actually prevents contractural relations between them and their employes. many industrial leaders, desirous of keeping "their skirts clean" regarding cooperation with the national administration, are publicly proclaiming their approval of the recovery program while they "burn the midnight oil" privately to discredit and destroy the president's plan.

Answering an appeal by the Pierson Manufacturing company, of Quincy, Ill., employing 450 members of the United Garment Workers, that the company "could not make a written agreement" with its employes, the board ordered the concern to make such signed agreement, stating that

"The disadvantages of basing a business relationship upon verbal understandings are too obvious to require comment by this board. Only a written agreement can give both parties the sense of certainty and security which is essential to lasting industrial peace."

The Pierson company workers went on strike on Oct. 16 in protest against the company's rate of piecework wages and its refusal to deal with the United Garment Workers as the representatives of the employes. The plant has been under the cotton garment code since Oct. 2.

Soon after the strike began, the case was referred to the St. Louis regional labor board, which endeavored to mediate the dispute. Upon the request of the national labor board, the striking employes returned to work on Nov. 15, pending and in reliance upon a settlement of the matters in controversy by the board. A subsequent hearing was held in St. Louis at which the employes' representatives sought only a written contract, assuring them that the company would negotiate with them in the future, and that all unsettled disputes would thereafter be submitted to a jointly selected arbitrator. The St. Louis board made a recommendation for settlement which included such a proposed agreement, but this was rejected by the Pierson company.

The national labor board thereupon called a hearing in Washington. The company's vice-president stated that while it was willing to deal with the employes' representatives, "we cannot and will not sign a written agreement with our employes." The company rejected the national labor board's suggestion that an arbitration clause be included with a proviso that it would be canceled by either side upon thirty days' notice.

The national labor board made a sharp criticism of company's refusal to sign a written agreement, saying in this connection:

"The disadvantages of basing a business relationship upon verbal understandings are too obvious to require comment by this board. Only a written agreement can give both parties the sense of certainty and security which is essential to lasting industrial peace. The employer who protests his willingness to deal with the representatives of his employes, but who categorically refuses from the outset to make any written agreement with them, is paying lip service, at most, to Section 7 (a) of the national recovery act."

Offer Sympathy To Former President

Tragic death of little Mary Jean, 3-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Rose, who received fatal burns when she fell into a pot of hot water on Friday, Dec. 22, from which she succumbed on Sunday, Dec. 24, was noted at the regular weekly meeting of Local 74, Carpenters, and sincerest sympathy was offered to the relatives of the little one. Mr. Rose, the father, was formerly president of Local 74, and has been an active member and official of that organization for a long time.

The Carpenters' expression, offered by a committee consisting of Z. B. Bender, Ed Tucker and A. V. Cordell, follows:

Whereas, on Friday, Dec. 22, 1933, little Mary Jean, daughter of Brother and Mrs. Tom Rose, met with a tragic and fatal accident, and departed this life on the following Sunday, Dec. 24; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the members of Carpenters' Local 74, extend to Mr. and Mrs. Rose our heartfelt sympathy in their great bereavement, and individually and collectively offer sincerest condolences in their hour of sorrow; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be furnished Brother Rose, and The Labor World for publication.

The Labor World speaks for the entire trades union movement in adding our condolences to the bereaved relatives.

Hosiery Workers Get 5 Per Cent Weekly Pay Raise

National Labor Board Hands Down Award in Wage Dispute Which Nearly Led to General Strike Last September.

Washington, Jan. 5.—A general pay increase of 5 per cent has been granted by the national labor board in deciding the wage dispute between the American Federation of Hosiery Workers and the Full Fashioned Hosiery Manufacturers of America, Inc.

The case was brought before the national labor board in August when the union notified the board that a strike of the industry had been called for Sept. 1.

Complaints dating from July 10 against manufacturers in four or five states, alleging refusal to renew the agreements with the union, had already been placed before the board. Manufacturers also requested the intervention of the board.

The board succeeded at a hearing on Aug. 31 in averting the strike through an agreement whereby negotiations were to be carried on for twenty-two days, with the understanding that the board would arbitrate the wage dispute in case of failure of negotiations. On Sept. 19 both sides agreed to submit the case to the board's arbitration and on Sept. 29 the board held a hearing as an arbitrating body.

The decision constitutes a detailed settlement affecting all matters of wages and their adjustment in the industry.

Those who desire better living and working conditions must do their share to secure them. Demand union made goods and service.

Higher Purchasing Power Under NRA Aids Big Stores

New Orleans.—Despite the fact that the NRA has hoisted the overhead expenses of the big department stores in New Orleans approximately 35 per cent over those of previous years, both in hours of labor and the increased number of employes to comply with the code, and last but not least, the uniform wage of $12 a week for the clerks, business has increased owing to the increased purchasing power brought New Orleans workers by code wages.

BAKERS WIN MAJOR BATTLES ON TWO FRONTS

Higher Wages, Shorter Hours, Awarded.

LABOR BOARD ENDS STRIKE OF WORKERS

New Unions Secure Recognition and Benefits Through Organization and NRA.

Washington, Jan. 4.—Higher rates of pay and shorter hours of work are given bakers and bakery drivers in a decision of the national labor board.

The case came before the board following a strike last September over the refusal of the companies to recognize unions formed by the inside bakers and the wagon drivers.

The award provides for increase of wages; wholesale and retail salesmen are guaranteed a minimum of $28.00 per week; truck drivers from $27.50 to $32.50; the work week is fixed at 44 hours. The union's claim for vacations with pay is disallowed. The award recognizes the men's rights to organize and specifies the form of written agreement.

For inside bakers wage rates for a 44-hour week are fixed at 40 to 80 cents an hour.

Any further disputes arising under the agreement and award are to be referred to the Philadelphia regional labor board.

PITTSBURGH BAKERS GAIN UNDER LABOR BOARD AWARD

The national labor board followed up its Philadelphia bakery decision with a decision covering Pittsburgh bakeries, including inside bakery workers and drivers. Substantial gains are given the workers under the award, which covers union-employer contracts, running for one year.

Wholesale and retail drivers are guaranteed $27 per week, truck drivers the same. The work-week is fixed at 44 hours. If the permanent bakery code provides better hours or wages, such hours and wages shall prevail. Time and a third overtime is to run between 44 and 48 hours, time and a half over 48. Inside men are given substantial wage increases in scale running from 60 cents an hour for mixers, oven men and bench hands to 45 cents an hour for packers and 40 cents for girls.

Dairy Workers Meet With Employers

Representatives of Dairy Workers' Local 428 met with local employers from the principal dairies in a dinner at a local hotel last Tuesday night and discussed matters of mutual interest.

According to members of the new union, a better understanding came from the informal session, and it is believed much good was accomplished by the exchange of ideas looking to the betterment of conditions of this trade.

Representing the union were President J. H. Bannister, Secretary M. L. Wilson and Business Agent Arnold Morgan.

Paul J. Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and T. R. Cuthbert, secretary of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, also were present and participated in the discussions.

Roy Lee Improves After Bad Attack

R. R. Lee, well-known official of Local 79, Brewery Workers, was reported Friday morning as somewhat improved following a severe illness at his home. Mr. Lee was first attacked by ptomaine poisoning, followed by a siege of intestinal influenza which has confined him to his home almost continuously for several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee are planning a trip to Florida, where it is believed the hot sun will "boil the illness out" of the victim.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—I have seen references to guilds as forerunners of modern trade unions. What were the guilds?

A.—They were associations or corporations of persons engaged in kindred pursuits, formed for mutual protection, aid or co-operation and known in England from the seventh century.

Q.—Who are the labor members of the national labor board?

Q.—What did the term, "iron clads," as used by labor, mean?

A.—The term was applied about fifty years ago to contracts resembling the "yellow dog" contracts. Labor men said that this name came from the fact that when a worker signed such a contract he temporarily gave up his privilege of exercising his fundamental rights.

What Next!

Snore This One Off

When you hear a "snorer" wheezing nasal lucubrations, croaking dismally and darkly that the NRA is breaking down, don't waste your time trying to wake him up. He is one who cannot get an idea in his head and must therefore, perforce, get it in the neck.

The obituary writers will have a difficult job in getting over the second-quarter earning reports showing conclusively that 1932 deficits are being turned into 1933 profits. A compilation by the New York Sun reveals that the third quarter net income of 150 industrial companies was $98,914,115, compared with deficits of $17,686,722 sustained in the third quarter of 1932. All but four of the 25 companies which reported their quarterly net showed a substantial increase in earnings per share.

Another tabulation by Standard Statistics and covering the operations of 89 companies during the first nine months of 1933, shows a gain of 160 per cent. over 1932. For the quarter ended Sept. 30 these same firms earned 11 times as much as they did in 1932's comparable period.

For some industries, notably textiles, the entire September quarter was operated under NRA codes. Backing up these good reports of earnings is the announcement that collections are better than they have been in two years.

All this may be hard on the Jeremiahs, but it strengthens the confidence of the public that there is a lot of good in the Blue Eagle after all.

N. R. A. Wages Too Low

Too many reports are being received of workers unable to earn a decent living under NRA code minimum wages. One instance is that of workers in a Minnesota packing plant who were forced to strike because their earnings under the code resulted in a weekly income which, in the words of the Minnesota Industrial Commission, were "inadequate to maintain American standards of living."

It becomes increasingly evident that NRA codes, by shortening hours of work and not making adequate compensating increases in hourly rates, have resulted in many cases in lowering wages. This will not bring recovery. The situation was summed up well by Elmer E. Milliman, secretary-treasurer of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes, who told the Catholic Conference on Industrial Problems at Detroit:

"Progress has been made under the NRA along the lines of shortening hours and increasing wages, but in a great many cases it has been a question of only placing a small portion of the unemployed to work and on a minimum wage basis; and there has been a great, glorified 'share the work' program carried on which has helped to pauperize thousands of our workers who, before the application of the recovery act, were working longer hours.

"Despite the intent of the NRA, the earnings of such employes have decreased rather than increased under this program. Consumptive power cannot be built up in this manner."

A Notable Victory

The day-to-day achievements of organized labor in protecting their members from victimization often remain unknown outside the immediate circle where the workers are benefitted. Many of these achievements merit larger publicity. One of them is the victory won by the Massachusetts State Federation of Labor for forty-two molders who were discharged by the Glenwood Range company, of Taunton, Mass., on April 27, 1933.

Union officials alleged that the American Mutual Insurance company forced the range company to dismiss the men because of their age and put up a vicious fight against the victimization accompanied with a demand for wages for lost time. After six months' struggle, forty-one of the molders (one having died in the interim) were paid $18 per week for lost wages, amounting to $17,750, and returned to work with all of their rights under the workmen's compensation law reserved.

Robert J. Watt, secretary-treasurer and legislative representative of the Massachusetts State Federation of Labor, who handled the case, expresses the opinion that the terms of the settlement "will have a tendency to prevent the discharge of men because they have grown old in industry."

Social Justice Legislation

The twelve-point program of social justice legislation which William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, urges all subordinate organizations, representing more than five million workers, to support, is both an expression of high idealism and an example of pragmatism as applied to labor legislation.

The twelve points follow:

Workmen's compensation laws.
Unemployment insurance.
Anti-injunction legislation.
Child-labor laws.
Ratification of the Child Labor amendment to the Federal Constitution.
Minimum wage laws for women and minors.
Improved standards for teachers in public schools.
Shorter work day and work week for workers in public and private employment.
Safety legislation.
Inspection and sanitary legislation.
Convict labor laws.

In the language of Mr. Green, in his letter urging all affiliated bodies to use every effort to secure the enactment of the program into law: "The measures are all important, as they relate to the social and economic life of the working people in the different states and throughout the nation."

The necessity of this legislation to protect the economic interests of the workers of America is so apparent that the entire program, which has been drafted and endorsed by conventions of the American Federation of Labor, should be accepted by all progressive persons as an immediate goal without close scrutiny and consideration.

Railroads "Consider" Company Unions

An Associated Press dispatch announces that the Southern railroad regional co-ordinating committee met in the office of W. R. Cole, president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, Louisville, Ky., to consider what action was to be taken in reply to charges made by Joseph B. Eastman, federal co-ordinator of transportation, that "railroads are violating the labor provisions of the emergency transportation act." It is announced that executives of the eastern and western roads are also "considering" the charges.

Specifically, Mr. Eastman charged that many railroad corporations are financing and otherwise supporting company unions, intimidating employes for activities in connection with bona fide unions and resorting to other antiunion schemes which, Mr. Eastman said, are violations of the emergency transportation act signed by President Roosevelt on June 16 of this year. He not only told the railroad executives that they were violating the labor section of the act, but warned that unless they discontinued these subversive practices forthwith he would cite them to the attorney-general of the United States for prosecution as law violators.

Inasmuch as the railroad executives have consciously violated for more than six months the provisions of the act which outlaw company-controlled "labor" groups, it would seem that the time has come for them to stop "considering" their unlawful actions and obey the law as interpreted by Mr. Eastman.

They should promptly abolish their corporation-conceived, corporation-organized, corporation-financed unions, and thus get in touch with the new deal in industrial relationships which underlies the labor sections of both the emergency transportation act and the national industrial recovery act. The company union is dead in spirit, condemned by the law, and denounced by public opinion. It should be killed in fact.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

As we plunge into this brand new year it is just as well that we try to get our minds clear on the direction we are taking. We may not continue in our present direction, but at any rate there is a direction at this time which may and probably will continue. If there is change it seems at the moment likely to be to the left.

Getting the boiling all over with and putting it in sugar form, the whole story is this:

Hitherto money and credit have been lavished on the top of the heap—the big bankers, the promoters, the pilers-up of holding companies, combines and paper structures. Today money and credit are being put into circulation and operation through the masses of the people and very soon, if plans aren't wrecked, a lot of the top will be lopped off entirely and left to roll over and go dead.

In the circles where secrets are kept it is being said that the government program is to oust the exploiter, to get rid of the tribe that lives by taking profits for performing no service.

Undoubtedly the trend is in that direction, and it is mighty good. But of course we must not fool ourselves that this will be done in 1934. If substantial progress is made that will be all it is reasonable to expect.

Well, it's a pleasant road to be traveling. Much pleasanter than the old road, when the takings went so largely to the "big shots" of Wall street and LaSalle street, and the lesser streets of the plutocrats.

Much pleasanter than the days when we were reading of the vast foreign "loans" that were being floated and of the vast plants that were being built abroad with the money that had been gypped out of American wage earners.

True, there are millions for whom there has yet been no change. Millions still have no jobs. But the tide has turned, and they will get their return. The hope is that once it comes to them it will stay with them.

Plenty of flaws in the program, to be sure, but it is a program that looks in the right direction, which is something, at any rate—in reality it is so much that we cannot just now put a proper rating on it.

The average American today takes a look at the wolf of Wall Street and breaks into song—a lilting tune.

"Who's afraid of the Big Bad Wolf" didn't come along just because a chap had a bright idea—or was it a girl who wrote that ditty? And if it came that way, that doesn't account for its sweeping popularity.

Today the nation is laughing at the predatory beast, looking out for chance gashes from desperate fangs, but feeling very confident that there is nice bold handwriting on the wall for him and that the door opens outward.

Not so bad, this 1934 outlook. Anyway, let's go have a look-see.

CUT IN SILK TEXTILE PRODUCTION IS ASKED

Washington.—Proposed modification of the silk textile code to permit 25 per cent curtailment of production for 30 days and to give the code authority the right to require temporary shortening of hours of machine operation within any group was presented to NRA at public hearing before Deputy H. B. Ludlum, Jr.

James A. Goldsmith, general secretary of the code authority, said the amendment was proposed to eliminate unwarranted overproduction in industry. Merchandise is selling at lower prices today than before the code was approved, he claimed.

Frank Schweitzer, of the American Federation of Silk Workers, said his organization would not object to the proposed modification if workers' wages were not reduced. He said that skilled workers were now receiving $13 per week minimum and curtailment might bring wages as low as $9 per week.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

Steel Workers Win Strike for NRA Right To Organize and Bargain Collectively

Dover, Ohio.—Twelve hundred employes of the Greer Steel company and the Reeves Manufacturing company here voted to end the strike against both concerns on the announcement by the officials of the two companies that they would employ all former employes without prejudice or discrimination and bargain collectively with representatives of the workers in accordance with Section 7-A of the national industrial recovery act.

The company officials also agreed to meet with any official of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers who may be chosen by the employes to represent them, and promised to cease interfering with the right of the workers to unionize the plants.

No wage dispute was involved in the controversy. Locals of the Amalgamated association were organized here last summer. Officers of the unions alleged that company officials repeatedly attempted to prevent their employes from organizing and discharged a large number of workmen on account of their union activities. Finally union officers, accompanied by Organizer John McKeown, asked the officials of both companies to reinstate the discharged men. This request was refused. The local unions then declared a strike and picketed both plants, permitting none to enter except foremen and office workers who were given passes to get through the "lines."

City officials requested the intervention of the conciliation bureau of the U. S. department of labor, which sent Fred Keightly and Robert Fox here to effect a settlement. After a number of conferences officials of both companies agreed to re-employ all discharged employes, stop interfering with the workers' right to organize, and to meet with the duly elected representatives of the employes.

The strike was settled in less than a week.

Wagner Upholds Right of Workers to Name Spokesmen

Freedom of Contract Justifies Abolition of Interference by Employers, Chairman National Labor Board Declares.

Washington, Jan. 5.—The doctrine of freedom of contract justifies the idea that American working men and women are entitled to elect their representatives for collective bargaining without employer interference as prescribed by the labor section of the National Recovery Act, Senator Robert F. Wagner, author of the act, and chairman of the National Labor Board, declared in an interview. In accordance with the well defined views of organized labor, he said "freedom of contract exists only when equalization of bargaining power exists," and completed this declaration with the statement that "it is the duty of the government to see that there is freedom of contract."

Senator Wagner pointed out that from its inception the National Labor Board has insisted upon elections, supervised by the board, to determine whether the employes wanted a national trade union or a company union to represent them when that point was raised. Dozens of such elections, he said, were held before the Weirton Steel company, with plants at Weirton and Clarksburg, West Va., and Steubenville, Ohio, and the E. G. Budd company of Philadelphia challenged both the National Recovery Act and the National Labor Board by refusing to permit them to be held by their employes.

Freedom of contract, he declared, has been a factor in many major labor cases carried to the courts in the past. He used as an instance a New York state law forbidding women to work at night in factories, which the courts held unconstitutional because it took away the women's right to contract to work at any time they pleased.

WAREHOUSE WORKERS STRIKE.

Gulfport, Miss.—Demanding a wage scale on a parity with payments under the CWA, warehouse laborers on the Gulfport steamship pier went on strike, following their action by delegating a group from their ranks to convey notice of their demands to J. R. Dent, president of the Dent Stevedoring company, Gulfport. The dock laborers, both white men and negroes, asked 40 cents an hour for their work, declaring that the 40-cent rate had been "established by the government for all common labor."

Barney Finds Moral In Labor World Quip

Editor The Labor World:

You can't kill a fly that is smart enough to sit on your fly-swatter. There must be a moral to this rather important discovery of ours, but we're hanged if we can provide it.

The above paragraph, clipped from a recent issue of The Labor World, is truly a subject for deep thinking. It may be applied to all walks of life. I am going to attempt to draw a moral for union men: You cannot kill a fly that is smart enough to sit on your fly-swatter. You cannot harm a union man that is smart enough to avoid entangling alliances (the fly-swatter). He cannot be hit when he is not there to be hit.

The union man has no real friends outside of union men. Theirs is a common cause. So Mr. Union Man, do not be misled by any alliances that may be "fly-swatters." All men have affiliations of some kind or other. All affiliations have a specific object peculiar to their organization. Union men affiliating with organizations foreign to union principle are getting right under the fly-swatter—and have they not been swatted by the company unions?

Union men should be smart enough to sit on that fly-swatter. If they are not, they should study unionism more and more until they are able to hit that swatter every time.

To union men there can be no question as to which organization they owe the most. Other organizations may promise (bait with honey, etc.) and then the fly-swatter. Mr. Non-Union Man well knows the fly-swatter. Why he does not see the union man sitting on the swatter is for the union man to answer.

Mr. Union Man, what does sitting on the fly-swatter mean to you? Only that you pay your dues promptly and let George do it all? No!

Mr. Union Man, your sworn duty as given in your obligation is all that is asked of you. Study unionism, talk unionism, breathe unionism, personal activity in all meetings you can attend of your organization.

Demonstrate to the public that your unionism has produced the best type of citizen obtainable. By making yourself a real union man you are fitting yourself for future social and civic leadership and then you are always on that fly-swatter, never under it.

WM. R. BARNEY.

No man has so many secrets as the married man who attends a convention and fails to get in on any of the meetings.

Child Labor Causes Adult Unemployment

Harrisburg, Pa.—In signing the bill which made Pennsylvania the twentieth state to ratify the child labor amendment to the federal constitution, Gov. Pinchot characterized the measure as "a part of the forward movement in social legislation that is under way throughout the country."

"This is a great day in a great cause," he continued. "Because of Mrs. Pinchot's interest in eliminating the sweat shop and improving conditions in industry, I take a personal satisfaction in the victory.

"In Pennsylvania alone there are 1,000,000 unemployed and a definite percentage of them are without employment because of the employment of children."

FARM HOMES WORTH LITTLE.

Washington.—Bureau of census figures show that 44 per cent of the homes owned by farmers are worth less than $1,000 and only about 4 per cent are valued at more than $5,000. Sixty-five per cent of tenant farmers' homes are valued at under $1,000 and only 1 per cent over $5,000. Average value for owned farm homes is $1,135 and for tenant farms $500.

Ford Violates Recovery Act, Green Charges

Washington, Jan. 5.—In presenting to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, Recovery Administrator, a detailed statement on the strike of Ford Motor Car company workers at Edgewater, N. J., President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, charged the Ford company with violation of the collective bargaining section of the National Recovery act.

"Neither before the strike, nor September 28, the date on which the strike took place, were the employes of the Ford Motor company permitted to engage in collective bargaining for the settlement of grievances and disputes through representatives of their own choosing as provided for in the Industrial Recovery act," President Green said. "Not only has the management of the Ford Motor company refused to bargain collectively with its employes at Edgewater, as required by law, but in addition it has stated that its employes who stopped work for the purpose of redressing grievous wrongs are no longer considered employes of the company and can only be re-employed through personal application and rehiring individually.

Government Challenged.

"This attitude of the Ford Motor company constitutes a challenge to the government. Either the government is supreme or the Ford Motor company is outside the pale of the law and subject to its own corporate rules and procedure. It is inconceivable that the government would surrender to the Ford Motor company or to any other corporation."

Mr. Green announced he was requesting General Johnson and Senator Wagner, chairman of the National Labor Board, to take such action as may seem necessary to make the Ford Motor company comply with the collective bargaining provisions of the National Recovery Act.

"The government can utilize its legal machinery to require the Ford Motor company to observe the law relating to collective bargaining," he continued. "It can deal with the Ford Motor company just as it deals with any violator of the nation's laws.

A. F. of L. to Act.

"The American Federation of Labor can supplement such action as may be taken by the government, by advising organized labor units of the attitude of the Ford Motor company toward its employes, that working people and their friends throughout the nation may refuse to purchase Ford cars until such time as the Ford Motor company engages in collective bargaining with its employes and deals fairly with them, as is required both by the spirit and the letter of the National Recovery Act."

N. Y. Fire Fighters Win Eight-Hour Day

New York.—The board of estimate branch of the municipal assembly passed the bill, previously adopted by the board of aldermen, providing an eight-hour day for city firemen, beginning on Jan. 1, 1935.

Vincent J. Kane, president of the Uniformed Firemen's association, affiliated with the International Association of Fire Fighters, declared that the change could be accomplished for as little as $100,000 at the beginning. The citizens' budget commission, which opposed the bill, estimated that it would make necessary the addition of 3,000 firemen and computed the increased cost at $7,500,000 for the first year.

Under the law the mayor is required to hold a public hearing before deciding whether to sign the measure. Mayor LaGuardia's signature, however, is regarded as certain. During his campaign for mayor he said he favored an eight-hour day for firemen, which he believed was in accordance with principles of the NRA.

The bill had the firm support of the American Federation of Labor. During the 1933 convention of the federation, the New York Uniformed Firemen's association presented William Green, president of the A. F. of L., with a handsome tie clasp in recognition of his work for the Fire Fighters of New York City in their efforts to secure the shorter work day. The presentation was made by Vincent J. Kane, president of the association.

The man who says "I forgot" to demand union goods or service is a full brother to the one who "rocks the boat."

RAIL OFFICIALS' PAY ROSE AS EMPLOYES' WAGES FELL

New York City, Jan. 5.—"Higher ups" of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad are receiving larger salaries than in 1925, when the railroad increased fares 40 per cent, but the wages of the rank and file of employes has fallen, it was revealed in testimony before Public Service Commissioner George R. Lunn. The facts were brought out in hearings on application of Westchester county communities for a 19 per cent reduction in commutation rates.

Information on wages and salaries was given by Patrick J. Rooney, corporation counsel of New Rochelle, reading from reports filed with the public service commission for the seven-year period, 1925-1932. George T. Carmichael, general auditor of the road, said the reports were correct.

The pay of officials increased 11.95 per cent, the reports showed, while the pay of employes and laborers dropped 6.8 per cent. The daily wage reduction of the laborers was from an average of $8.05 a day to $7.52 a day.

At Rooney's request Carmichael gave the salaries of the higher officials. John J. Pelley, the president of the road, receives $37,000; Edward G. Buckland, chairman of the board, receives $13,469. The other salaries, according to Carmichael, are: Vice-president in charge of purchases, $10,411; executive vice-president, $12,292; vice-president in charge of finance, $10,886; vice-president in charge of traffic, $10,154; vice-president and general manager, $10,360; general counsel, $7,685; secretary, $6,031; treasurer, $6,830.

Carmichael explained that these salaries are received from the New Haven road itself, and not from the various subsidiaries. It was shown that the New York, Westchester & Boston railroad, a subsidiary, has not for two years paid its rental of $291,373 a year for tracks to the parent corporation.

"The New Haven officers got their salaries from the New York, Westchester & Boston road those years, though, didn't they?" Rooney asked.

"Oh, yes," said Carmichael.

ABOLISHING THE NRA WILL 'SCRAP' OUR CIVILIZATION, RICHBERG SAYS

Boston, Jan. 5.—In a speech blistering with frankness, Donald R. Richberg, general counsel for the national recovery administration, told a meeting sponsored by the Massachusetts state recovery board that to reject the plan for administering industry according to the principles underlying the NRA codes of fair competition means "scrapping" both civilization and the present federal constitution.

Charging those who urge the people to "scrap the N. R. A." with failure to state their alternative, Mr. Richberg said there are obviously only two alternatives, adding:

"The first alternative is to scrap all effort at a planned economic recovery, to scrap all effort to bring order and justice into our industrial civilization, to relapse into anarchy or unrestrained self-seeking, to return to the law of the jungle and to let the most ruthless and selfish of our breed survive—in a word, to 'scrap civilization.'

"The second alternative is to establish a new government endowed with power to own and operate essential industries, free from the obligation to preserve individual liberty of action or individual rights of property—in a word, to 'scrap the constitution.'"

Helped By Cardui

"I was sick and rather discouraged. I was so weak and thin, I was not able to do my work as it should be done. This made me fret a good deal, and did not help my condition.

"I had pains across my back and lower part of my body. My nights were spent in rolling from one side of the bed to the other, hoping I would soon go to sleep. Then when morning would come, I would be just as tired as when I went to bed. A neighbor, seeing how badly I felt, told me to try Cardui. After I had taken one bottle, I was much better. I kept on taking Cardui, and I was stronger and slept much better at night."

ELECTRICIANS SIGN NEW PACT WITH BOSSES

All Large Contractors in Agreement.

NEGOTIATIONS END IN FINE SPIRIT

McDaniels Declares Outlook for Trade Best in Years.

E. E. McDaniels, business manager of Local 175, Electrical Workers, announced Friday morning the completion of negotiations with Chattanooga electrical contractors, which had extended over a period of several months. All the downtown contractors are signatories to the new agreement, which has only to receive formal approval of the international union, Mr. McDaniels said, to be complete.

Membership in Local 175, Mr. McDaniels said, has increased practically 100 per cent. during the past ninety days, and employment conditions are steadily improving.

"Prospects for employment," he declared, "we believe are brighter now than they have been for several years, and our members are enthusiastic in their optimism.

"Negotiations with our contractors, while marked by considerable delay caused by the economic conditions, have been most pleasant at all times, and the spirit of the sub-title preceding our agreement, 'Basic Principles,' we think was and is concurred in by our employers as well as ourselves. This paragraph reads as follows:

"The employer and the union have a common and sympathetic interest in the electrical industry; therefore, a working system and harmonious relations are necessary to improve the relationship between the employer, the union and the public. Progress in the industry demands the mutuality of confidence between the employer and the union. All will benefit by continuous peace, and by adjusting any differences by rational, commonsense methods. To these ends this agreement is made."

Firms signing the agreement, which includes all the downtown contractors, are: Chattanooga Electric company, by W. A. Jewell; Curtis Electric company, by Paul W. Curtis; Terrell Electric company, by C. E. Terrell; F. P. Sweet company, by Philip Sweet; Central Electric company, by W. H. Ashmore; W. C. Teas company, by Herbert Haile; Hall Electric company, by L. A. Hall; Cofer Electric company, by C. E. Cofer.

Mr. McDaniels said that while the above list contains the names of all downtown contractors, there remain a few smaller concerns in the outlying sections which have not yet signed. If and when these agree to the contract notification will be given through The Labor World, he said.

LONG HOURS, LOW WAGES, CAUSE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

"Unemployment is the result of business and commercial stagnation, due to the lack of purchasing power on the part of the masses of the people, resulting from over work and under pay," declared the 1933 convention of the American Federation of Labor. "Shorter hours and higher wages as a means of spreading employment and increasing purchasing power are economic essentials, as necessary to trade and commerce as they are to the workers themselves."

Pay Cut Asked as Price Of Resuming Mine Work

Halifax.—A coal company in Pictou county, going into receivership, demands a 20 per cent wage cut as the price of resuming operations. The Halifax Daily Herald charges that this is part of a plot to bring about a general cut in miners' wages. Under this threat, the men who formed a dual union sometime ago, have mostly flocked back to the United Mine Workers of America.

Heads of Great Railroads Seek Conference on Legislation With Brotherhood Officials

New York, Jan. 11.—Alarmed by the militant determination of the executives of the railway labor unions to secure the 30-hour week for railroad employes as a remedy for the wholesale unemployment which afflicts the rail transportation workers, L. F. Loree, president of the Delaware & Hudson company and president of the Eastern Railroad Presidents' conference, appointed a group of eastern railroad executives to represent the managements in this region at a joint conference with railway labor officials on a legislative program.

It was reported that the following presidents had been appointed for the parley: W. W. Atterbury, Pennsylvania; F. E. Williamson, New York Central; J. J. Pelley, New York, New Haven & Hartford; Daniel Willard, Baltimore & Ohio; J. J. Bernet, Chesapeake & Ohio.

The gesture was approved by the railroad presidents of this region at the suggestion of President Atterbury, of the Pennsylvania railroad. He expressed the idea that the purpose of the railroad brotherhoods in agitation for the six-hour day, which is to provide jobs for hundreds of thousands of idle railway workers, might be met by legislation that would equalize the conditions under which the railroads and competing forms of transportation—automobiles and waterways—operate. Legislation for railroad pensions was also listed as a proper subject for discussion.

Completion of the railroad presidents' committee awaits action by railway managements in the west and southeast. The appointees will not discuss wages, the labor officials having stated that they have no authority to consider pay of the workers at the proposed meeting.

CHURCHMEN RAP PRIVATE PROFIT AS BASIS OF ECONOMIC ORDER

Welfare of People Must Be Paramount in Recovery Program, Says Federal Council of Churches, Calling for Nation-Wide Moral and Spiritual Advance.

New York, Jan. 11.—The nation is called upon to face courageously 'the cause and cure of our present situation in terms of the Christian principle that the aim of any economic system should be the welfare of the people" in a statement issued by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

"Private profit as the cornerstone of the economic order appeals to men to be selfish when the Christian Gospel bids them to be unselfish and seek the common good," the statement added.

The present break-down, says the statement, is spiritual as well as economic, and "our new powers of machine industry and our unrivaled technical skill have failed because they have been controlled by the motive of private acquisitiveness instead of public service."

The statement was signed by the heads of thirty Protestant denominations, with an aggregate membership of more than 27,000,000. It was signed also by the Rev. Drs. Albert W. Beaven and Lewis S. Mudge, president and vice-president, respectively, of the council.

The statement resulted from an informal conference convened by Drs. Beaven and Mudge in Washington, Dec. 6, the day President Roosevelt addressed the council there.

"As representatives of the many millions of devoted God-fearing citizens of this nation," said the statement, "we unite in assuring the leaders of government that we rejoice in every evidence that great social ideals of Christianity are being woven into the fabric of our national life. We have read with deep interest the declaration of President Roosevelt in his address to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America that 'the churches are the greatest influence in this world of ours to overcome the present tendency toward greed.'

"We have welcomed his statement that 'while the churches remain wholly free from even the suggestion of interference in government they can at the same time teach their millions of followers that they have the right to demand of the government of their own choosing the maintenance and furtherance of a more abundant life.' In the light of this challenge we unitedly voice our conviction that alongside all plans for recovery that are made in our economic and industrial life there should be a nation-wide effort for moral and spiritual recovery and advance.

"To this end we commit ourselves and for that same program of moral and spiritual strengthening we ask the interest of all who are in places of leadership."

Whitney Favors United States' Ownership of Rails

Head of Railroad Trainmen Says Such Step Must Be Taken Unless 6-Hour Day Is Enacted.

New York, Jan. 11.—A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and chairman of the Railroad Labor Executive association, said in a statement here that he would favor government ownership of the railroads if existing conditions continue, which in the past four years have resulted in railroad officials throwing 1,000,000 railroad workers into the unemployed army.

He stated that an immediate effort to provide work for the jobless would be made through federal legislation providing for the six-hour day under the basic wage rates of 1929, with government ownership as a final solution if the unemployment situation is not otherwise remedied.

Whitney voiced definite opposition to consolidating the railroads because of the injuries it would impose on the workers and said he felt keenly "the exclusion of the railroad industry from the national recovery act."

CHICAGO BANK OPPOSES INSURANCE OF DEPOSITS

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 11.—Officials of the Harris Trust and Savings bank hinted in a letter to the stockholders that it might withdraw from the federal reserve system rather than submit to the deposit insurance plan to which 13,423 banks out of 13,564 have agreed. The plan, backed by the federal government, compels banks to contribute to a fund partially financed by the government to guarantee the safety of deposits up to $2,500.

Officials of the Harris concern declare that this insurance "throws an unlimited liability upon the banks." They should have added that the sole liability imposed on the banks is the guarantee that when they borrow money from depositors that money shall be returned to the depositors in full regardless of either the inefficiency or dishonesty of bank officials.

3 PER CENT. IS LIMIT FOR BANK INTEREST

Washington, Jan. 11.—The federal Deposit Insurance corporation announced a rule prohibiting member banks in the corporation from paying more than semi-annual compounded interest on deposits. The order applies to all deposits whether they are insured or not on which interest accrues after Jan. 2, the effective date for the new insurance system, with the exception made for deposits contracted for prior to that date. For each violation of the order the corporation may impose $100 penalty, the penalty applying to each individual deposit.

Notice, Bakers!

Local 25, Bakers and Confectionery Workers, will meet Saturday afternoon, Jan. 13, at 2 o'clock, at Roosevelt hall. All members are urged to be present, as business of importance will be transacted.

Despite reports to the contrary, it was announced Friday morning by representatives of Local 18766, Oil Refiners, that the controversy at the local plant of the Wilson Refining company, which has threatened to develop serious proportions through discharge of union members and other alleged code violations, has not been adjusted.

Following the "firing" of several members of the union recently, intervention of governmental agencies was sought, and the controversy has since been in the hands of these authorities.

It was said that, although a number have been "laid off" for alleged "slack business," the remaining forces are working overtime on production.

Local labor officials expressed the hope Friday morning that telegraphic and telephone communications then being held with Washington government and labor officials might bring an early adjustment of the difficulty.

NATIONAL BODY HEARS STORY OF MILL STRIKE

Employers Maintain Arrogant Attitude.

ORDERED BY BOARD TO END WALKOUT

John L. Lewis Expresses Disgust With Attorney's Attitude.

Harriman, Tenn., Jan. 10.—The strike situation at the Harriman Hosiery mills was given a hearing before the National Labor board Jan. 4. The mill management was represented by Mr. T. A. Wright, attorney and vice-president; Polk Wright, attorney and director, and James Tarwater, son of the president of Harriman mill. The strikers were represented by Mr. W. M. Hannah, attorney, of Harriman, Fred G. Held, vice-president American Federation of Hosiery Workers, and a committee of strikers. This case had been transferred from the regional labor board of Atlanta, Ga., to the National Labor Board, after the regional labor board found that the mill management would not agree to collective bargaining or to any kind of procedure of arbitration. The members serving on the National Labor Board at this hearing were: Pres. Wm. Green, of A. F. of L., chairman; Dr. Wolman, Mr. DuPont, industrialist, Maj. Geo. eBrry, president Printing Pressmen's union, Father Haas, and John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America.

The case of the strikers was presented by W. M. Hannah giving a picture of the entire situation from its inception, showing how the mill management had refused repeatedly to come to some kind of an agreement with the strikers in reinstating workers who had been discharged presumably for joining a labor union. After hearing the strikers' side of the situation, T. A. Wright commenced to read from a brief he had prepared giving their side of the situation. Before getting very far with this reading several members of the board asked Mr. Wright the question of how the mill management stood in reference to arbitration and were answered to the effect that the management refused most unequivocally to consider arbitration. When confronted with the question as to whether the management understood that it was the purpose and spirit of the NRA and the president's wishes that all industrial disputes must be arbitrated by the National Labor Board or some other machinery set up for that purpose, Mr. Wright questioned the authority of the National Labor Board and the president to force them to arbitrate or make any kind of concession to their workers. In fact, they defied the board in every way to interfere with the mill's problem, claiming that the whole program was unconstitutional. The defiant attitude assumed by the representatives was so clear that President John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, wanted the board to call a halt to the entire proceedings and did finally walk out, as he was disgusted by this attitude of the firm. It was significant that the board did not allow Mr. Wright to finish reading his brief that he had prepared, but finally persuaded him to meet with the representatives of the strikers in another room to try to arrive at some kind of an agreement and report back to the board later in the day.

This was done, with the committee of strikers drawing up a modified agreement embodying an arbitration clause, which was flatly turned down by Mr. Wright.

The matter was then turned over to the National Labor Board, which handed down a decision Wednesday providing for an ending of the strike and re-employment of all strikers with seniority rights.

The Richmond Hosiery Mill, of Rossville, Ga., was called before the hosiery code authority on Tuesday, Jan. 2, in New York to explain several violations of the hosiery code. This firm is said to have been violating the code ever since its inception and it finally became so flagrant that even the manufacturers became so disgusted with their actions that they had to do something about it.

It was regarded as very sifinificant that the Richmond mill was represented by John Chambliss, of Chattanooga, at this hearing in place of J. Harvey Wilson, who has been so vociferous in his denunciation of the whole NRA program and the hosiery code. Is it possible that Mr. Wilson is losing his prestige in his fight against this progressive movement? labor men here are asking. Firms of the type of the Richmond mills and men of the type of J. Harvey Wilson have no place in the new where they truly belong, is the way local workers view this situation.

Labor Exploitation and Child Labor Have No Place in New Deal, Roosevelt Says; Useful Social Values Are Saved

Washington, Jan. 11.—President Roosevelt in his message to congress expressed a militant and profound faith in the effectiveness of his industrial agricultural and monetary program to bring about the readjustment of our national life so as to save everything that, socially considered, is worth saving and discard every form of waste. He stressed "ruthless exploitation of labor," child labor, and "speculation with other people's money" as practices whose complete abolition was sought. He said:

"It is an integrated program, national in scope. Viewed in the large, it is designed to save from destruction and to keep for the future the genuinely important values created by modern society. The vicious and wasteful parts of that society we could not save if we wished; they have chosen the way of self-destruction.

"We would save useful mechanical invention, machine production, industrial efficiency, modern means of communication, broad education. We would save and encourage the slowly growing impulse among consumers to enter the industrial market place equipped with sufficient organization to insist upon fair prices and honest sales.

"But the unnecessary expansion of industrial plants, the waste of natural resources, the exploitation of the consumers of natural monopolies, the accumulation of stagnant surpluses, child labor and the ruthless exploitation of all labor, the encouragement of speculation with other people's money, these were consumed in the fires that they themselves kindled. We must make sure that as we reconstruct our life there be no soil in which such weeds can grow again.

"We have ploughed the furrow and planted the good seed; the hard beginning is over. If we would reap the full harvest we must cultivate the soil where this good seed is sprouting and the plant is reaching up to mature growth."

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP SUGGESTED BY LEHMAN

Governor of New York Asks Legislation Permitting Municipalities to Own and Operate Public Utilities.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 11.—Municipal ownership of public utilities was approved by Gov. Lehman in his message to the legislature as a means of protecting the public against the extortionate rates and allied excess charges which those who own and control these essential services impose on consumers. In a nine-point program of suggested laws covering public utilities, which he said he hoped and expected the legislature would enact, he gave the following first importance:

"Legislation permitting any municipality to construct or acquire a public utility plant and sell its service to its inhabitants and any surplus to residents outside of its territorial limits. This bill should also provide that one or more municipalities may combine in the formation of a public utility district.

"It should not be mandatory but purely permissive legislation, to become operative only after the whole project, including all the details of the financing, construction and operation, shall have been submitted to the residents of the municipality for their approval."

Court Enjoins Fake Union in NRA State Test

Judge Restrains Theater Owners and Employers From Violating Motion Picture Code.

New York, Jan. 11.—The Independent Theater Owners' association and the Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union, Inc., a "company union," set up and fostered by the employers, were enjoined temporarily from violating the motion picture code, in a decision by Supreme Court Justice William T. Collins upholding the legality of the Schackno act, New York state law similar to the national recovery act.

The injunction was granted at the request of Harry A. Sherman, president of Local 306, International Alliance of Motion Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Machine Operators, who charged that employers discharged members of his union and created the "company union" in an endeavor to evade the motion picture code. A hearing was set for Jan. 29, when the complainant will ask for a permanent injunction and for $1,000,000 damages.

Sherman declared that the Independent Owners' association entered into a ten-year contract with the "company union" and that the association then began discharging members of the plaintiff union. Hours of work were increased beyond the 40 hours a week set by the code and wages were cut below the code minimum, it is charged.

Justice Collins said that he would bring the case to trial within the month "because of the importance of the issues, to speed up their final determination, and to minimize any harm which the preliminary injunction may occasion."

"If the president's program is to be vitalized and efficacious, if it is to be more than a rostrum entreaty, then all who come within its purview must adhere to its mandates," Justice Collins said. "The code seeks to invest the recovery program not only with lips but with a heart and a conscience, and a strong arm to bludgeon —with legal process if need be—the timid, the recalcitrant, the shirker and the dodger.

"The president defined his re-employment agreement as 'part of a nation-wide plan to raise wages, create employment and thus increase purchasing power and restore business.' Paragraph 8 of the P. R. A. contained the pledge that the subscribers thereto (including associations) were 'not to use any subterfuge to frustrate the spirit and intent of this agreement, which is, among other things, to increase employment by a universal covenant, to remove obstructions to commerce and to shorten hours and to raise wages for the shorter week to a living basis."

"This laudable and expedient agenda cannot be accelerated or achieved by the simple process of subscribing to codes. Unless the program is made to work, it will remain a program—impotent and dispirited and unavailing. The word must become the deed. And the deed—if need be—must be compelled."

Sale of Lion Pilsener Declared Light.

PROBABLE INCREASE IN ICE PRICE SEEN

Attitude of Non-Union, Cheap-Wage Corporation Condemned.

Situation respecting the position of the Atlantic Ice and Coal company continues one of the livest topics at meetings of Central Body and of the various local unions—in fact, wherever organized workers congregate the attitude of the huge chain corporation toward labor is a matter for discussion.

Although the Chattanooga public in general has joined heartily into the protest initiated by the workers against the policy of the concern, officials apparently are maintaining the purpose which a representative of the corporation is said to have announced, to "make the people of Chattanooga like it."

It is said that sale of the Lion Pilsener Beer, which is handled by the ice, coal and fish company under the trade name of Southeastern Brewing company, has practically stopped locally, and reports from various cities in the southeast where the chain corporation operates indicate that working people in this territory are preparing to add their protest to the non-union, cheap-labor policy of the wealthy chain.

The company is said to handle in all cities where it operates the same commodities which are marketed in Chattanooga—ice, coal, beer and fish, besides doing a general storage business. It has not been reported whether "ice wars" similar to that started locally have been initiated in other cities where the chain operates. It will be recalled that the retail price of ice in Chattanooga was slashed in half recently, and local citizens are expecting to be "shook down" for vastly increased prices for this commodity during the coming summer. It is held that from 75 cents to $1 per hundred may be expected as the rate to householders when hot weather returns.

The President's Birthday Ball

What an idea! The President's Birthday ball. Not one, but hundreds of them, all over the country. And all linked by the magic of radio.

Labor, to its everlasting credit, is sharing in this tremendous and unique celebration. Perhaps in as many as 500 cities there will be celebrations by labor. Certainly there will be if labor is alert and awake to its opportunity.

Never was there a finer chance to promote good will toward labor, while doing a fine and decent thing. Of course some don't think so, which is to be expected. Most do.

President Green is chairman of the labor division of the nattional committee, which is fitting. Labor shares generously in the membership of the national committee, of which Henry L. Doherty is chairman. That is fitting, too; and it is an indication of labor's status and the recognition it has won.

Labor cannot afford to fail in making its share a great success. Labor cannot afford to have to say it couldn't. And there is more to this plan than honoring the man, fine as that is.

There's the benefit to Warm Springs Foundation, the only thing outside the presidency in which the president retains an interest. It is hoped that Warm Springs, which is to be a great clearing house and coordinator in the fight against infantile paralysis, will be forever removed from need.

There is no way of knowing how many little tots from the families of workers will be saved by this great institution. No sufferer will be turned away. Altogether there is something big and magnificent about this whole thing. First of all, honor will be done a man for his own sake and the sake of his good works, without politics. Men of all beliefs are joining in the planning of this great tribute. The president of the United States is to be honored by his countrymen on his birthday.

In a way, he will be honored by his neighbors, because every American who has heard his voice over the air feels himself his neighbor.

What Next!

The American Locomotive company is prepared to build stream-lined locomotives for railroad service capable of making a top speed of 120 miles an hour. These new locomotives are offered in two types—those fully streamlined and those so built only in part. In the complete model, sand box, steam dome, bell, whistle and safety valve are sunk into the jacket of the boiler; the headlight is stream-lined, but the driving wheels and running gear remain exposed.

Come Forth, You Leaders, and Lead America On!

There can be a whole New Day if the wage earners of America get together and plan it. The Old Gang that brought us to the big smash will never engineer us into a new day. That's Labor's job.

Right now the old gang is divided. Some are humble, knowing they failed, ready to "go along" and rebuild a decent social order. Some are fighting like tigers to get back to the big feed trough.

Labor has only ONE proper goal. Labor must go forward.

Millions more Americans ought to be in unions. The man who walks around by himself is no good in this great struggle to rebuild an empire. He is actually in the way of progress. The man foolish enough to get into a company union helps to build a log jam against going ahead. Today there is a great and crying need for men who will stand forth and say to the multitudes, "This way lies deliverance."

There is a crying need for the kind of leaders who can make the multitudes see a great vision. What a day lies just ahead, if only we can see it and make up our minds to go there!

There are some who see vision and then clutter up the road with details. There is a sweep to this vision — a magnificent sweep that reveals power and glory, which, translated into the plain and necessary things of life means food for all, homes for all, clothese for all, schools for all and a great more of joy for all than humanity ever knew before.

The program now under way looks forward. At last common sense is getting to work. At last there is a deliberate planning to get goods into the hands of people. Mistakes are being made by the dozens. Gen. Johnson does some of the craziest things a man ever did. But the main drift is right, the main direction is the right way. We are going down the right road.

But we falter and hesitate because the masses are not organized. Ten millions ought to be in unions today, twenty millions tomorrow. If men would spring to arms in millions, why not spring to the war for prosperity in the same millions. Here is a great crusade, not for death, but for life.

Think not too much on the old ways, dwell not too lovingly on the old routine. There is need for audacity in a day that has given us more audacious action than any other age ever knew.

Count this as true: Once let the captains of the old order once more entrench themselves in one-half of their old power and we shall lose all that we have gained. Then we shall go into a smash that will smash all things.

Today all advantage lies with those who want a human race that is the master of its machines, that thinks in terms of democratic freedom.

All over the nation are men and women capable of action to cement and weld the masses in great and powerful unions, with an ideal and a goal. Stand forth, you who can lead. Lead into unions and then lead on through this reconstruction of America!

America is leading the world, as it is. What has been done is but the beginning. Lead on! Let the fire and the ardor of a great ideal possess the masses of our people. We go forward in a great crusade.

Come forth, you fighters, and fight! Come forth, you leaders, and lead! Follow your captains and your general into a great tomorrow!

Long Fight in Prospect

Malcolm Muir, division administration of the National Recovery Act, expressed the opinion that two large classes of persons will be disappointed in 1934. The first of these is composed of those who expect a miraculous return to prosperity, the second, of those who prophesy disaster to the recovery program.

Common sense says that Mr. Muir is right. A depression which has lasted as long as the one which began in 1929 cannot be overcome in a few months. It will be a long, hard fight, but the upward march has begun and with the help of every American, recovery will be achieved and further disaster avoided.

Hours Must Be Further Cut

Labor legislation of great importance to every wage earner will be discussed at a conference of trade union representatives in Washington on Jan. 24. One of the most important proposals to be taken up will be the question of the shorter workday and week. Shorter hours under the NRA have helped re-employment but have fallen far short of giving jobs to all the unemployed.

What has happened has overwhelmingly vindicated organized labor's stand for the 30-hour week and points strongly to the necessity of further drastic cuts of working hours. Labor can be depended upon to take the lead in this and insist that Congress take cognizance of the situation and act to bring relief.

Will North Force Change?

Northern employers are showing increasing signs of dissatisfaction with the differential wage rates given southern industry by NRA codes. At first there was no strong opposition by northern employing interests to the differentials. Apparently they were not wise enough to realize that the lower southern wage rates provided by the codes would handicap northern industry.

Now northern employers are beginning to wake up and there are indications that dissatisfaction will grow fast as time proves the differentials are giving the south a decided advantage in production costs.

Will the dissatisfaction grow until northern employers go on the warpath and attempt to force equalization of code wages between the north and south, as advocated by organized labor? Stranger things have happened.

Buying Legislation by Contributions

The practice of corporation officials of resorting to indefensible methods to secure the election of state officers who in turn will favor legislation for the financial benefit of the corporations, is revealed in the senate investigation of alleged violation of federal laws in the election of United States Senator John H. Overton, of Louisiana.

According to press reports of the inquiry, S. D. Hunter, of Shreveport, a gas and oil well capitalist, opposed to the election of Overton, admitted on the witness stand that he contributed $75,000 to the campaign fund of Dudley Le Blanc, one of the candidates for governor, because Le Blanc had agreed, if elected, to amend the "severance tax" which was a financial burden to Hunter's oil and gas interests.

Hunter also admitted that the International Gas Products company, of which he was a large stockholder, had been fined $6,000 for "stealing gas" by a process known as "meter-jumping."

Hunter claimed he knew nothing about the gas stealing and experienced a "shock" when he heard of it. He also said the company demanded that the executive employe who worked the meter trick plead guilty personally and pay a fine. Of course the layman is inclined to draw the conclusion that no junior executive would resort to "meter-jumping" for the benefit of the corporation which employs him without a suggestion along that line from higher officials.

Evidently Louisiana needs more stringent election codes against corrupt political practices as well as higher standards of business practices by corporation officials.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Controversies about the NRA and its effect are like the waves on a rockbound coast. There is an inward and outward surge, and nuiances run the gamut from the deep diapason of dissent to the loud peals of praise. A crescendo of commendation has recently drowned out the sour notes of criticism and the hisses of critics.

No industry was more difficult to bring under a code than bituminous coal. Administrator Johnson and his aides struggled with it for months. Today the National Coal association, composed of bituminous operators, is on record as believing its code will be very helpful to the industry. The association has discovered that established wage scales have introduced a much needed element of stability in the industry.

A few weeks ago the Iron and Steel institute publicly acknowledged benefits it has received under a code. Now the steel casting industry follows with a statement that its code has proved of "pronounced value" in speeding the industry's return to "normal, satisfactory and profitable operation." The shoe industry reports stabilization for the first time in history.

Louis Kirstein, retiring chairman of the NRA industrial recovery board, reports that "in practically all cases coming to the attention of the board the early experiences (of industry codes) have been beneficial."

These words of praise do not come from theorists or radicals, but from practical, profit-seeking men. They are therefore all the more impressive.

There is, incidentally, food for thought for other business men in the coal association's indorsement of established wage scales. The bituminous code does not stop with fixing a minimum wage. Instead, operators bargained with the United Mine Workers and a uniform scale for all kinds of work was agreed upon. Employers who are afraid to bargain with their workers similarly should be encouraged by the satisfaction of a group that was once frankly skeptical of such an orderly course.

In a Georgia textile mill, a large proportion of the workers are using increased leisure under the cotton textile code to attend a school opened in the mill. The teacher is supplied under the federal plan of providing employment for jobless teachers and giving opportunity to adults for further education.

This use of increased leisure ought to satisfy the folks who have been worrying how the workers would use increased leisure time given them by NRA hours. The Georgia mill workers are showing they are fully capable of using increased leisure with benefit to themselves and society. As a matter of fact, the workers of America don't need any "uplifters" to tell them how to spend leisure time. They are no more apt to spend the time in evil pursuits than any other class of the population, which is something some folks apparently don't realize.

Interstate Trade in Convict Labor Goods Prohibited by Law in Seventeen States

Washington.—The unremitting efforts of the American Federation of Labor through its state branches in favor of state-use of convict labor goods and forbidding interstate commerce in them have resulted in the enactment of the A. F. of L. convict labor bill in seventeen states, according to information made public at the federation's headquarters here.

Twelve of the seventeen states enacted the law in 1933, and it is confidently expected that the Hawes-Cooper act, which becomes effective on Jan. 19, 1934, will persuade many more states to join the honor list. The act enables each state to forbid the sale, within its own borders, of convict-made goods from other states.

The states now having laws in conformity with the Hawes-Cooper act are: Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Massachusetts, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Utah, Washington and Wyoming.

After Jan. 19, when the federal act becomes effective, no convict-made goods can be shipped into these seventeen states for sale on the open market. Creditable as this achievement is, labor officials point out that unless the laws of the state provide that none of their own convict-made products shall be sold in the open market, they cannot forbid the sale of convict-made goods from other states. State federations of labor in the thirty-one states which have not enacted legislation providing for the state-use system are therefore urged to put forward special efforts during the coming sessions of the legislatures to have this important measure written into the statutes.

It is expected that the restricted market for convict goods caused by the seventeen states which have already barred such products will speed up the adoption of the state-use system in the backward states.

The only real attack on the Hawes-Cooper act was recently made by the attorney-general of Alabama, who asked the supreme court of the United States for an injunction restraining the seventeen states from enforcing their convict labor laws, alleging the unconstitutionality of the act. The case will be argued before the supreme court on Jan. 9. Officials of the American Federation of Labor look for a strong decision from the court denying the validity of Alabama's attempt to uphold convict labor competition with free labor.

During the past year contracts for shirts in Kentucky and Wyoming prisons were canceled because the Hawes-Cooper act would become effective during the life of the contracts.

1,000 Men to Be Given Work Under CWA Planting Oysters

New Orleans.—Employment is to be given to 1,000 men planting oysters on the Mississippi coast, Senator Pat Harrison stated after a conference with officials at the civil works administration. This is made possible by a correction of the quota to which Mississippi is entitled under the regulations of the CWA. Senator Harrison took to the administration proof that Mississippi had not been allowed its proper quota of civil works funds. The work of extending the oyster beds along the Mississippi coast will be conducted as a state project. It was pointed out at the civil works administration that no additional allotments are being made for the improvement of oyster beds, but that this is a permissible activity if the states wish to employ the funds allotted to them for that purpose.

Cigar Makers Show the Way

The Cigar Makers' International union, which has been at the forefront of every labor advance since the days of its organization, is again taking the lead in labor progress.

The Cigar Makers are proposing that when the machine displaces workers in the cigar industry, it must bear a share of the burden of that displacement, by a contribution of cash per machine to help tide the displaced workers over until they can be placed in other occupations.

"We contend," said President Ornburn of the union, "that the time has passed when a machine can come along and throw workers into the discard without compunction and without relief."

The proposal is well described by President Ornburn as the first constructive plan for meeting the issue of unemployment caused by the introduction of machines. It shows the way for all industry and it merits the most serious consideration by those administering the national recovery plan.

Lynchings vs. Strikes

Comment of a student of world revolutions and of the industrial situation in the United States: "These lynchings are like volcanoes, in that they reflect internal turbulence that must have some outbreak. Fundamentally the cause of the turbulence is industrial, a seething resentment against wage reductions.

"Strikes are forbidden by government officials fearful of developments. Lynchings are a substitute emotional outlet, especially in sections where labor has not been permitted to organize freely as an outlet for self-expression. Governors and clergy who approved the California lynching can generally be counted upon to use all their power to attack a group of employes that dares to declare a strike.

"It's reminiscent of the waning days of the Old Roman Empire; they threw Christians to the lions to divert the attention of the seething multitudes from economic and political conditions that were steadily getting worse. Personally I would rather have a few more strikes than a few more lynchings."

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

LABOR CHARGES AGAINST FORD SENT TO COMPLIANCE BOARD

Washington, Jan. 4.—Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, recovery administrator, has turned over to the NRA compliance board for investigation the charges by President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, that the Ford Motor company had specifically violated the collective bargaining provisions of the recovery act at its Edgewater, N. Y., plant. A strike of 1,600 employes of the Edgewater plant has been in progress since Sept. 28.

If the compliance board finds there is ground for action against Ford, Johnson said, he will have conferences with the federal trade commission and justice department before proceeding.

Public Printer Asks 5-Day Week For Government Printing Office

Washington, Jan. 11.—Public Printer George Carter renewed his recommendation for a five-day week at the government printing office in his annual report to congress.

Mr. Carter explained that under the first economy act he was able to effect a five-day week at the G. P. O. from July 1, 1932, to last Sept. 9. After that date, the second economy act with its 15 per cent pay cut reestablished the Saturday half-holiday.

"The Saturday half-holiday," Carter said, "is difficult of administration and disturbing to the work routine by requiring compensatory time off on another day if employes work more than four hours on Saturday.

"Therefore the public printer's recommendation of a five-day work week is renewed in the interest of more efficient operation of the G. P. O. and in justice to its employes, who are entitled to a shorter work week in accord with the NRA."

AFL Council Is Sustained In Salesmen Charter Case

The 1933 convention of the American Federation of Labor sustained a decision of the Executive Council refusing to grant a charter to a group of outside salesmen and collectors in Alleghany county, Maryland. The matter came before the convention on an appeal of the Allegany Trades council from the decision of the Executive Council.

"No action heretofore taken either by the Executive Council or the convention in any way precludes the organization of this group of workers by the affiliated organizations having jurisdiction over them," the convention said.

All Business Suffers From Low Wage Policy, Richberg Asserts

Washington, Jan. 5.—A conference between the National Federation of Post Office Clerks and the United National Association of Post Office Clerks broke up in Washington through the abrupt withdrawal of the U. N. A. P. O. C. delegates because of their hostility to affiliations with the American Federation of Labor.

The "company union" president, John J. Barrett, declared that the persistence of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks in insisting upon affiliation with the organized labor movement was an insult to himself and to his membership. He refused to send the proposition of amalgamation for affiliation with the A. F. of L. to a referendum vote of the postoffice clerks. Upon a refusal of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks to surrender their charter with the A. F. of L. as the price of amalgamation with this minority outlaw organization, Barrett abruptly withdrew his conferees from the negotiations.

The National Federation of Post Office Clerks has a membership of upwards of 45,000. The United National Association of Post Office Clerks has a paper membership of some 13,000, of whom at least fifty per cent are bosses. Supervisors are not eligible to participate in the national activities of the union organization. The Railway Mail Association and the National Association of Letter Carriers are both affiliated with organized labor and are not afflicted as are the post office clerks with a recalcitrant anti-A. F. of L. minority.

JACKSON LABOR BODY SERVES 500,000 FREE MEALS TO IDLE

Jackson, Mich.—The relief kitchen operated by the Jackson Federation of Labor has served over 500,000 free meals to the destitute unemployed of Jackson and their families, officials of the federation declared.

Hitherto most of the food supplies for the kitchen have been donated by sympathetic business concerns, organizations and individuals, while the committee in charge of the federation managed the kitchen. Hereafter the necessary food will be supplied by the Jackson county emergency welfare relief in order that this type of welfare work may come under county supervision. The officials of the federation of labor will remain in charge of the operation of the kitchen under the direction of Allan Leamy, county relief administrator.

GOTHAM PRINTERS ASK STRIKE VOTE SANCTION

New York City.—Typographical Union No. 6, biggest local of the International Typographical union, has petitioned international headquarters at Indianapolis to sanction a referendum strike vote.

Leon H. Rouse, president of No. 6, said the printers requested a 6½-hour working day or a 39-hour week and restoration of 1929 wage scales.

Rouse said he did not know when the International Executive council would take action on the petition.

Standard Oil, With U. S. Aid, Sings Company Union Praises

Walter C. Teagle, Oil Chief and Member of NRA Boards, Expounds Alleged Merits of "Employe Representation" Schemes in Propaganda Outburst Issued by Department of Commerce in Guise of Report.

By CHESTER M. WRIGHT

Washington, Jan. 11.—Standard Oil has gone to bat, with the aid of the United States department of commerce, for the company union.

Mr. Walter C. Teagle, a very pleasant gentleman, who creates the impression of shooting square and who moves with something of the mien of a mid-west squire of older days, has issued through the department of commerce a blast supporting the company union, dolling up his message in language that strives to look like the language of a person who had no cards whatever up his sleeve.

"Thoughtful proponents of employe representation," said Mr. Teagle, the head of Standard Oil, "neither predict nor desire the destruction of the union labor movement," whereupon he proceeds to expound the beauties of "employe representation" as possessed of "special advantages."

Mr. Teagle got about two columns of space in the New York Times for his outbursts, which shows it was good news there, at least.

Raps "Philosophy of Conflict."

The Standard Oil chief, member of the industry advisory board of NRA and member of the national labor board, proceeds to declare that employe representatives should come from the shop, skirting the old story about the desirability of "outsiders," but forgetting to say anything about the equally old story that the man in the shop is so often fired for being aggressive in behalf of the rights of the workers.

Mr. Teagle does a bad job of trying to say that the philosophy of unions is a philosophy of conflict and that the philosophy of employe representation is one of co-operation. Mr. Teagle says there is a difference between employe representation and company unions, which will be news to the American Federation of Labor, but he holds that "the unqualified support of the employer" is necessary to the success of employe representation.

Why He Likes Scheme.

Mr. Teagle likes employe representation because "it settles local problems without getting involved in outside complications," which is a very good reason why he should like it and why workers should find it just another bond of enslavement. Such a plan, he declares, "became well nigh indispensable" when "wages and working time had to be reduced." That means that the employers could do as they pleased with "employe representation" outfits, while unions made their own decisions and fought against wage reductions.

Read properly, Mr. Teagle's outburst, issued as "a report" by Mr. Teagle, is complete proof of the value and need of real trade unions for workers and a complete expose of the fallacy of so-called employe representation.

But this question is not yet answered: "Why did the department of commerce use its machinery to distribute this propaganda outburst?"

ROOSEVELT TELLS CONGRESS NRA IS PERMANENT POLICY

Washington, Jan. 11.—A positive denial that the provisions for the operation of industry contained in the national industrial recovery act are temporary characterized the message which President Roosevelt delivered to the United States congress.

After reviewing generally the work of his administration since last March, he turned directly to the recovery act with the following declaration:

"We have made great strides toward the objectives of the national industrial recovery act, for not only have several millions of our unemployed been restored to work, but industry is organizing itself with a greater understanding that reasonable profits can be earned while at the same time protection can be assured to guarantee to labor adequate pay and proper conditions of work.

"Child labor is abolished. Uniform standards of hours and wages apply today to 95 per cent of industrial employment within the field of the national industrial recovery act.

"We seek the definite end of preventing combinations in furtherance of monopoly and in restraint of trade, while at the same time we seek to prevent ruinous rivalries within industrial groups which in many cases resemble the gang wars of the underworld and in which the real victim in every case is the public itself.

Governmental Supervision.

"Under the authority of this congress we have brought the component parts of each industry together around a common table, just as we have brought problems affecting labor to a common meeting ground.

"Though the machinery, hurriedly devised, may need readjustment from time to time, nevertheless I think you will agree with me that we have created a permanent feature of our modernized industrial structure and that it will continue under the supervision, but not the arbitrary dictation, of government itself."

Postoffice Clerks' "Union" Refuses Labor Affiliation

New York City, Jan. 5.—General recognition of the social value and industrial service which only labor organizations could perform had to be recognized in drafting the National Industrial Recovery act, Donald Richberg, NRA counsel, told the National Consumers League in session here.

Two other principles which had to be recognized, he said, were:

"First, industry could be made self-governing only upon the acknowledgment and acceptance of obligations of public service. But instead of setting up regulatory commissions with hampering restrictions upon the exercise of private judgment and heavy burdens of expense and delay, a more flexible machinery of government enforcement of obligations to the public must be devised. For this purpose trade and industries adopt codes for self-government with the sanction and supervision of the federal government.

"Second, there must be definite limitations upon the powers of combined action, so that machineries of cooperation in serving the public could not be transferred into conspiracies to exploit the public."

A fair reward for labor is the first requisite of a fair exchange of labor products, Richberg said. "A few business men," he added, "may profit, at least temporarily, from low wages and long hours. But all business suffers in the long run from any general acceptance of that policy."

After pointing out that the Consumers' League has sought to have consumers use their buying power, their economic and political power, to compel the payment of decent wages, Richberg said:

"I hope that the consumer advisers of the National Recovery Administration will always bear in mind that the ultimate consumer interest does not lie in low prices, but in prices adequate to maintain, not only the economic health of trades and industries, but also the physical and mental health of the workers who are that large and important body of consumers upon whose welfare depends the welfare of the nation."

Sales Tax Opposed By Retail Code Head

New York.—Grover A. Whalen, chairman of the New York City retail code authority, knocked the proposed 2 per cent state sales tax clear out of the ring in a letter to Seabury C. Mastick, chairman of the New York state tax commission, for the revision of the tax law.

"From the consumers' point of view," Mr. Whalen said, "the sales tax is the most obnoxious form of taxation that exists. For the consumer, the sales tax is an income tax with a reverse twist. It taxes not according to ability to pay, which is the underlying principle of the income tax, but according to the people's consumptive requirements."

Referring to the $130,000,000 that would be raised from such taxation, Mr. Whalen pointed out that this actually would be taken away from New York City's present buying power. The diminishing of buying power on such a large scale, he said, would prove injurious to President Roosevelt's recovery program.

The code authority is composed of representative merchants of New York City and supervises the functioning of the retail code among 50,000 merchants.

FARM HOMES WORTH LITTLE.

Washington, D. C.—Bureau of census figures show that 44 per cent of the homes owned by farmers are worth less than $1,000 and only about 4 per cent are valued at more than $5,000. Sixty-five per cent of tenant farmers' homes are valued at under $1,000 and only 1 per cent over $5,000. Average value for owned farm homes is $1,135 and for tenant farms $500.

Danger Is Ahead, Despite '33 Gains, Warning of Labor

Unemployment, Lack of Economic Balance and Threat of Inflation Seen as Menaces.

Washington, Jan. 11.—Progress toward recovery has been made and labor's prospects for employment and earnings are brighter for 1934, but recovery will be short lived unless there is a balance between production and consumption, the American Federation of Labor says in its monthly survey of business.

Three important advances were made by workers in 1933, the survey says. These were:

"(1) Greater employment; 1,800,000 who were out of work last year-end now have jobs in industry, and 4,000,000 have temporary work under CWA, PWA and CCC.

"(2) Shorter hours: Average weekly work hours in industry generally are shorter by 4½ hours per week than at the end of 1932.

"(3) Organization: Workers are better organized to handle their problems and share in industrial control than they were last year."

The recovery program was credited with having increased the income of all workers in industry by 11.7 per cent, or $243,000,000 monthly plus another $300,000,000 monthly put into workers' pockets temporarily through jobs provided by the PWA and the CWA.

As a result of this increase in workers' buying power, the report said, business activity at the opening of 1934 was at least 10 per cent above last year.

Hourly wage rates had averaged higher by 5½ cents per hour, but in many cases this was not enough to compensate for shorter hours and in no case for higher prices.

Millions who got jobs were better off, but those who had already had jobs at more than a minimum wage lost ground.

Workers' total income had risen so much, however, that business had been much stimulated.

"All these gains show progress," said the survey, "but we must not forget that in November 10,702,000 workers still had no industrial employment, that CWA funds giving temporary work to 4,000,000 will be exhausted by February 15, that business is still 30 per cent below normal, that the outlook is overshadowed by a danger which might destroy all progress made — inflation by fiat money."

Warning Is Sounded.

The warning that production and consumption must be balanced was given to an outline of "Progress Under NRA."

"Recovery will be short lived unless we start now to plan for control of industrial processes so that balance may be kept in future between production and consumption," the survey said.

The fact that under most codes workers had not received representation on the code authority was called a "serious omission," which might make the code mechanism ineffective as a means of securing economic balance.

Must Share Wealth Equitably.

"Unless this omission is promptly remedied, there will be no agent on the code authority to see that wages and buying power increase proportionately with productive power," the report declared.

"We can make a few people wealthy by limiting the goods we produce and selling them at high prices; but to make every one richer and raise living standards in general we must produce for all at the lowest possible prices and distribute the wealth created so that all may share."

Nagging Pains are WARNING SIGNALS

TEMPORARY pain relief remedies may save you much suffering at the moment, but putting a mask over a warning signal does not clear up the condition it was telling you to avoid.

BOSSES' UNION PLANS DRIVE ON LEGISLATURE

"Co-operation" of Candidates to Be Sought.

TO BE ACTIVE IN 'OTHER MOVEMENTS'

Gilbert Declares NRA Giving State Manufacturers Concern.

The National Recovery Act is giving every manufacturer in Tennessee concern, according to a letter sent to members of the state employers' union by the secretary, and the manufacturers "must look in every direction for a means whereby a saving can be effected."

Therefore, according to the letter, the association "expects to be energetically active in several movements affecting industry, individually and collectively, in order that cost of production might be held to the lowest possible level."

Says Gilbert:

"During 1934 members of the Tennessee legislature will be elected to serve during the session beginning the first Monday in January, 1935. Experience has taught us that the time to secure co-operation and assistance of public officials is during the period of campaigning. Consequently, we expect to have a definite program to place before every candidate for public office in Tennessee in 1934 with respect to a further reduction in governmental expenditures of every kind and description."

The association expects to make 1934 the most active period of its existence, says the business agent of the bosses' union, and beginning at once will start out to accomplish many things.

Local trades unionists to whom the letter was shown expressed confidence that, with the present greatly increased memberships, the various locals and central bodies in the state, working through the Tennessee Federation of Labor, will be in better position than ever to combat the scheming of smart lawyers and politicians to control governmental machinery in the interest of the crowd that has the money and against men and women who work in mill, mine and factory.

"I think we should start a little activity on our own hook," a well-known local unionist said. "We may also want to ask candidates for public office some questions about industrial conditions, and, strange as it may seem to some, we may have some ideas of our own respecting governmental expenditures and who should be the ultimate beneficiaries—the whole people or a small and selfish group."

Plumber Brown Has Another Birthday

H. F. Brown, veteran member of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, admits that last Sunday he celebrated another birthday, although the old-timer flatly refused to indicate how many of these occasions he has noted. "They are getting more and more numerous every year," he told The Labor World, "I have lost track of them. They are a nuisance."

The Labor World's guess is that Brown is about 96, but anyhow he is still able to give a good day's work for the CWA, for which we are all glad. Congratulations, Hal.

Hosiery Workers Plan Open Meeting At Roosevelt Hall

Circular Urges Mill Employes to Attend Session of Local Union Saturday.

Officers of Branch 53, American Federation of Full-Fashioned Hosiery Workers, have issued a circular urging local workers in this industry to attend a special meeting called for Saturday, at Roosevelt hall, 2 p.m.

The circular calls attention to the fact that manufacturers of the south are organizing solidly in order to attempt to secure a major differential in the wage rates for the south under the codes. Manufacturers, the circular declares, are becoming more brazen every day in their defiance of the NRA, due to the apathy of the workers, and an invitation is extended employes of local mills to attend the meeting Saturday and help to plan a campaign which will insure maximum benefits for the workers under the national recovery act.

The circular addressed to the hosiery workers of Chattanooga follows:

> The manufacturers of the south are organizing more solidly each day, and due to the apathy of the workers, are becoming more brazen in defying the purposes and spirit of the national recovery act.
> Their purpose is mainly to undo what little you have gained through the hosiery code and the NRA. They are not satisfied with the 10% differential that already exists between the northern and southern worker. They want at least 30% differential. Are you going to continue to stand idly by and allow this to happen, or are you going to get into your labor union and help fight these unscrupulous employers? Many of you have been misled by your bosses to drop your affiliation, while they are secretly plotting and scheming to bring back the deplorable conditions that prevailed before the hosiery code became effective. Get back into the fight before it is too late by attending your meeting next Saturday, Jan. 20, 1934, at 2 p.m., at the Labor hall, Seventh and Market streets (over Liggett's Drug store, on third floor.)

Operating Engineers Call Special Meeting

Local union of Operating Engineers has called a special meeting for members Sunday afternoon at 2:30, at Roosevelt hall, Seventh and Market streets.

Officers of the union announce that a representative of the international organization will be present, and will bring a message of interest.

Every member of the local is requested and expected to be present, it is announced.

Kelly Urges Shorter Hours and Higher Pay

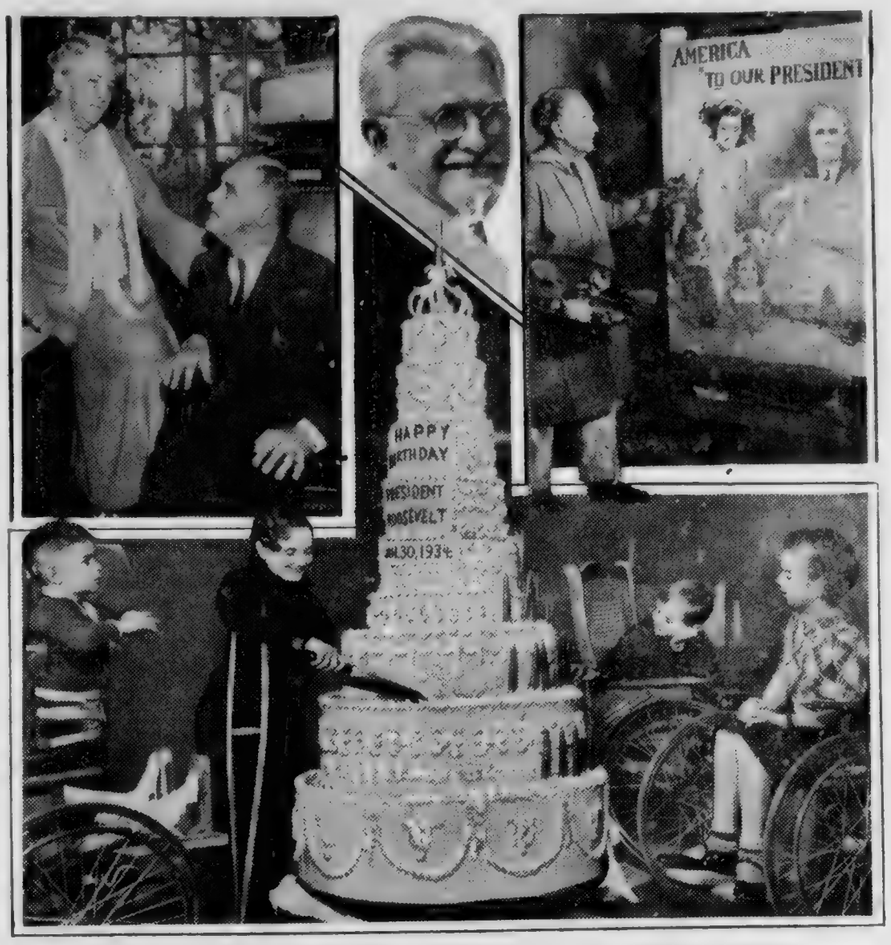
Pennsylvania Representative Says Large Mass Buying Power Is Necessary for Decovery.

New York.—Shorter hours, higher wages, and control of production and prices must materialize under the national recovery act, if its main object to increase mass purchasing power is to be achieved, Congressman Clyde Kelly, of Pennsylvania, told members of the Advertising club here in an address on economic conditions.

In addition to these three changes, Representative Kelly included the following steps as necessary to make the administration of industry under the fair practice codes more in line with the public interest: administration of the labor section of the recovery act as congress intended, with full right of the workers to choose the form of their organizations and their representatives; immediate coordination by the planning and research agency planning efforts made through separate codes, and the collection of complete statistics on production, prices, employment and payrolls.

Representative Kelly said the recovery act does not give either employers or the workers a distatorship. He called it a three-way agreement with the government acting as an umpire in the public interest.

5,000 Birthday Balls to Honor President January 30 And to Help Finance Fight on Infantile Paralysis



GETTING READY FOR THE BIGGEST BIRTHDAY PARTY IN AMERICAN HISTORY

Every community in the nation will honor President Roosevelt when he becomes 52 years old on Tuesday, Jan. 30, by giving a local ball to help endow an extension of the nation-wide work of the Warm Springs Foundation for Infantile Paralysis in which the President is so deeply interested. Upper left, the President and his mother, Mrs. James A. Roosevelt, who bought the first box sold for the New York ball in the Waldorf-Astoria, upper center, Colonel Henry L. Doherty, chairman of the committee of leaders arranging the observance of the President's anniversary; upper right, the official poster contributed to the movement by the famous artist, Howard Chandler Christy; lower picture, child patients at Warm Springs sharpening up knives and appetites for the largest observance of the President's birthday ever held at that health center. The cake, weighing 344 pounds and said to be the largest birthday cake ever made, was presented to the children for their party by Chairman Doherty.

Nation Joins Movement To Honor Birthday Of President Roosevelt

Number of Fetes May Even Exceed 5,000—Proceeds to Help Create Fund for Nation-wide Work of Warm Springs Foundation for Infantile Paralysis Victims.

New York, Jan. 18.—With more than 5,000 birthday balls for the president to be held on Jan. 30, Mr. Roosevelt's 52nd birthday, in nearly 3,000 communities scattered throughout the Union, Carl Byoir, general director for the national committee of the presidential birthday balls, announced that early returns from the nation already indicated that the last Tuesday in January would mark one of the greatest birthday parties in all history.

From every walk of life and every type of organization have come declarations that the biggest and best presidential birthday balls of them all would be given in such and such a city, town or hamlet in order that due respect might be paid the chief executive on his birthday and as a means of helping to raise a permanent endowment for Warm Springs Foundation for infantile parlysis.

Metropolitan areas are reporting scores of plans under way for numerous birthday balls, while word from the national capital indicates that the observance there of Mr. Roosevelt's birthday will rival the inaugural ball in brilliance and number of famous patrons and patronesses drawn from Washington's official and social life.

Not to be outshone by the larger cities, even the smallest hamlets in the land are reporting by the hundreds to national committee headquarters that everyone, including leading citizens everywhere, is cooperating to give the largest affair of the year in honor of the president and as a public-spirited means of helping endow the Warm Springs Foundation with sufficient funds to intensify and expand the health-restoring facilities of the institution throughout the country.

Fraternal groups, under the leadership of Joseph T. Fanning, chairman of the division, are 100 per cent strong behind the movement aimed with both barrels at awakening the public to the need of caring for the thousands of children and adults crippled each year by the dread infantile paralysis.

Civic organizations, including every major group of this character, daily add their quotas of birthday balls to the rapidly growing roster at national committee headquarters. In cases where fraternal or civic groups desire to give some other type of entertainment than a ball, every effort is made to assure the sponsors that other observances of the day may be approved by the national committee.

As more and more communities report their progress in the effort to give outstanding birthday balls for the president, earlier figures on the total number of observances Jan. 30 are being hurriedly revised. Where 5,000 balls were expected to prove the top number originally, enthusiastic news of plans rapidly nearing completion in every state of the Union show that the total number the end of this month may exceed 6,000, in about 4,000 communities.

LABOR BOARD FIRM FOR SIGNING ALL WORK CONTRACTS

"The disadvantages of basing a business relationship upon verbal understandings are too obvious to require comment by this board. Only a written agreement can give both parties the sense of certainty and security which is essential to lasting industrial peace. The employer who protests his willingness to deal with the representatives of his employes, but who categorically refuses from the outset to make any written agreement with them, is paying lip service, at most, to Section 7 (a) of the national recovery act."

Labor Board Orders Reinstatement Of Real Silk Workers

Maneuvering of "Company Union" Advocates Effectively Checked.

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 18.—The Real Silk management must take back two hosiery workers fired for union activity, the regional labor board here so ruled.

The ruling was a victory awarded the American Federation of Hosiery Workers which has been bitterly fighting the underhanded and anti-labor activities of the Real Silk mill management.

The two workers are Mrs. Savage and Mr. Taylor.

Said the board in a curt letter to J. A. Goodman, president of the concern, who had defied and ignored the board that it "has duly considered the evidence submitted in the case concerning the dismissals" and finds "it was proved by the evidences presented that the same rule was frequently violated by other employes, and considering this fact, the board finds that the punishment was too severe for the offense, and it has rendered the following decision: that Mrs. Savage (and Mr. Taylor) be reinstated as a full-time employe at the Real Silk Hosiery company immediately."

The orders, one for each of the workers, were signed by G. T. Watson, executive secretary of the board.

Goodman had been ordered by the board to present the management's side of the case.

But Goodman simply did not turn up at the hearing. Instead, he sent the head of his company union, Charles Leeke, president of the Employes Mutual Benefit association which, as its proponents insisted to NRA authorities not so long ago, represents the Real Silk workers.

But, instead of representing the workers, Leeke appeared against them. The union pointed out that Leeke and his company union was failing to perform the function they had insisted they could and would do—representation.

On the other hand, the American Federation of Hosiery Workers were really representing workers and were there at the hearing in defense of the two workers, "again proving the folly of the company union," declared Carl Linker, union representative.

Linker, who has been coming up from Fort Wayne at the insistence of Branch No. 35 members who want and intend to push a really representative organization, reported great progress in organization and much spirit among the workers.

The reinstatement was hailed by the Real Silk workers who are galled at the company's bold attempt to force the false company union down their throats.

Code Violators Warned of Trouble

Declares Recalcitrants Face Punishment Unless They Keep House in Order.

New York City, Jan. 18.—Col. R. W. Lee, deputy NRA administrator, speaking before the National Automobile Dealers' association in New York, said doubt exists in some quarters as to what the administration will do in cases of willful violation of codes. He said in such matters the administration has no choice. "The NRA is the law of the land," he said. "A violator is a lawbreaker, and must be dealt with as such. If industry can't keep its own house in order, there is in operattion right now a compliance machine to take over that job."

Union Machinist Appointed Texas Labor Commissioner

Austin, Tex.—Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson has appointed Charles H. Poe state labor and boxing commissioner to succeed Jack Flynn, who died recently. Poe has been in the labor department since February, 1933. He came from Houston, where he formerly was secretary-treasurer of Machinists' Union No. 12. He was traveling organizer of the machinists and at one time was president of the organization at Vicksburg, Miss.

Socialists Support Labor Boycott of German Goods

Chicago.—Clarence Senior, executive secretary of the socialist party of America, has written to all party organizations urging that immediate action be taken to co-operate with American Federation of Labor unions in making the boycott of German goods effective. The boycott was declared by the last A. F. of L. convention in protest against the Hitler government's attack on German democracy and trade unionism.

STRIKERS TAKE EXCEPTIONS TO BOARD RULING

Harriman Decision Not Firm Enough.

MILL BARONS AGAIN IGNORE NRA BODY

Workers Declare They Are Now Left "Holding the Bag."

Decision of the national labor board in the case of the strike at Harriman Hosiery mills was far from satisfactory to the workers, according to a letter addressed to John L. Lewis, labor member of the board, by Fred G. Held, representing the union.

The letter recalls the arrogance displayed by the mill owners, which is typical of a certain group of southern Bourbons, and also charges that T. Asbury Wright, who was nominated by the industrial captains to represent them at the hearing, is vice-president of the Magnet Knitting mills, of Clinton, Tenn., one of the largest manufacturers of non-union hosiery in the south, and also claims to be a director of eighteen different companies."

The reference to Wright is an indication that the attorney is representative of a group of southern mills which the hosiery workers have charged is banded together for the purpose of beating the NRA.

Mr. Held's letter follows:

Nashville, Tenn.,
Jan. 13, 1934.

Mr. John Lewis, President
United Mine Workers of America,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir and Brother:

Am writing you in reference to the decision handed down by the national labor board, re: the Harriman Hosiery Mills vs. the strikers of the same name, this hearing being held Jan. 4, with yourself acting on the board.

After listening to Mr. Wright, attorney and vice-president of the Harriman Hosiery mill, state its position regarding the authority of the national labor board and also that they would never agree to arbitrate as long as they, the Harriman mill, remained in business, I cannot conceive how the board could come to such a farcial decision.

You, as a labor leader of long standing, should know what kind of a proposition we in Harriman are up against without an agreement of some sort. You ask the strikers to go back to work or, as I should say, call off the strike without any assurance that any of the strikers will get back to work. While the second and third paragraphs meet with the desire of us, the last one, in reference to—if an agreement is reached, it should be in writing—is just a joke, as we have attempted everything that is humanly possible to bring this about without success. At any rate, even as farcial as the decision seems, we attempted to get a conference with the management of the Harriman mill immediately upon receiving the official decision—and what was the result? They simply ignored our request and we are holding the bag.

It is now up to the national labor board to act. You were told quite plainly by Mr. T. A. Wright, of the Harriman mill, that they would not agree to anything the board would suggest and they mean it, unless the board really uses their authority such as they claim to have, and stop pussyfooting as they have up to this time.

We have tried to explain to the board some time ago in our communications that this fight is not only against the Harriman mill but against a group or chain of interlocking directorates and therefore some drastic action must be taken. If the board would look deeper into this situation they may be able to find this out. For instance, this Mr. T. A. Wright is also vice-president of the Magnet Knitting mills of Clinton, Tenn., one of the largest non-union manufacturers of hosiery in the south, and he also claims to be a director of eighteen different companies.

The management of the Harriman mills have induced some of the strikers to go back to work only by informing them that they would never agree to sign an agreement or take back those discharged, and mostly that the labor board could not force them to do so. If such is the case, we would rather have the national labor board come out directly with this information so the workers in this county would know how to act.

These workers organized their union on the assumption that they would not be discharged for their affiliation, due to Section 7 (a) of the national recovery act.

We hope that the board will act immediately on this situation before it is too late. If nothing is done now the whole labor movement in the south is in jeopardy and hope that Excuse It, Please!

One of those aggravating typographical errors which are the bane of every newspaper man's existence occurred in last week's issue of The Labor World, and the editor has ever since been the "goat" of sarcastic jibes from all sides, and particularly from our friends among the Postal Clerks.

Two two-column headlines were transposed, one relating to the NRA and the other to an "ice cream" organization of postal employes. The latter head read, "Postoffice Clerks 'Union' Refuses Labor Affiliation," and, without the proper explanation, was taken by some as meaning the legitimate organization.

In connection with the incident, the editor offers the following plea in extenuation:

The Printer's Worry.

The typographical error is a slippery thing and sly,
You can hunt until you're dizzy, but it somehow will get by,
Till the forms are off the presses, it is strange how still it keeps;
It shrinks down into a corner, and it never stirs or peeps,
That typographical error, too small for human eyes,
Till the ink is on the paper, when it grows to mountain size.
The boss, he stares with horror, then he grabs his hair and groans;
The copy reader drops his head upon his hands and moans—
The remainder of the issue may be clean as can be,
But that typographical error is the only thing you see.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—When did American organized workers first begin to press for a universal free public education?

A.—In the 1830's. In 1830 the workers of Pennsylvania demanded republican education for all children. In 1834 a special convention of labor called in New York City to consider the professional monopoly of education urged "an equal, universal, republican system of education."

Q.—How many states now have minimum wage laws?

A.—Sixteen. Of this number, seven were passed in 1933.

Take a Pinch of BLACK-DRAUGHT
For Distress After Meals

He had suffered distress after meals, but by taking Thedford's Black-Draught he was relieved of this trouble, writes Mr. Jess Higgins, of Dawsonville, Ga.

"I had sour stomach and gas," Mr. Higgins explains, "and often I would have bilious spells. I read about Thedford's Black-Draught and began to take it. It relieved me of this trouble. I keep it all the time now. I consider it a fine medicine. I take a pinch of Black-Draught after meals when I need it. It helps to prevent sick headache and to keep the system in good order."

"Give and Take"

A letter to the members of the Tennessee Manufacturers' association, signed by one Gilbert, manfriday for John Edgerton, reporting on the southern conference held in Chattanooga in December, called for the purpose of "assisting" the NRA, declares that the meeting was marked by a spirit of "give and take."

A local manufacturer to whom the letter was addressed handed a copy to The Labor World, with the following comment:

"There is but one construction to put on Gilbert's statement that the spirit of the session was marked by a desire to give and take. I believe it will be generally agreed that some of the leaders in the meeting referred to made themselves ridiculous, and this is backed by the puerile efforts of Edgerton himself to 'crawfish', and the fine spirit shown by some of the most progressive manufacturers in publicly disclaiming responsibility for some of the sentiments expressed.

"However, if a 'give and take' spirit dominated the meeting it could only have been:

"Give the workers hell, and take everything they have."

Let's Have a Hospital

In a recent conference between one of the City Commissioners and Secretary T. R. Cuthbert, of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, the prospects of securing a general hospital for this section was brought forth by the secretary. Belief was expressed by the commissioner that had plans for such a project been prepared and ready to present at the time the CWA called for projects that a fine general hospital might have been secured.

It was further pointed out that only projects for which complete plans were actually existing were approved, and for that reason the hospital was "out" simply because there had been much talk about the need for same but no tangible preparation made.

Press reports from congress lead us to believe that even more public funds will be appropriated. Let us not be caught napping again! Let actual plans for a real general hospital for Chattanooga and Hamilton county be drawn up on the presumption that the money is all ready and that construction will be started immediately. Then, if congress so rules that public projects shall be extended, we will be in position to get our hospital.

Get busy, doctors! Take the lead, city and county officials! Think it over, citizens! We need that hospital!

Low Wages Endanger NRA

A menacing condition of affairs was revealed at a NRA hearing of complaints against the lumber and timber products industry code. Witnesses testified to payment of wages as low as 15 cents an hour in the south.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, charged that in many localities in the south workers were employed only 25 hours a week, with a resultant weekly earnings of $4.20. Mr. Green rightly declared that the situation was "absolutely untenable" and that when "an industry cannot pay decent wages it has no right to exist."

Most of the workers receiving the low wages are negroes, who have always been the victims of the worst kind of labor exploitation, both north and south. Apparently the compliance boards in the south are in too many cases not strictly enforcing the codes, with the result that many negroes are receiving shamefully low pay. Where they are paid code wages, they are often the victims of various kinds of "chiseling." One example is the increase of food and housing prices by mill owners to enable them to "recapture" the wage increases called for by the code.

The situation endangers the wage structure of the lumber code and because of the importance of the lumber industry (it is the fourth largest in the United States) it is a danger to the whole NRA effort to raise wages and purchasing power. It is a situation that demands immediate remedy. Will the remedy be forthcoming by prompt and vigorous action of the Recovery Act Administration?

Voluntary Agreements Sound

Senator Robert F. Wagner, chairman of the NRA National Labor Board, stated a profound truth when he said that voluntary agreements between employers and workers are always preferable to "agreements" forced by an outside agency, such as the labor board.

There is food for thought in his statement for those who have vociferously shouted for more forcible action by the board. By waiting until sober second thought has had a chance to function, the board has obtained more lasting agreements in many cases than it would have by compulsion.

Packing NRA?

A deputy administrator and a division administrator recently appointed by the National Recovery Act Administration are both men with pronounced employer and corporation affiliations. It seems almost certain that by the very nature of their previous life and environment they will look kindly on the employer side of things. However mightily they strive, it will be difficult for them to see things in terms of public welfare, which is what NRA is primarily designed to promote.

There have been too many NRA appointments of the kind just mentioned and if they are continued, they may bring forth the suspicion that NRA is being "packed" with men and women whose sympathies are with the "top dog" rather than the masses of the people.

Ford Duped Workers, Says Writer

Much Publicized $5 Daily Wage More of Catch Phrase Than Actuality, Real America Article Charges.

Chicago, Jan. 18.—A new angle on the character and industrial policies of Henry Ford is presented in an article, entitled "Henry Ford, Feudal Lord or Modern Moses," in the magazine Real America.

Touching on the highly publicized five-dollar wage scale, William Stanley Hamilton, writer of the article, remarks: "As a matter of fact the five-dollar wage was more of a catch phrase than an actuality. Five dollars a day is a nice chunk of money to a poor laborer used to half as much, but what if you get only three days' work a week? Other automobile plants paid just as good wages, if not better, but they didn't pay their publicity man so well."

According to Hamilton, the forges in Ford's plants are unbearable for more than six months, after which a worker is supposed to break down physically. In the article Ford is accused of juggling employment figures, often placing the cards of men who have been laid off under a heading of "resigned" or "discharged."

A great secret service is said by the Real America writer to be maintained by Ford, and this corps of stool pigeons is said to contain ex-convicts and other objectionable characters. Harry H. Bennett, nominal head of this body, is alleged to have obtained the lunch-peddling concession in the plant for Chester Lemare, known gangster who has since been slain by gangland. Thus, incipient gangsters trundled carts through the great plant, selling lunches to men who were not given time to go outside the plant to eat.

Elmer Crosby—Was I? I never saw a man so glad to get rid of me in all my life.

Noted Artist's Tribute to President Whom Nation Honors at Birthday Fetes Jan. 30

A CALL TO THE COUNTRY TO HAIL HER LEADER

This striking poster was painted by the famous artist, Howard Chandler Christy, when he heard of the national movement to observe President Roosevelt's birthday on Tuesday night, Jan. 30, by raising an endowment fund for Warm Springs Foundation for Infantile Paralysis at Presidential Birthday Balls given simultaneously in every community in the land. He gave it to the national committee as its official poster. Done in red, white and blue, the poster depicts Miss America at the left protecting two children who are looking up to President Roosevelt, shown above the capitol. The slogan across the top "America, to our President" was coined by Mr. Christy as a toast to Mr. Roosevelt from the nation.

Post will fly members of the national committee from city to city in fast time to speed up the movement to honor the President.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Figures made public by the National Association of Postal Clerks prove the old adage that the little fellow always gets soaked. The figures show that pay cuts under the economy act fall heaviest upon the lowest salaried postal clerks. For regular clerks in the $1,700 per annum group, the percentage of deduction in the last six months of 1933 amounted to 25.86, while for the highest grade of veteran and expert "special" clerks the loss was 18.98 per cent.

The postal clerks' figures reveal the injustice of the government's wage cuts in general. In the case of the government workers, as well of workers in private employment, wage cuts cause more hardship to the little fellows than they do to the higher paid workers. Even if the percentages of deduction are exactly the same, the big fellows have more left after the deductions are made.

Vocational training for new trade skills demanded by the technological advance in all industries is an important factor in the program of industrial rocovery, Dr. J. C. Wright, assistant commissioner for vocational education, in the federal office of education, points out in his annual report. This is true, Dr. Wright says, because industry cannot resume activities on the new basis with a labor force untrained in the new technics.

"It follows," he says, "that as business resumes, the problem of recovery both for industries and for workers will not be a problem of getting the millions of unemployed workers back on their old jobs or on any other jobs for which their acquired training and experience has previously fitted them. For millions of those now unemployed traditional skill and occupational experience, acquired in the predepression period, will very generally have gone into the discard as part of the price society must pay for resumption of activities at all under the intensified competitive pressure for economy which always characterizes a period of recovery. Industrial recovery and elimination of unemployment will, accordingly, not be simply a placement procedure of returning labor to jobs for which they are fitted, but rather a training procedure of preparing labor for the new jobs that have become available."

The retraining of workers of all ages in the new technics is, in Dr. Wright's opinion, a prime responsibility of the vocational education system. "Vocational education," he says, "must function effectively as one social agency of industrial recovery."

Justice in Germany scored no triumph in the execution of Marinus Van der Lubbe, the hazy-minded Dutch youth who of all the defendants in the reichstag fire trial was found guilty. Through the weeks of the trial, Van der Lubbe, in the words of the United Press, "appeared a thick witted moronic youth of a mental age hardly more than five years." It is almost inconceivable that the man was the instigator of the fire. He must have been merely a tool in the hands of others. But now that Nazi Germany, clamoring for vengeance, has executed Van der Lubbe, the secret of the fire may never be known. Germany might better have spared Van der Lubbe, in the hope that finally he would have aided in solving the mystery. That he was put to death, apparently in haste and despite the plea of the Dutch government that his life be spared, lends strength to the suspicion that the Nazi government does not want the real facts of the reichstag fire revealed.

The cocoanut is the only thing that has to be milked with a corkscrew.

A certain man recently had a doctor give him a thorough examination. The doctor pronounced him "sound as a dollar!" Now the local man is wondering what he meant by that.

We may feel sorry for the man who loaned more money on a piece of property than it would or could ever pay, but that's about as far as we can go.

Oh! I Wish We Had Our Telephone Back

IT'S a lonesome, isolated kind of life, trying to get along without a telephone. Out of touch with friends—seldom invited out, and unable to call friends to invite them over for an evening.

"It just doesn't pay," said a customer recently. "I want my telephone back. The happiness and comfort we've missed was worth far more than the small amount we saved by trying to do without it."

When you compare the numerous advantages that a telephone in your home affords with the small cost you will probably agree, too, that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

You can afford the few pennies a day that a telephone costs. Order yours put back now. Just call the telephone business office or give your order to any telephone employe.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

SLUGS

From the Hell Box

At the Times Chapel

Perhaps an explanation of the name of this column would be in order, for there may be a few people read it who are unfamiliar with composing room phrases. The modern explanation of the term "Hell Box" is a receptacle conveniently located near a saw for receiving scrap type metal, or near the correction bank in which lines, or slugs, of type in which there are typographical errors are thrown. All such metal is later melted and used again, over and over. In the Hell Box is also thrown "dead" type lines, or type which for any reason is not intended for use or has been used once and not wanted for further use. The name "Slugs From the Hell Box" is appropriate for this column, for in it will no doubt be many errors (of judgement) and many thoughts expressed which some people will think should have found their way into the real Hell Box instead of this column.

Thomas Blanford will preside over meetings of the Times chapel for the next six months. Phil Mandre, retired chairman, decided we were using too much soap and not leaving enough graft in the soap fund for him and declined to enter the competition. L. O. Beaumont was elected secretary and is to be commended on his willingness to take the post, as there is very little honor in such an unimportant job and no graft at all. He does not get to act as chairman on the chairman's nights off, however.

Bill Marsh was mistaken for a burglar by policemen a couple of Sunday mornings ago and experienced a little difficulty in convincing them he was nothing more dangerous than a printer's devil. It seems a drug store on McCallie and Lindsay had been broken into and the police were investigating. As it was raining, Bill, who lives a couple of blocks away from the Times on Eighth street, was running to get home quickly, and to the police a person running in the vicinity of a burglary looks suspicious, so they collared him and demanded an explanation.

mean to you!

1 AN IMMEDIATE SAVING for every residential customer on our lines . . . effective with bills rendered on and after February 1, 1934.* Although the small consumer gets the greatest dollars and cents saving, in some cases amounting to as much as 25% . . . everyone gets a saving. No bills are increased by the new "Immediate" Rate. The table below (under 1) gives examples of these savings.

2 MORE ELECTRICITY AT NO EXTRA COST Every residential customer gets more electricity for his money . . . and the great majority receive MORE electricity for LESS money. See the column headed "Additional Kilowatt-Hours at No Cost." It means exactly what it says . . . you can add more lighting, more appliances, or use your present equipment more freely . . . to the extent indicated as compared with your use of electricity for the same month of last year . . . without increasing your electric bill on the Immediate Rate one cent!

3 THERE'S A STILL LOWER RATE When you increase your consumption in any month of 1934 above your consumption for the same month of 1933 to the point where you use up all of these additional kilowatt-hours you are billed for ALL kilowatt-hours used during that month on the even lower "Promotional" Rate. This means that you can add an electric range or refrigerator or water heater or several other appliances that you've always wanted . . . and increase your monthly electric bill very little. For instance, just to use one example, the average size family, now paying an electric bill of about $4.00 a month, can add an electric range and refrigerator and under this rate the bill will only increase to about $6.75. In other words, it will only cost this family about $2.75 a month to cook and refrigerate electrically. This is truly a Bargain Rate for those who wish to further electrify their homes. The rate will be discussed in subsequent advertisements.

*Minimum bill customers, of course, will continue to pay $4.00 a month. However, the dollar will buy 15 kw-hrs. on the "immediate" rate as compared with 11 kw-hrs. under the old rate, a reduction from about 9c to 6 2-3c a kw-hr. The customer actually can use 4 extra kw-hrs. at no additional cost.

Study These Tables! See How the "Immediate" Rate Benefits You

HOW TO USE THE TABLE

Suppose your bill a year ago was $3.20. First, you find that amount under Column 1. Under the old rates, that much money paid for 40 kilowatt-hours. If you use the same amount of electricity this January, your bill will be only $2.38 (next column) a saving of 82 cents.

But for [illegible] bill of $2.38, you will be entitled to use an additional 5 kilowatt-hours at no extra cost (as shown in Column 2).

That means that you can now get 45 kilowatt-hours for $2.38, whereas you have been paying $3.20 for only 40 kilowatt-hours. In other words, you can now get 5 MORE kilowatt-hours for 82 cents LESS money.

Five kilowatt-hours, ordinary language, means that you can add such combinations of appliances as an electric Toaster and Waffle Iron . . . or a Mixmaster and Percolator . . . or a Washing Machine and Vacuum Cleaner . . . thereby using up your "no charge" kilowatt-hours without increasing your new reduced bill of $2.38.*

*We have used figures for the average consumption of these devices . . . assuming that you will use them about as much as the average family does.

Revolt Declared U.S. Peril Unless Youth Gets Work

Equal Opportunity Must Be Given to All to Avoid Revolution, New York Y. M. C. A. Secretary's Report Warns.

New York, Jan. 18.—Youth must be given an opportunity to earn a living or the nation will be confronted with revolt, Walter T. Diack, general secretary of the New York Y. M. C. A., declared in his annual report.

"The serious problems of the depression did not begin with the stock market crash," says the report, which deals with activities in the thirty Y. M. C. A. centers in Manhattan and the Bronx last year. "They began when young men, who had been taught to think, found the doors of employment closed to them. They began when these young men found that in a world of plenty they were unable to earn a living. This is a situation which cannot be solved by the bread line or the lodging house. It can only be solved by taking thought of the morrow of the youth of our country and endeavoring to adjust the economic structure so that it provides equal opportunity to all.

"In the past our country has afforded such bounteous opportunities for the gaining of wealth that by the slipshod method of trial and error men managed to achieve a comfortable position in life, many of them doing work that provided no personal satisfaction and for which they were not well fitted.

"That day has passed and if we do not wish to sow the seeds of revolution we must offer the same intelligence to the guidance of youth that we bring into play when a great war or a great depression descends upon us. Youth has the energy to accomplish what it sets out to do and it will not long be neglected."

NEED SEEN FOR SUPER-BODY TO OVERSEE ALL NRA CODES

Gen. Johnson Sees Co-ordinating Board Necessary to Harmonize Conflicting Decisions and Policies—Officials Have Difficulty Showing Benefits to Skilled Labor of Code Wages—Consumers "Kick."

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, Jan. 18.—Increasing need for a co-ordinating body for the code authorities established under the 195 codes for industry that have been promulgated through NRA is felt by Gen. Johnson and his aides.

Decisions and policies in various industries are developing along widely different lines, and in some cases introducing elements of confusion. Furthermore, complaints arising among consumers over sharp price increases, which are not explained away by pleas of increased wages and shorter hours are giving emphasis to the need for a more effective mechanism of a directional nature for code authorities than exists at this time.

SUPER-CODE AUTHORITY:—Formation of a super-body, charged with general oversight of code authorities and boards, may be the result of the present conferences between Gen. Johnson and his staff. Such board, it is pointed out, would render rulings and decisions which stand as principles and precedents for the guidance of all code authorities, and intended in the long run to bring them, with their industries, to a standardized plane in relation to trade practices, definitions and accepted rules in business and industry. Gen. Johnson is turning the idea over in his head; he may spring it on the general meeting of code authority members which he has called in Washington the middle of February.

CONSUMER COMPLAINTS: — NRA officials find little difficulty in discovering where wages in the lowest brackets have increased under effects of codes, and representing in the aggregate more pay for common and unskilled labor. Their difficulty is found in showing where skilled labor is experiencing similar benefits; in fact, there is evidence that the pay of skilled workers in many lines has actually declined through readjustments under codes.

Gen. Johnson has declined to publicly admit that indexes show price increases sharply out of line with wage increases and improvement in employment, but with him and his aides this is a disturbing topic of discussion.

So disturbing, in fact, that the most comprehensive economic study that has yet been made by NRA, is getting under way in connection with price advances, and lending color to the possibility of some strong efforts soon to better control them.

The administration is especially anxious that now the president has undertaken gold revaluation, the range of prices shall be at least within reach of earning and buying power.

Activities of Communists Pictured By American Federation of Labor

President Green's Demand for Soviet Pledge Against Moscow-Inspired Propaganda Here as Condition of Recognition Charges Communists With Causing Strikes, Preparing for Revolution, and Disrupting Bona Fide Trade Unions.

Washington.—The American Federation of Labor is giving serious attention to the possibility of the recognition of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and the arrival of Alexander Troyanovsky as first soviet ambassodor, being accompanied by the encouragement of communist activities in the United States by the Moscow regime.

On Nov. 16, while negotiations for recognition were under way, Maxim Litvinoff, representing the Soviet union, made the pledge to our government that no Moscow-sponsored propaganda would be carried on here. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in a document submitted to President Roosevelt, requested that these terms be included in the recognition pact, but until now the scope of the document and its convincing facts were not revealed.

The memorandum consisted of 180 pages and 80 exhibits of pamphlets attributed to the communist party including a chart describing an alleged communist network covering twenty districts and the major industries.

Communist Organizations.

"The workers party, the United States section of the Communist Third Internationale," the document said, "is the father of the red movement in our midst, the active branch being the Trade Union Unity league with twenty-eight subordinate divisions. Our government should warn American wage-earners from joining these camouflaged unions, by placing a catalogue of these revolutionary organizations in the home of every American worker."

"OGPU Moscow spies are in American factories and in the trade union movement," the document read. "A former member, Bessedowski, when giving an astounding account of the OGPU intrigue, stated that its expenses in the United States 'would not exceed $50,000,000 per year.'

"Cases of assassinations in the United States under its auspices by name, date and place are recited. United States government departments are penetrated by the OGPU subterranean organization, obtaining and utilizing state confidential information for the benefit of the soviet regime.

Training for Insurrection.

"Communist rules for demonstrations, such as the hunger march, the bonus march, the Illinois coal march and a chain of others, are unquestionably designed for military training, gradually leading up to an armed insurrection.

"Evidence accumulated by the American Federation of Labor shows the existence of a criminal group under communist control comprising a skeleton terrorist force, trained, instructed and ready for expansion at short notice. Mutiny is advocated in the United States army and navy."

Communist Work in Unions.

The document recites instances of strikes in the Mahoning valley and in the steel and coal industries in opposition to NRA codes.

"The United Textile Workers," it declared, "have been forced to expend much money and some lives have been sacrificed."

The International Ladies' Garment Workers and many of the building trades were also described as struggling against communist activities.

ASKS UNION-MADE LICENSE PLATES

Chicago, Jan. 18.—A resolution requesting the Illinois State Federation of Labor to take "immediate action" toward the future manufacture of Illinois automobile license plates by union labor was passed at a regular meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

Charles F. Wills, of Building Service Employes' Union No. 34, who is the circulation manager of the Federation News, introduced the resolution.

Edward J. Hughes, secretary of state, who has charge of the issuance of automobile license plates, caused the 1934 plates to be made in the Illinois State penitentiary.

The order of the board follows:

"1. Those of the employees on the company's payroll on Oct. 25, 1933, who shall apply for re-employment by Jan. 17, 1934, shall be reinstated without discrimination or prejudice as rapidly as possible. Those who cannot be absorbed immediately shall be placed upon a preference list and be reinstated before any new employes are engaged. The employes, when reinstated, shall be restored to seniority and similar rights and benefits as were enjoyed at the time of discharge.

"2. The national labor board recommends, in the interest of national recovery, that the employes who were discharged during July, before this board was created, be reinstated or placed upon a preference list on the same basis as those designated above.

"3. In the event an agreement is reached it shall be reduced to writing and a copy of the agreement signed by an official of the company and a duly selected representative of the employees, shall be posted upon the bulletin board of the mill."

TEACHERS' UNION PROTESTS.

New York City.—Strong protest was voiced against enforced furloughs for teachers, further retrenchment in school outlays and additional curtailment of state aid to education, at a mass meeting of the Teachers' union. The union is fighting the enforced furlough of civil service employes and teachers on the ground that it amounts to a wage cut of 8 1-5 per cent.

Side Quit Hurting, Got Stronger, Well; CARDUI Helped Her

WOMEN! Get rid of the handicaps of a weak, debilitated condition with the assistance of Cardui.

Mrs. R. L. West, of Huntsville, Ala., writes: "I was weak and run-down. I had a pain in my side, and I kept losing weight. I grew nervous over my condition—this was unusual for me, for I am very cheerful when I am well and don't easily get nervous. I knew I ought to take something. My aunt told me I ought to try Cardui, which I did. I began to feel better. I kept it up until I had taken three or four bottles. My side quit hurting and I was soon feeling strong and well."

Cardui is sold at drug stores here.

ATLANTIC ICE ASSUMES ROLE LABOR'S FRIEND

Tells Neighbor Central Bodies Corporation Is Fair.

OFFICIALS 'GRIEVED' AT LOCAL ACTION

Chattanoogans Recall Cheap-Labor Attitude of Chain Concern.

The Atlantic Ice and Coal corporation, after the manner of such concern, is posing, in other cities, as a friend of labor, according to letters being received by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, and professing to be greatly aggrieved at the charge of unfairness lodged against the concern by Chattanooga labor after many weeks of fruitless effort on the part of the latter to induce corporation representatives to employ members of local organized crafts.

Central bodies in other cities are also being told by representatives of the chain corporation that the company is observing the code, although nothing is said about the local compliance board having forced the wealthy chain to pay back time to a worker because of rank violations.

Communications from other cities in answer to letters sent by Chattanooga Central Body with reference to the attitude of the cheap-wage corporation have so far contained nothing concerning the price of ice in other cities where the chain operates, and it is not known whether citizens in other localities are enjoying the temporary benefits of an ice "war." A careful check-up is being planned, however, and the ice market in the various cities where the chain operates will be watched with interest locally during the coming summer.

CHARGE LOCAL CODE VIOLATIONS.

Rumors emanating from reliable sources during the past week or ten days charge that the Atlantic company locally ignores the code, with the exception of work on the local brewery plant, which is being fitted out for the bottling of Lions Pilsener beer, under the trade name of Southeastern Brewing company. It is said that employes of the company and its various affiliates are compelled to work "from can till can't," and the experience of ice wagon drivers recently who attempted to take advantage of the law giving them the right to organize is pointed to as an example of what might happen to anyone who protested against violations of the code.

Local labor officials were inclined to give credence to reports that the chain is violating generally the code, recalling the incident before the local compliance board, the discharge of ice wagon drivers for attempting to organize, the maneuvering and manipulations of company representatives when non-union, cheap labor was employed in the construction of the bottling plant, the experience of members of the Brewery Workers' local, the price of ice and other incidents.

Trades unionists in sister cities, it is suggested, may not be so gullible as some folks believe, and the true facts will be furnished each and every central body by Chattanooga trades unionists.

Middletown Unions Add 600 to Membership List

Middletown, Ohio.—Delegates to the annual meeting of the Middletown Trades and Labor council reported that 600 new members were added to the various trade unions here during the past year. Edith Miller, delegate of the Pulp, Sulphate and Paper Mill Workers' union, was elected recording secretary of the council. She is the first women chosen for that position.

Sock Mill Strikers Get Three Meals Per Day---At Last

Scores of Workers Apparently Enjoying Novelty of Warmth and Comfort.

That age-old rule of chivalry, "Women and children first," is being violated at Harriman, Tenn., where scores of men strikers are being given preference over women and girl strikers in a situation which assures to them three meals a day, a sound roof over their heads and a warm bed to sleep in.

Although the Roane county jail is said to be crowded with the men strikers, charged with violating an injunction which prohibited picketing, it is reported officers of the law steadfastly refuse to arrest women and girls said to be "guilty" of the same offense.

News articles coming out of the stricken district indicate that the men strikers are enjoying the novel experience of "comfortable living," and that no effort whatever is being extended toward securing their "freedom."

Recalling the attitude of the Harriman mill barons, who have arrogantly defied the regional and national labor boards, and the determined spirit of the workers to secure justice, local working men expressed the opinion that permaps many of those jailed are now enjoying for the first time since they were employed by the concern a fair degree of comfort, and reports that the sheriff and jailers are extending every courtesy to the prisoners is welcome locally.

Officers of the Harriman local were in Washington this week, conferring with various interests, and it was hoped that some plan might be worked out whereby the autocratic mill barons could be forced to carry out instructions of the United States government, acting through the national labor board.

Strike Warning Given Soft Coal Men by Lewis

Washington, Jan. 26.—The national bituminous coal industrial board in session here adopted a tentative draft of plans for better enforcement of the soft coal code.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, recently appointed to the board by President Roosevelt, said it was obvious that the coal board would have to assume a large share of the government of the industry. He indicated that if some operators violated the code, he would consider it the union's duty to co-operate in resisting price demoralization by withdrawing men from mines where the code was broken.

The coal operators were warned by Donald Richberg, general counsel of NRA, that they were "at a very serious crisis in the affairs of the industry." He said:

"You have your code and you have your opportunity and if you do not take advantage of the code the industry will degenerate back into a lawless, anti-social state in which everybody tries to cut everybody else's throat. You will then have everything from economic to civil war in your industry." The board's plans will be studied by the legal staff of the NRA.

Labor to Celebrate Birthday Of President Roosevelt in 300 Cities Throughout Country

Organized Workers' Participation in Great Nation-wide Observance on January 30 to Honor Chief Executive and Aid Warm Springs Foundation to Set Record for Attendance, Enthusiasm and Contributions.

Chairman T. S. Myers, of the local general committee preparing for observance of the president's birthday, announces that all is in readiness for the event, which will be held at Memorial auditorium on Monday, Jan. 29. Moving up of the date probably means that this city will be one day ahead of the entire country, the change having been made necessary by the fact that the auditorium had been contracted for on the 30th many months ago.

Labor members of the committee announced that a generous response is being had in the sale of tickets, substantial sums being given by those in position to contribute liberally to the good cause. George Rogers, president of Local No. 80, American Federation of Musicians, announces that there will be thirty-six members of the union on the floor at all times during the hours between 9 p.m. and 2 a.m., and it is expected that one of the greatest gatherings in the history of the Memorial will attend the event.

At 12:01 a telegram will be sent the White House, congratulating the president, which will probably be the first of such messages to arrive for the executive.

Washington, Jan. 25.—In approximately 300 cities throughout the United States and all except one state, labor will celebrate the president's birthday on Jan. 30.

President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, who is a member of the national committee and chairman of the national labor advisory committee, expressed himself as delighted with the reports thus far in. "I think labor's participation is magnificent," he said, "and I am wholly delighted. The idea was a splendid one and the manner in which the unions have responded is a great credit to them."

Secretary Matthew Woll was equally pleased. "Thousands of letters and telegrams have come to my office, established to care for this work," he said, "showing labor's enthusiasm. I cannot fail to pay tribute to the thousands of labor men who have helped lay these plans for success. Many international unions have asked their entire list of local unions to participate. Local officers have worked day and night and a great good will for our movement has been generated."

Labor Press Is Praised.

"The labor press has done magnificent work," said Chester M. Wright, chairman of the labor press committee. "Thousands of columns of space have been given to this notable event. That labor in some 300 cities should join in this unique celebration is a tribute to its genius for organization and its intuition for doing the right thing. Labor, backed by the labor press, will do its share toward creating the two million dollar Warm Springs Foundation fund."

Through the Washington headquarters of the labor division a constant stream of letters and telegrams have flowed. The office has been like a war headquarters, because of its bustle and its net of communication with points all over the nation.

Woll Serves as Treasurer.

Plans now are being made for transfer of the funds resulting from labor's participation. Instructions have gone out to all treasurers of local birthday ball committees, instructing them to forward the Warm Springs portion of receipts promptly to Matthew Woll, who has been asked to serve as treasurer as well as secretary.

When returns are complete arrangements will be made for a ceremony at which the proceeds of labor's total participation will be turned over to the president. Whether this will be done in connection with and as a part of the transfer of funds by the general committee, of which Henry L. Doherty is chairman, is not known, but that probably will be the arrangement.

Records to Be Broken.

Labor's participation in the birthday celebration has taken two channels. In most cities labor is holding its own independent celebrations, While in others it is joining, either with one or two other organizations, or with the entire community in one great celebration.

Some of the largest halls in the country will be the scenes of birthday parties. More music will be furnished free by members of the American Federation of Musicians than has ever been given for any other event in history. More free services have been given by electricians, printers, stage hands and other unions than for any other single event. In many cases every cent of admission fees will be turned over to the Warm Springs Foundation and in every case expenses have been held to a minimum.

President to Be Honored on Jan. 30 At Birthday Balls Throughout Land

THE GUEST OF HONOR AT 6,000 FETES NEXT TUESDAY

When he becomes 52 on Jan. 30, President Roosevelt will be honored at the biggest birthday party in American history. A national committee of leaders under the chairmanship of Colonel Henry L. Doherty called upon every community in the land to give a birthday ball in tribute to Mr. Roosevelt and to help create an endowment for extending and intensifying the work of the Warm Springs Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. The nation is responding with unprecedented enthusiasm.

Offer Support In New Movement To Stop 'Fee-Grabbing'

Central Body Is and Always Has Been Against Such Evil.

Chattanooga Trades and Labor council "is now and always has been" opposed to fee-grabbing, a resolution adopted at Monday night's meeting declares, and any sound movement which has for its purpose the elimination of this evil will have the whole-hearted support of labor.

The resolution, reported by the legislative committee, which had been charged with the duty of inquiring into the extent of a local movement recently started, was unanimously adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That this body is now and always has been opposed to fee-grabbing through justice of the peace offices and otherwise;

That we note with interest a movement now on foot to change the system whereby such deplorable practices will be made impossible, and if such movement is based upon sound principles, capable of attaining the desired end, we pledge our wholehearted support to those who are fostering it;

That we recommend to our membership a close study of any plan which may be presented to eliminate such indefensible and undemocratic procedure upon the part of so-called representatives of "justice," to the end that if a real plan for the abolition of the evil is proposed we may be in position to support and battle for its success.

Recovery Act Gave Bill of Freedom to The Coal Diggers

Williams Says NRA Was "Emancipation Proclamation" for Miners of U. S.

Passage of the National Recovery Act was a Godsend to the nation's coal diggers, according to Ben Williams, representative of the United Mine Workers of America, a special guest of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council Monday night.

The miners in a great many sections, Mr. Williams recalled, had been reduced to a state of stark misery by repeated wage cuts and company exploitation through commissaries, company-owned houses and other conditions which constituted a state of slavery for the workers, the only difference being that slaves were usually well fed and housed, while the coal miners were in many cases half-starved, and, strange as it might seem, many were actually cold, lacking the money to buy enough of the very coal they mined to keep them and their families warm.

Conditions of the miners in many localities, Mr. Williams said, were indescribable, and even though a true picture of the situation might be drawn, few people in enlightened America would have believed half the story.

But the NRA came, he said, and with it most remarkable changes. Coal fields where a union organizer would not have dared to enter, and where, should a union man have the temerity to suggest organization he would have "strangely disappeared," are now 100 per cent organized, and representatives of the men are given every consideration by the mine owners. In one southern state, he recalled, a perpetual injunction prohibited mention of the name "United Mine Workers," even in a letter, and anyone even talking of a union would have been jailed, and perhaps would also have "mysteriously disappeared."

But throughout the country today, he said, the flag of the United Mine Workers flies, figuratively, over the coal mines, and the convention of the organization, now in session at Indianapolis, is composed of representatives from "every coal district in the United States."

Conditions in many districts are still bad, he said, but a spirit of co-operation rules almost unanimously, and operators in all sections are meeting with the workers and their representatives in an effort to work out a solution of the coal problems with justice to all concerned.

Mr. Williams' talk was well received by the delegates Monday night. He has spent several years in this territory as a representatives of the national organization, and is always a welcome visitor at local meetings.

CENTRAL BODY SEEKS DATA ON NEW POWER DEAL

Ask Utilities Commission For Details.

HOPE FOR RELIEF FROM HIGH RATES

Declare Schedule in Excess of That in Adjacent Communities.

Up until Friday morning, officials of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council had received no reply from a letter sent Monday to the Tennessee Railroad and Public Utilities Commission seeking information on the recent agreement between the power interests and the TVA, approved by the commission.

The letter, which was read and approved in meeting of Central Body Monday night, expresses concern lest the contract preclude the possibility of securing cheaper power during the next five years. It declares that up until now public comment has been withheld, in the hope that forthcoming explanation would "dispel our fears."

The hope is expressed also that answer to the questions will indicate eventual relief from high rates for electric power.

The communication follows:

Tennessee Railroad and Public Utilities Commission,
Nashville, Tennessee.

Dear Sirs:

The recent contract entered into by the Tennessee Electric Power company and the Tennessee Valley Authority and approved by your august body has been diligently studied with misgiving. Up until now we have withheld public comment, hoping that forthcoming explanations would be made to dispel our fears and thus merit our approval.

Subsequent advertisements by the power company, with its intricate "tables of comparison," "immediate rates," "promotional rates," and beautiful prospects of what the average citizen may save if he only invests money he does not have in additional electrical equipment (which may be purchased from the power company) leaves us more bewildered than ever.

Therefore, in open meeting of the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, we ask of you the answers to the following questions:

1. Why was this contract signed and approved by you without allowing the most people affected thereby to pass their judgment upon it?

2. Why was a five-year contract made if not for the purpose of frustrating public ownership for that length of time?

3. Why was a contract made at higher rates than what is to be enjoyed in adjacent communities?

We hope that these questions will be answered in such a manner as to extend a hope that we may eventually get relief from the high rates that have been imposed upon us even during depression period.

Sincerely,
CHATTANOOGA TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL
By T. R. Cuthbert, Secretary.

Carpenters Adopt New Wage Scale

Local 74, Carpenters, at the regular meeting last week adopted a new scale of wages in accordance with advancing living costs, an officer of the local reported to The Labor World.

The new wage will be $1.10 per hour, it was said, with a maximum work week of thirty-six hours. An open meeting of the local was called for Friday night, at Roosevelt hall, at which it was expected a capacity audience would be present to hear addresses by local labor officials.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Are both employers and workers represented on the national labor board?

A.—The board is composed of an equal number of representatives of employers and employes.

Q.—Should individual workers report violations of labor provisions of NRA codes.

A.—The American Federation of Labor says on this: "Yes. He should report the violation first to his union officers, who should attempt to secure adjustment, first by conferences with the employer and, if that is not successful, by referring the complaint to the governmental agencies set up to secure code compliance."

What Next!

A "light meter," for testing light in offices, schools and homes, is now on the market. It fits in the palm of the hand and is scaled descriptively ("reading fine print, sewing," etc.) as well as in foot candles. Light companies demonstrate good lighting with it and a well known hotel chain is employing it to show the superior lighting of rooms in its hostelries.

CWA CITY ORCHESTRA URGED FOR ROCHESTER

Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 26.—A civil works administration municipal orchestra for Rochester to provide employment at reasonable wages for over 126 unemployed musicians is recommended by Leonard Campbell, president of Local 66, American Federation of Musicians, which sponsors the plan. The proposal which received the support of the local CWA was forwarded to state CWA headquarters in New York City.

Mr. Campbell's plan calls for a concert orchestra, two dance orchestras and a concert band, which would furnish the musicians with about twenty-five hours of work a week and a weekly payroll of $2,422. The orchestra, composed of fifty men and the leader, would give two or three concerts a week in the public schools and also provide a radio broadcast.

The weekly wage scale suggested by the local Musicians' union would give the orchestra leader $30, while his men received $20 each. The band leader would get $25 and his men $18. The two dance orchestra leaders would draw $20 and the musicians $19; $20 would be allowed each week for traveling expenses and a supervisor of music, who will receive $40 for arranging schedules and programs.

A TONIC Laxative

CONSTIPATION, with the annoying symptoms that usually come with it, cuts down organic force and disturbs normal health and well-being. A thorough cleansing of the digestive tract is of great assistance in the removal of sickening constipation symptoms.

When excessive accumulated waste matter disturbs and strains the muscles of the large intestines, rendering them temporarily unable to perform their wave-like evacuating movements, Thedford's Black-Draught is useful in stimulating them to activity, which, again started, should continue regularly until some future disturbance interferes. In this way, Thedford's Black-Draught is one of the TONIC laxatives, tending, as it does, to establish a regular habit of evacuation.

California Collects Back Wages

Those who own and control industry employ workers for the sole purpose of making profit out of their labor. The profit comes from the sale of commodities which the workers produce and the services which the workers render.

It would therefore seem axiomatic that when the commodities are produced and the services rendered the workers should receive promptly all the wages due them.

Evidently this practice is not the rule among cannery owners of California. This is made clear by the report of the division of industrial welfare of the department of industrial relations to the governor's council giving the results of the legal compulsion which the state has used to compel the cannery officials to pay their employes thousands of dollars of back wages. The report says:

"Women and minor workers of the total number of 23,700 in the fruit and vegetable canneries of the state have received $59,978.88 in back wages since July 10. These benefits have been due to the enforcement of the minimum rates set. Every protection is being given the 35,000 women and minors employed in the fruit and vegetable canning industry."

During November, the report points out, the welfare division investigated 198 complaints, made 1,751 plant inspections, audited 149 payrolls, and collected back wages amounting to $10,312.32.

It is apparent that California authorities do not have much faith in the "self-government of industry" (which business leaders claim is their patriotic ideal) when the "self-government" enters the field of industrial relations. At least in the cannery industry the authorities rely on the compulsory power of the state government to wrest from employers back wages running into thousands of dollars a year.

NRA Benefits to Jobless

A sample of the direct benefits of the national industrial recovery act and its sympathetic administration in providing work for the unemployed is well illustrated in the statement by James F. Hodgson, regional compliance director of the national recovery administration for New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, on the job finding results of the NRA in New York City alone. He said:

"Under the influence of all recovery agencies, including repeal of the Volstead act and the Eighteenth amendment, which was a part of the national recovery plan, it is estimated that 600,000 persons have been re-employed in New York City since President Roosevelt took office."

Mr. Hodgson added that President Roosevelt's recovery program "is more forcible and more important now than it has been since it went into effect the first of last August," and declared that although the "band wagon has passed, the Blue Eagle still lives on." From his own observation he was convinced that the national recovery program is going forward effectively and earnestly.

A re-employment policy that in five months can remove 600,000 men and women from the bread lines of hunger and provide them with wages sufficient to purchase even a modest living for themselves and their families is an outstanding achievement from the employment point of view regardless of the attacks by "rugged individualists" who still long for the return of the old economic order with its jungle methods of production and its inevitable permanent unemployment and poverty for large masses of American working men and women.

Maternity Benefits

Over eighty thousand (80,311) Australian mothers were paid 320,986 pounds (about $1,299,993 at the current rate of exchange) maternity benefits during the year ending June 30, 1933, according to the annual report of J. Heathershaw, commissioner of maternity allowances. This is a vivid contrast to the backwardness of legislation providing maternity allowances in the United States. The cost of administering the system for the year was 12,420 pounds (about $50,301). Only 6,631 claims were rejected.

The Australian maternity allowances law was enacted in 1913. The first year 412,375 pounds were paid to 82,475 claimants. The number of mothers receiving the allowances increased to 140,152 in 1921 with 700,760 pounds paid out. From that date there was a gradual shrinkage in claims paid up to 1933, when the 80,311 mothers listed in Mr. Heathershaw's report were awarded 320,986 pounds.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Probably the most patient beast of burden in America today is the motorist. At times one thinks he has the yielding characteristics of a desert camel or the lowly pack-mule of the mountains.

It is this unprotesting motorist who is held captive, pays continuous ransom but never gets freedom from the brigands. He pays ransom in exorbitant taxes every time he buys gasoline or other petroleum products. If he is conscious of his exploitation at all he only knows a part of the story.

He probably doesn't know, for example, that the industry's tax bill now exceeds $1,000,000,000 a year—a colossol burden laid upon the shoulders of those who drive automobiles. He doesn't know that the gas tax alone has grown 7,500 per cent in rate and 6,000 per cent in revenue in fourteen years—a degree of acceleration that must be unprecedented in the annals of taxation.

And this isn't all of it by a long shot. The legislatures aren't satisfied yet. Campaigns are on foot to place new taxes upon already overtaxed wholesale and retail outlets. Whether these proposals fail of realization or not, other campaigns will be instigated, other taxes advocated, new burdens demanded.

When you buy ten gallons of gasoline, you are, on the average, paying 60 cents to the tax collector directly—through the federal and state sales taxes. In some localities you pay appreciably more than this, with the possible addition of a municipal levy. Even then you haven't footed the whole bill. A very substantial percentage of the price of gasoline, not counting the sales tax, represents one or another of the twenty-four taxes the oil industry pays the federal government, the sixty-eight taxes it pays the states, the five paid to county governments, and the nineteen paid to municipalities.

Labor is waging a big fight for restoration of the federal government workers' pay but it faces a determined and powerful opposition which undoubtedly is backed by a large body of public opinion. Labor must make the public see that the government's pay cut policy is inconsistent with its program of raising wages in private employment and that instead of promoting recovery, the pay cut policy is a factor in retarding business gain.

That Nazi Germany's new labor law, wiping out trade unionism in its entirety, and with it the right to strike and bargain collectively, will not be hailed with favor by the rest of the world is pointed out by the Evening Star, Washington, D. C., which says:

"The authors of the law can hardly expect to merit the approval of other countries which long since recognized certain rights of organized labor as fundamental and irrevocable."

Pay Boost Won on Louisiana $17,000,000 Bridge Project

New Orleans, La.—Workers on the big $17,000,000 bridge project here secured a large increase in wages as a result of the strike settlement in which B. C. Pitts, international vice-president of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, was one of the negotiators.

By the agreement the employes landed a general 15 per cent rise in pay for workers on a monthly basis and rates of pay for others ranging from 40 cents an hour for unskilled labor to $1.25 for skilled labor. These rates, which were made retroactive to Aug. 10, are said to be much higher than wages usually paid in Louisiana.

I. T. U. Head Sees NRA of No Help To Skilled Men in Printing Trade

Workers Must Rely Upon Organization, as Heretofore, President Howard Says—His Blast Gives Point to Chicago Story of How Two Colonels Captured One General.

Chicago, Jan. 26.—Apropos of the blast given to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson by Charles P. Howard, president of the International Typographical union, in the January issue of the Typographical Journal, is a story going the rounds in high political circles in Chicago.

Mr. Howard severely censures Gen. Johnson for procrastination and failure to provide adequate codes for the daily newspapers and the job printing industry. Mr. Howard charges that the daily newspaper publishers have Gen. Johnson bluffed, and advises the members of the International Typographical union that they will have to rely on their organization for results, just as they have done for the last 100 years.

The story going the rounds here tells how two colonels captured one general. It has reference to the time Gen. Johnson made his famous "dead cats" speech in Chicago a few weeks ago.

It is alleged that Col. Robert R. McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Daily Tribune, and Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, captured Gen. Johnson while he was in Chicago and "talked turkey" to him in a room at the Drake hotel.

This is given as an explanation of the "cease firing" order from the proponents of the "freedom of the press" campaign. It is alleged that the two colonels are now smiling like the cat that ate the canary.

Frank Knox was touted for the chairmanship of the republican national committee a few weeks ago. The latest story is to the effect that he aspires to be the republican nominee for president of the United States in 1936.

Indianapolis, Ind.—In a sizzling criticism of national recovery act administration policy toward skilled trades, President Charles P. Howard, of the International Typographical union, declares that events in Washington compel the conclusion that "the force of organization of skilled tradesmen is to be in the future, as it has been in the past, their only protection."

"It is plain," President Howard continues, "that the theory of the national industrial recovery act, which was to reduce hours of work and increase the rate of wages so as to maintain purchasing power and spread employment, is not to be applied to the printing industry.

"One thing is absolutely certain, and that is that the law adopted anticipates complete organization of industry and that the law encourages and expects all labor to organize and bargain collectively. We have been doing this for over a hundred years without leaning on the government for assistance, and will continue to do so."

26 Breweries in Four States Sign Agreement for Union Shop

Seattle, Wash., Jan. 26.—Organized labor won a victory of which it may well be proud when a union shop agreement was made between the Pacific Northwest Brewers' association, representing all breweries in Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana and the representatives of the national and international unions concerned.

O. W. Carter, international representative of the Steam and Operating Engineers, declared that all crafts, including the brewery workers who are concerned in the manufacture and distribution of beer, are taken care of in the contract. The breweries agree to abide by the jurisdictional awards decreed by the American Federation of Labor conventions, including those made at the 1933 convention. They also agree to have all building and repairs done by members of organized labor.

With regard to wages, the agreement prescribes that the prevailing union wage scales of the unions having jurisdiction in specific territories shall govern all breweries which are a party to the agreement. In return the unions agree to authorize the use of a suitable label to certify that the breweries' products are 100 per cent union.

Relative to the settlement of the controversies the contract declares:

"Any grievance which may arise over the interpretation of any of the provisions of this agreement or matters not covered by this agreement shall be adjusted by the foreman and workman directly involved, if possible.

"Failing this, the matter shall be taken up with the management of the brewery by the representative of the union involved and if unable to reach an adjustment shall be referred to a conference committee made up of three representatives from the association and three from the unions.

"If the members of the conference committee deadlock, they shall name a seventh member, not associated with either group, to act upon the points at issue.

"The conference committee shall render its decision within ten days from the date of receiving such case, and its decision shall be final and binding upon all parties. There shall be no cessation of work pending such decision."

The agreement expires on April 5, 1935, and continues thereafter until either party to it shall give the other thirty days written notice of a desire to have it changed, during which period conferences shall be held for the purpose of reaching an amicable agreement. There is the proviso, however, that the contract may be opened at any time by either party giving the other thirty days written notice for the sole purpose of adjusting hours or wages or both.

Edwin F. Theis, B. Hockstadter and J. C. Donnelly signed the contract for the Pacific Northwest Brewers' association.

Dave Beck, F. W. Brewster, O. W. Carter, Bert Swain, C. W. Doyle, James A. Duncan, Paul Frederickson and Rowland Watson signed the contract for the unions.

If no couple really got married until they were actually prepared financially for the responsibilities of wedlock, 95 per cent of the couples who are pairing off to mate would have to change their plans and remain single.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

Green Denounces Nazi Labor Code As Enslavement

Condemning Hitler's Decree, A. F. of L. Head Declares It Fully Justifies American Labor's Boycott of German Goods.

Washington, Jan. 26.—Germany's new Nazi labor code, under which trade unions are abolished and strikes and collective bargaining outlawed, was declared the "finish touch" in reducing German labor to servitude, in a statement by President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor. He denounced the code as meaning "enslavement and autocratic control" for the German workers.

"The new decree," said Mr. Green, "abolishes all the rights and privileges upon which the organized labor movement of Germany rested. It completely annihilates labor unions, prohibits strikes, does away with collective bargaining and the right to organize. This is the finishing touch applied to the general position of Chancellor Hitler in reducing those who belonged to trade unions to a condition of servitude and in the complete destruction of the German trade union movement as initiated when the officers of the German trade unions were arrested and imprisoned, the funds confiscated and the offices raided.

"The new labor setup for the German workers provides for a system of shop councils which will function under the supervision of governmental labor trustees but which within minimum provisions will permit the employer to fix wages and working conditions although the workers may appeal to the state. It further provides that the employer shall serve as chairman of the shop council, which shall be composed of selected nationally reliable employes more than 25 years old. It further provides that the trustees may impose fines and prison terms and the court much beyond that also depose a leader and discharge a follower.

"A mere reference to these dictatorial provisions is shocking to the sense of justice and a comprehension of the enjoyment of democratic rights and privileges held by American workers.

"The cruel treatment accorded the German workers as set forth in the code justifies the position taken by the American Federation of Labor when it declared in favor of a boycott of German manufactured goods and German service until the German government recognizes the right of the working people of Germany to organize into bona fide, independent trade unions of their own choosing, and until Germany ceases its repressive policy of persecution of Jewish people.

"In addition to this definite action taken the American Federation of Labor voices its solemn protest against the inhuman treatment which has been imposed upon the working people of Germany."

E. J. Tracy Takes Position With NRA

Washington.—Edward J. Tracy, for a number of years acting director of the American Federation of Labor legal reference bureau, accepted a position with the national recovery administration as the assistant to Edward F. McGrady, assistant administrator for labor. Mr. McGrady was formerly a member of the legislative committee of the A. F. of L.

A graduate of Georgetown University Law school and a member of the District of Columbia bar, Mr. Tracy's knowledge of labor law and court decisions affecting the workers, combined with his thorough familiarity with the labor movement, make him a valuable asset to the NRA.

Atlanta Electrical Workers Win Union Rights from Power Company

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 25.—In an agreement with the Georgia Power company organized labor here ended the strike of the electrical workers which occurred in 1931, and secured a number of union rights for the employes. Under the terms of the settlement about 1,200 workers became eligible to affiliate with trade unions.

The unions were represented by T. L. Elder, business agent of Local Union No. 84, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers of America; A. S. Nance, president of the Atlanta Federation of Trades; J. Sid Tiller, president of the Georgia Federation of Labor, and G. X. Barker, international vice-president of the Electrical Workers. The company was represented by P. S. Arkwright, president, and W. E. Mitchell, vice-president and general manager.

Under the terms of the agreement the employes have the right to join a union with the following provision for union recognition:

"Whenever the union represents in its membership a majority of the company employes eligible for membership in the union, then the company and the union will negotiate for a contract covering wages, hours and conditions of work."

The agreement also provides that no discrimination shall be practiced for or against any employe on account of his membership or non-membership in the union and that "as vacancies occur in the future or as additional employes are taken on in the electrical department, other former employes of the company who went out on strike will be offered re-employment by the company."

VETERANS ASSOCIATION ADOPTS UNION LABEL

New York.—The national executive committee of the National War Veterans association, with headquarters in New York City, made the use of the union label mandatory on all printed matter of the organization, declared Harry E. Dewdney, adjutant of the association. The last national convention of the association adopted the following article as a part of its constitution: "Neither the organization, nor any of its subordinates shall at any time participate in a strike or lockout against labor."

The association is a non-partisan veterans' political organization with thirty-one posts here and membership extending into other states. All members must be honorably discharged veterans and voting citizens of the United States.

Whose Bill is Seldom Over $1

All customers benefit from the new Residence Electric Rates. They get more for their money than ever before.

Let us show you how these rates will benefit you. Just phone or stop in at our nearest office.

MRS. SMITH: "I'm not much interested in electric rates. We use so little electricity in our home . . . just a few lights and a little ironing. Now and then our bill runs over $1.00 . . . but we are very particular and try to keep it at the minimum most of the time."

Power Co. Representative: "You will be interested to know, then, that your dollar will buy better than a third more electricity than you've been getting. From now on you may use 15 kilowatt-hours instead of 11 . . . and still pay only $1.00 a month."

Mrs. Smith: "That sounds interesting. But I never did understand about kilowatt-hours. Tell me what I can do with the extra kilowatt-hours."

Power Co. Representative: "For one thing, you could use your lighting more than you have been doing."

Mrs. Smith: "Mr. Smith would like that."

Power Co. Representative: "I'm sure he would. Here's another thing you might do that you and your family would benefit from . . . change some of the light bulbs you are now using to a larger size. You will find the 60-watt bulb gives a more satisfactory light for reading or sewing . . . while the smaller bulbs used for these purposes cause, in many cases, eye-strain and headaches. You can change some of your lamps to the 60-watt size without increasing your light bill now, Mrs. Smith, and the cost of the bulbs is the same, too."

Mrs. Smith: "I'm glad to hear that. I believe I'll try some of those 60-watt bulbs."

Power Co. Representative: "And here's another way you could use up these extra kilowatt-hours for your $1.00 a month. You could add a Toaster—or a Waffle Iron . . . or some other small appliance. For instance a Toaster, used 15 minutes each morning, will consume only about 4 kilowatt-hours in a whole month's time."

Mrs. Smith: "Then, as I understand these new electric rates, I can use more lighting at no extra cost . . . or add some small appliance. Is that right?

Power Co. Representative: "That's it, and of course the sooner you begin using your extra kilowatt-hours, the sooner you begin getting what you're entitled to under the new rates. And remember, too, Mrs. Smith, in the event that your bill should run over the $1.00 minimum, the additional electricity you use will come to you at the unusually low price of 4½c a kilowatt-hour, as compared with 8½c heretofore—just about half the former cost. I'm sure you'll agree with me that electricity is now being sold to you at bargain prices, and you should use it to the fullest advantage."

We will be glad to have one of our Home Lighting Specialists call at your home and assist you in improving your lighting. This service is free.

It's so awfully simple to demand UNION GOODS and SERVICE that it is simply awful more trade unionists do not do this important thing.

POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT SCRAPS WELFARE MOVEMENT

Washington, Jan. 26.—The service relations council of the postoffice department, the last remnant of the "goodwill era" of Postmaster-General Will Hays, is to be banished from the department in the interest of some $7,000 a year saving.

"Deacon" Hays succeeded the redoubtable Albert Sidney Burleson as postmaster-general. During the latter's term the postal employes, despite the popularity of President Wilson, were in open war against the department because of the tactlessly brutal personnel policies of the postal administration.

The "deacon" conceived the obvious idea that a direct rightabout face was the only solution. He instituted the service relations council as a laison agency between the employes and the department. The unions of postal workers were invited to and did participate. This organization was continued through succeeding administrations. It has devoted itself to the promotion of credit unions, to advice and co-operation with respect to co-operative cafeterias, to sanitation and health, etc., with good results.

Local councils have been established in each office composed of representatives of the different classes of employes.

Practically the total expense was the salary of the national director and his stenographer.

Now it appears that this movement, innocuous and inexpensive as it is, but a long established and cherished symbol of good will between the employes and the department, is to be mown down by the sweep of the economy scythe.

According to the postmaster-general's report, something like eighty million dollars of economy in operation last year was at the expense of wages, salaries and jobs. At the same time subsidies were increased by three millions to the handsome sum of about forty-five and one-quarter millions.

It is rumored that further economies are contemplated next year along administrative lines which will still further encroach on the slender incomes and privileges of the employes.

Just how this can be made to "gee-up" with the NRA program which insists, even threatens to force employers to increase wages, shorten hours and otherwise humanize industry is hard to see. The private employer who receives a mandate to follow the flight of the Blue Eagle and refused to fly will be justified in claiming that he has simply crawled up on the same perch with Uncle Sam, the biggest employer in the world.

Pennsylvania R. R. Gets Loan of $77,000,000

Government Advances Huge Fund for Electrification and Equipment—45,000,000 Man-Hours of Direct Employment in 1934 Visioned.

Washington.—The public works administration loaned $77,000,000 to the officials of the Pennsylvania railroad. The contracts were signed by Secretary of the Interior Ickes, who is also public works administrator.

It was explained that $45,000,000 of the $77,000,000 will be used in completing the electrification of the Pennsylvania between Wilmington, Del., and Washington, and $32,000,000 for building 7,000 new freight cars and 100 electric locomotives, supplying what the statisictians call more than "45,000,000 man-hours" of direct employment in 1934.

"The estimate of 45,000,000 man-hours of employment," Secretary Ickes said, "includes only the work to be done by the employes of the Pennsylvania railroad and by the employes of manufacturers and fabricators of material. It does not take into account the great amount of indirect and industrial employment that will be created by producing, processing and transporting raw materials, for no accurate estimate of that can be made.

"Work can begin immediately, for the Pennsylvania has plans and schedules of work prepared on a job that is partially completed and which it was compelled to suspend because of economic conditions."

Wages and hours of work for the Pennsylvania's own employes will comply with the provisions of the railway labor act, while wages to be paid by outside contractors will be governed by NRA codes.

The government charges the railroad company 4 per cent interest on the loan, beginning with the second year. The banks refused to make the loan.

72-Hour Week Imposed On Hospital Employes

Pueblo, Colo.—A scathing protest against the unreasonably long hours of employment imposed upon them was adopted by the Colorado State Hospital Employes union, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, in a resolution demanding relief from the state legislature. It was declared that nearly all the 300 state hospital employes are required to perform an average in excess of 72 hours duty each week.

The resolution asked the legislature to remedy the long hours "without impairment of the present wage schedules," and urged that an investigation be made to "compare hours of service required of the state employes with those of commercial and manufacturing establishments whose hours are either fixed by statute or governed by codes assigned to their respective classes through the national recovery act." The union expressed the opinion that the legislature could reduce the length of the work week at this time without jeopardising the state's finances.

N. Y. SCHOOL TEACHERS OPPOSE SLASH IN SALARY

New York, Jan. 26.—Over 400 school teachers marched to the mayor's office here and protested against the proposed pay reductions or payless furloughs. The teachers camped in the City Hall park from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until dark. One of the banners carried by them said: "Is a pledge to city employes less sacred than an agreement with the city's bankers?"

Mayor La Guardia talked with Dr. Abraham Leftkowitz, legislative representative of the Teachers' union; Albert L. Smallheiser, acting president of the union, and Miss Sara Garrett. He said he had asked for power to cut salaries because it might prove necessary to balance the budget, but added that teachers' pay would only be reduced as a last resort.

The teachers left their plan to balance the budget without salary cuts with the mayor. The plan provides for a lower interest rate, abolition of tax exemption loans on real estate, increased revenue from the state taxes and other methods by which the city would increase its revenues.

ALABAMA SCHOOLS BEGIN CLOSING

Montgomery, Ala., Jan. 26.—With the closing of schools in Montgomery county, closing of schools throughout Alabama is in sight by March 4. Nothing can stop such a step except immediate financial help, Dr. A. F. Harmen, superintendent of education, announced.

Closing of Montgomery county's schools affect 20,000 school children and teachers.

Hawes-Cooper Act Becomes Law; Green Cites Benefits to Labor

Washington, Jan. 26.—The Hawes-Cooper act, which gives every state the power to forbid the sale, within its borders, of convict-made goods from other states, went into effect today. In celebration of the event, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, issued a statement describing the major provisions of this important labor measure and briefly reviewing the work of the A. F. of L. in securing the enactment of the law.

"The Hawes-Cooper measure is an enabling act," he said. "It provides that all convict-made goods shipped into a state for sale or exchange come under the laws of that state the same as if manufactured therein.

"Seventeen states have taken advantage of this law and from now on no convict-made products can be shipped into them lawfully. These states are: Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Massachusetts, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, Wyoming.

"The American Federation of Labor has been workinfi faithfully since its first convention in 1881 to eliminate convict labor in competition with free labor. In the platform adopted that year was the demand that all laws permitting prison contract labor be repealed. State legislatures were urged to pass laws providing that the convicts should prodlce exclusively for the institutions of the state and its subdivisions.

"Nearly every year certain gains were made in various states. Twenty-eight years ago congress was asked to pass a bill similar to the Hawes-Cooper act but it was not until December, 1928, that congress by a very large vote passed the Hawes-Cooper bill, which was signed by the president.

"I desire to urge the state federations of labor, city central bodies and local unions in the states that have not yet taken advantage of the Hawes-Cooper act to use every means to bring about this desirable legislation."

COAL OPERATORS ACCUSED OF VIOLATING NRA CODE

Kansas City, Mo.—Charges of violating the price schedule of the NRA fair competition code for the coal industry were filed in the federal court here by W. L. Vandeventer, United States district attorney, against J. S. Moore and his son, S. Mooro, mine operators of Putnam county, Missouri.

One count charged the Moores with selling coal at a mine near Unionville at $1.87 a ton instead of $2.50 a ton, which is the price set for the mine under the code.

Mr. Vandeventer said the penalty for violation of the code is a jail sentence of not to exceed six months or a fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

MILL BARONS AGAIN IGNORE LABOR BOARD

Harriman Owners Maintain Arrogant Stand.

STRIKERS REMAIN IN ROANE BASTILE

Gov. McAlister Asked to Intervene in Bad Textile Situation.

Negotiations carried on in national labor board offices to end a strike at the Harriman Hosiery mills and to secure release of seventy-five workers jailed for violating an injunction, broke down when company officials returned to Tennessee, refusing to sign the proposed agreement. The Harriman company has gained notoriety by its defiance of the NRA and the open warfare it has carried on against organization of its employes. A few weeks ago it secured a drastic injunction against the strikers.

The agreement provided that the company would do all in its power to release the imprisoned workers and dismiss the injunction bill seven days after strike settlement; that strikers would be taken back to work on the basis of seniority when work increased, those not being absorbed to be put on a preference list; and that the company "reserves the right to select, promote, and discharge employes on the basis of merit," but without discrimination as to union membership.

Representing the employes were Fred G. Held, organizer for the United Textile Workers; W. M. Hannah, counsel; G. E. Brewer, shop chairman; Edna L. Gossage, recording secretary; R. L. Gossage, financial secretary; Floyd Johnston, attorney and vice-president, and Tom Tarwater, treasurer of the Harriman mill, represented the employers.

Wholesale arrests of workers were reported to the board by Hannah, who said seventy-five were jailed without bond for violating an injunction secured against the strikers. Representatives of the workers told the board that the injunction was one of the most stringent of its kind and would permit arrest of two people even talking or laughing together.

Harriman workers went out on a strike Oct. 26, over discharge of about thirty employes who were officers and committeemen of the newly organized local of the United Textile Workers. Various attempts at mediation were made by the United States department of labor and the Atlanta regional labor board, the latter's offer of arbitration being turned down by the company.

Akron Projectionists Are 100% Organized

Akron, O.—John A. Shuff, business representative of Akron Projectionists' Union No. 364, reports that all of the thirty-four moving picture theaters in the greater Akron area employ union projectionists. A campaign for the achievement of this 100 per cent organization started last February when only fourteen of the theaters had contracts with the union. Since that time, with the assistance of organized labor generally, the remaining twenty theaters have been signed up.

Georgia Projects Violate CWA Wage Rate, Is Charge

Augusta, Ga.—Trade union officials are charged that those in control of civil works administration projects in Aiken county are employing carpenters at 40 cents per hour, contrary to the specific regulations providing a wage scale of $1 per hour for skilled craftsmen. Following the failure of those in charge of the projects to adjust the matter, officials of the building trades unions forwarded their complaint to Harry L. Hopkins, civil works administrator, in Washington.

WHERE LABOR JOINED TO CELEBRATE PRESIDENT'S BIRTHDAY

Map shows where organized labor held Birthday Balls for the president or co-operated with other organizations in holding a ball. The balls were held to honor the president's birthday and raise funds for the extension of the work of the Warm Springs Foundation for infantile paralysis. The great nation-wide celebration was held under the direction of a national committee headed by Col. Henry L. Doherty. William Green was chairman of the labor division of the committee, and Matthew Woll secretary and treasurer. Chester M. Wright was chairman of organization of the labor division and chairman of the labor press committee.

Federal Legislation Outlawing Company Union Sought by A. F. of L.

Labor Conference at Washington Also Demands Law Giving National Labor Board Mandate to Hold Elections for Collective Bargaining Representatives.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The American Federation of Labor conference of representatives of the affiliated national and international unions laid the ground work for a militant and concerted attack upon the company unions by the adoption of a strong program for amending the national recovery act during the present session of congress.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, explained the proposed amendments before Senator Robert F. Wagner, chairman of the national labor board and author of the original recovery act. The proposals, which received the hearty support of the New York senator, are as follows:

1. Corporations are to be prohibited by law from forming, fostering and financing company unions, preparing their constitutions and guiding and directing their activities.

2. The national labor board would receive power to subpoena witnesses, swear them under oath and examine the books and financial records of concerns whose cases are under consideration.

3. The labor board would receive mandatory power to hold elections where these are requested by employes or where the board feels that such elections are necessary to determine who shall represent the men for collective bargaining.

4. Labor should have representation on all boards and code authorities.

5. Adequate protection is to be afforded to all workers who organize into unions so that they shall be free from discharge, lockout and intimidation.

In support of the proposed recovery act amendment to make it illegal for a corporation to finance further and promote a company union, Mr. Green pointed to the recent ruling of the federal co-ordinator, Joseph B. Eastman, who banned company-fostered unions on the railroads.

Roosevelt Orders 15 Per Cent Pay Cut For Federal Workers Continued to July

Washington.—President Roosevelt signed an executive order continuing the 15 per cent pay reduction in the compensation of federal employes until June 30, 1934.

The White House stated that two sets of findings on comparative costs of living submitted by Frances Perkins, secretary of labor, did not justify any slash in the 15 per cent reduction imposed on over half a million government workers by the economy law enacted by the last congress.

The first set of findings, based on the cost of living for families of wage-earners and lower salaried workers in thirty-two cities gathered throughout the United States, revealed that the average cost of living for these groups, during the last half of 1933, was 21.1 per cent below the average of the base period of December, 1927, to June, 1928.

In this set the decline in the cost of living in the District of Columbia for similar families was 17.9 per cent.

The second set of findings resulted from a special study of the cost of living of government employes in the district and was made during the past three months by the labor department.

These findings showed a decline in the cost of living of 14.6 per cent.

"Because the law provides for index figures covering all parts of the country," the White House stated, "it is necessary to continue the present scale until June 30, 1934."

In stating the president's action, a White House official called attention to the fact that under the president's budgetary recommendation, the general pay cut will be reduced 5 per cent on July 1, so that for the next fiscal year unless other legislation by congress intervenes the government workers will endure a 10 per cent wage reduction compared with their remuneration before the economy act was passed.

San Antonio Gas Workers Win Union Shop and Pay Increase

San Antonio, Tex.—Officials of the recently organized Gas Workers' union here negotiated a contract with the San Antonio Public Service company which accords recognition of the union and gives a pay increase, in some instances as much as $2 per day, affecting about 50 per cent of its members, all of whom are in the employ of the company.

The union has the gas works employes very nearly 100 per cent organized. Out of 81 workers eligible for union membership, 78 carry union cards.

Men are such poor managers they don't know how to run anything except the country.

Hearst Makes Labored Attempt To Justify Policy Toward NRA

Publisher Issues 40-Page Pamphlet in Endeavor to Get Himself Out of Bad Situation Created by Two-Faced Stand — Big Newspaper Heads Fear Congressional Investigation.

By JOSEPH A. WISE

Chicago, Feb. 1.—William Randolph Hearst, publisher of a nation-wide chain of daily newspapers, two of which are in Chicago, has resorted to the extraordinary expedient of publishing a 40-page pamphlet in order to extricate himself from the bad situation created by his two-timing policy in reference to the national industrial recovery act.

Hearst's effort in the ancient role of pamphleteer is entitled "William Randolph Hearst's Views on NRA and Freedom of the Press." The pamphlet has been widely circulated gratis in Chicago and presumably other parts of the company have been as generously treated.

"Stinger" in Pamphlet.

The pamphlet is made up of a hodge-podge of glittering generalities, evasions, contradictions and sophistries previously published in the Hearst newspapers in his efforts to play both ends against the middle in reference to national industrial recovery, displaying Hearst at his best (or worst) as a special pleader for the vested interests.

There is a "stinger" in the very last paragraph of the pamphlet. Hearst adroitly suggests that if the administrators of the codes will just go easy and accept his advice, why everything will be hotsy-totsy and altogether jake.

Back of Hearst's labored efforts to vindicate himself is a fear, shared by other daily newspaper publishers who have been two-timing the public, that there may be a congressional investigation that will show them up in their true colors.

Press Inquiry Favored.

There is a rising tide of sentiment among well-informed, intelligent people in the middle west that there should be a thorough investigation of the ownership, control and interlocking connections of metropolitan daily newspapers, national magazines, the radio and telegraph and telephone lines as means of public information and communication.

A Chicagoan with a national reputation as a fighter for the common good suggested to International Labor News Service that Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, would be an ideal man for chairman of a senate committee designated to conduct such an investigation.

Let Cat Out of Bag.

Robert R. McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Daily Tribune, let the cat out of the bag during his continental barnstorming speechmaking tour in behalf of what he was pleased to term the "freedom of the press." In one of his speeches McCormick expressed fear of what the politicians would do to the daily newspapers if the latter were ever placed under codes. What he did not say was that he was fearful that his secret interlocking connections might be brought to light, and also that he might be compelled to grant reasonable hours of work to his employes, which is not the case now, notwithstanding his recent vociferous editorial claims of his great generosity in this respect.

The Three Dromios of Chicago journalism—Col. Birdie McCormick, of the Tribune; Col. Willie Didmore Hearst, of the American and Herald and Examiner, and Col. Frankie Knox, of the Daily News—are on all fours in respect to the national industrial recovery act. They would just love it if they were permitted to dictate its administration—maybe and perhaps.

These three remind one, too, of the Three Little Pigs. They envision the Big Bad Wolf as a composite of the NRA and organized labor. One and all they are strong for "good unions" and against "bad unions." Hearst emphasizes this point in his pamphlet, and he leaves the reader in doubt as to whether he ever has had any dealings with a "good union" during his forty years as a publisher.

OHIO CWA TO FAVOR UNION LABOR

Columbus, O.—Union labor will receive preference in replacements for civil works administration jobs, Adjt.-Gen. Frank D. Henderson, chairman of the Ohio CWA, said in announcing the policy of the administration. He declared it was the policy of the civil works administration "that whenever possible the personnel needed for replacement of workers on CWA projects shall be secured through recognised union locals where such exist in such numbers as will be just and fair."

Old Lady—Why is it you are always begging?

'Home Stores' Again Are Discussed Before Compliance Board

Local Milk Dealers Complain of Alleged Unfair Practices by "Individualist."

Cuthbert Suggests Bottle of Milk Can Be Seen But Peck of Potatoes Is Something Else—McDonald's "Ethics" Again Recalled for Labor World Readers.

Roy McDonald and his so-called "Home Stores" were again the subject of discussion before the local NRA compliance board this week. This time the board was told of McDonald's alleged unfair practices in the sale of milk. Dairy owners charged before the board that McDonald used milk as a "bait" for customers, by selling the product below cost, thereby demoralizing the market.

T. R. Cuthbert, secretary of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, suggested to the board that

You can look at a bottle of milk and tell whether or not it is full, but you can't look at a peck of potatoes and tell whether or not there is a full peck.

McDonald's business "ethics" have from time to time been a subject for discussion among his competitors, which include, besides retail grocers, dairymen, bakers, tire dealers, etc.

The so-called "Home Stores" have been represented at compliance board sessions before, it is recalled, McDonald having "sold" his stores to his stores to his managers when the code went into effect, carrying out, as he said, "a dream of years," which, fortunately, was realized just at a time when it would save his company the necessity of paying the managers, as executives, $35 per week.

The so-called "Don Cherry Tire company" was some time ago declared unfair to organized labor, on the belief that the concern is an affiliate of McDonald's various other enterprises, and because advertisements for the concern, which sells General tires, continued to appear in the Home Stores throw sheet.

Working people in the Chattanooga territory will be in position to sympathize with the claims of the milk producers and distributors, having themselves had experience with the grocery chain management.

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

Topeka Electrical Workers Seek Injunction Against Company Union

Topeka, Kan., Feb. 1.—W. B. Petty, representative here of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, filed suit in the district court for an injunction to prevent the completion of two so-called employes organizations and to bar the Kansas Power and Light company from closing a contract with such organizations.

The petition specifies the "Utility Operators association" and the "Utility Operators Benefit association" as the organizations, charges that they are formed with the intention of thwarting the purposes of the national recovery act and claims that the Kansas Power and Light company has used coercion to secure the signatures of employes.

The petition for the injunction alleges that the two organizations purpose to enter into contract with the company to furnish all labor for that firm for 12 per cent of the operating revenue, subject to seasonal variations. The electrical workers claim this is much below a fair percentage for the payment of employes, that the employes would be working for the employes organizations instead of for the Kansas Power and Light company, and that this would place the employes in the position of being individual contractors.

Members of a number of organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor are employed by the Kansas Power and Light company. Officials of the Electrical Workers union said that the application for the injunction was taken to protect the interests of these workers as well as the unorganized employes.

Deane Ackers, vice-president of the power and light company, said the company had nothing whatever to do with the formation of the employes organizations mentioned in the injunction petition. On the other hand, Mr. Petty and other officials of the Electrical Workers' union declare that when a large part of the employes did not warm up to the plans for the new organization, an agent of the company called on them and said that if they expected to hold their jobs with the company they had better become members of the new groups.

Union Gains Recorded In Rock Island, Ill.

Rock Island, Ill.—Officials of the Tri-City Federation of Labor here, covering the cities of Rock Island and Moline, Ill., and Davenport, Ia., report a large amount of progress for working men and women during the past year. Many new unions have been organized, the Musicians' union recently reaffiliated with the federation, three co-operative leagues have been established and many controversies adjusted in the interest of the workers.

Through the efforts of the Davenport Co-operative league men who were re-laying brick on civil works administration projects had their pay increased from 50 to 60 cents per hour. The Co-operative league is sponsored by the organized labor movement and has over two thousand members.

In general the officials declared that there is now more activity of action and real co-operation among the unions affiliated with the Tri-City federation than ever before in its history.

NEW YORK FACTORY EMPLOYMENT DROPS

Albany, N. Y.—Employment in New York state factories declined 1.7 per cent from the middle of November to the middle of December, Industrial Commissioner Elmer F. Andrews reports. Total factory payrolls dropped approximately 1 per cent during the same period. These decreases lowered the state labor department's index numbers, based on the three years 1925-1928 as 100, to 66.2 for employment and 51.3 for payrolls. In comparison with a year ago, though, the number of persons working in the state's factories and the total amount of wage payments were, respectively, 15.9 per cent and 20.4 per cent greater. These statements are based upon reports from 1,610 representative factories located in various parts of the state.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—What is the name of the new co-operative apartment development of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers in Philadelphia?

A.—Carl Mackley Houses, named after a young knitter who was shot and killed in the 1930 Philadelphia textile strike.

Q.—Who invented the phrase, "collective bargaining?"

A.—Sidney and Beatrice Webb, British writers and trade unionists, who are credited with having first used the phrase in 1891. The Webbs defined collective bargaining as "negotiations between employers and work people when the work people act in concert and the employer meets a collective will."

What Next!

Screw nails, called the "most radical change in nails since cut nails gave way to wire nails in the 1880's," are now being made by a Cleveland concern. The nail turns as it drives and is made in all sizes and types of square stock twisted to make the thread. Their use permits smaller nails, lighter construction.

Wisdom

New Orleans.—In February or March of 1935 the main telephone exchange is to become a dial office, needing only about eighty-six telephone operators instead of the 186 now necessary.

SICK HEADACHE
Many cases of SICK HEADACHE are due to constipation. If you have headache that is due to constipation, take Thedford's BLACK-DRAUGHT for refreshing relief.

"I have taken BLACK-DRAUGHT, when needed, for about 15 years," writes Mr. J. W. Cooper, of Longview, Texas. "I first began to use it for sick headache that seemed to come from constipation.

"I would suffer about twenty-four hours with these headaches. I found out that BLACK-DRAUGHT would help me, so that is what I took. I am glad to recommend it to others, for this trouble, for it will give relief."

Thedford's BLACK-DRAUGHT is a purely vegetable laxative, preferred by thousands of men and women because it is so effective and economical.

For CHILDREN, get the new, pleasant-tasting SYRUP of Thedford's Black-Draught, in 25¢ & 50¢ bottles.

Fascism Still a Menace

Fascist propaganda in the United States, frequently exposed in the past, is still going on, though more quietly than in the earlier years of Mussolini's rule. Recent action of a group of Washington, D. C., anti-fascists, headed by Charles Edward Russell, noted author and journalist, again puts the spotlight on facist activities here.

The Washington group asked the state department to take steps to deport Piero Parini, formerly head of the department of propaganda under the Mussolini dictatorship, who is now in this country. The group charged that Parini, while ostensibly here on personal business, is really here to further the same doctrines in the United States that he has industriously promoted at home. These doctrines include the allegiance to the Mussolini government of Americans of Italian birth.

Organized labor should keep in mind that under Mussolini, trade unionism has been as effectually destroyed in Italy as it has been under the Hitler brand of fascism in Germany. Fascism is utterly opposed to everything that American democracy and trade unionism stands for and is a deadly menace to both wherever it gains power.

A Dangerous Precedent

It is good news that the "suspicious person" ordinance of Pittsburgh, Pa., is virtually dead. The police, it is reported, have been ordered to arrest no more persons on that charge and foes of the ordinance are waging a vigorous campaign for its repeal.

The ordinance makes those who may be "suspicious persons who can give no reasonable account of themselves" guilty of a crime for which they may be fined not to exceed $50, for the first offense, not to exceed $100 for the second offense, or imprisoned for not to exceed thirty days for failure to pay the fine. Ordinance's loose phrasing gives unlimited power to policemen and magistrates.

Pittsburgh is said to be the only city in the country with a "suspicious person" ordinance. Many states and municipalities, however, have broad "disorderly conduct" statutes that lend themselves to dangerous abuses. In New Jersey, there is a law permitting the police to arrest persons having "no legitimate business" or being unable to "give a good account of his presence." This is capable of leading to all abuses and violations of the rights of citizens. Such ordinances have no place in a free country.

Preventing Mine Accidents

Beyond question, the national recovery act has been of immense benefit to the wage-earners of America. This fact, however, should not blind the workers to faults and weaknesses both in the act and in its administration.

These faults and weaknesses are fully recognized by organized labor, which is earnestly seeking remedial action. At the recent conference of representatives of national and international unions at Washington, strong dissatisfaction was voiced at the operation and administration of the NRA. It was clearly revealed that labor sees plainly the imperfections of the act. This is a guarantee that it will act to bring application of the proper remedies.

It Pays to Kick

The Hotel and Restaurant Employes and Beverage Dispensers' International Alliance has just shown that it pays to kick and kick hard. The union has waged a vigorous fight against the restaurant industry code, which was undoubtedly one of the worst of the codes as regards hours and wages.

As a result of the union's uncompromising opposition, it is announced that the code is to be rewritten. This means that probably it will be considerably improved from labor's standpoint.

The union was joined in its opposition to the code by the NRA labor advisory board and Secretary of Labor Perkins, who backed up its protest in effective manner. For this the board and Secretary Perkins deserve the thanks of workers generally, since a bad code in any one industry is a threat to good conditions in all.

Remedying NRA Faults

The year 1933 was a period of encouraging progress in prevention of accidents to men employed in the coal mines of the United States, according to Scott Turner, director of the United States bureau of mines. The loss of life from accidents in coal mines last year was smaller than in any other year since 1898. This fact, however, said Mr. Turner, would not necessarily indicate progress in safety, because a reduction in the number of deaths from accidents might readily be due to no reason other than that a large number of mines were idle.

However, the smaller loss in 1933 represented a real saving of lives and indicated actual progress in the prevention of accidents, because the number of men killed was reduced approximately 11 per cent while the production of coal in the United States was, according to present estimates, 5 per cent higher than the output in 1932; this insures a lower fatality-rate in 1933 than in 1932, and the coal-mine fatality-rate in 1932 was one of the lowest in the history of coal mining in the United States.

Complete and final reports for 1932 showed a death rate of 3.36 per million tons of coal mined. Pending the receipt of complete information for 1933, the rate for 1933 is estimated at 2.83. Final reports are not expected to change this estimate materially.

National Labor Board's Influence In Settling Disputes Emphasized

Washington.—The important work of the national labor board in adjusting industrial disputes arising under codes of fair competition set up under the national industrial recovery act was stressed in a report on the first six months' achievements of the code system made public by the NRA.

Referring to labor disputes under both the president's re-employment agreement and the codes themselves, the report said:

"Meanwhile, none of the agencies connected with NRA had been busier than the national labor board, created by the president on Aug. 5, with Senator Robert F. Wagner as chairman. In an incredibly short time the national organization was functioning to settle labor disputes growing out of the rapid shift to entirely new relationships between management and workers.

"Before terms of codes could be decided upon there were scores and literally hundreds of strikes or threats of strikes and myriad labor troubles which labor leaders found themselves helpless to forestall or even diminish. At once, however, it was apparent that the initiative did not have to be taken by the board. Manufacturers and labor leaders and chosen heads of groups at once volunteered to submit controversies.

"From this moment the board has labored unceasingly to prevent or adjust all manner of disagreements. More than 200 major cases have been adjusted, involving 400,000 employes. Seventeen regional boards have been established in the principal industrial centers, and the president recently issued an executive order extending the life and functions of the national board."

CONSIDER PLAN FOR ONE NATIONAL TEXTILE BOARD

Greenville, S. C.—Dr. obert Bruere, of New York, and Ben E. Geer, of Greenville, members of the national industrial relations board, conferred here today on the textile situation in general laid plans for conferences with the industrial boards in the several textile settled southern states and generally took up the matter whereby it is planned to place all textile industries under supervision of the national group.

Dr. Bruere said that the plan for taking over all textiles is still being worked out in Washington, and no definite conclusion as to details has been reached.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Why should workingmen join trade unions?

Well, some won't do it, anyway. Some because the law does not say they must do so; they are free men, and "stand on their rights." Others because the boss says that they don't have to. That is probably another kind of a man. Anyway, they make poor union members, except when they get ambitious, and want to run the show, not knowing about the meaning of the trade union movement.

There will always be men who know clearly why they join a union. They act on the principles on which trade unionism is based. These principles are largely of two kinds: The first relates to the economic benefits derived from united action; the second relates to the necessity existing for collective action. Incidentally, there are matters relating to social progress. Not every man has the sort of mind that grasps these two main items. A few men understand the situation clearly enough, but are pure individualists. They take the benefit of unionism, while sidestepping the cost of it. They are unsocial. Some others are just dumb.

There are thousands who are just rank and file. In the lodges they are "joiners." They come to the union for no one reason, but they sense the logic of the collective action, while understanding readily the benefits of the collective bargain. Honestly runs in the blood of ninety out of every hundred of them; loyalty is a thing they understand, which they also demand. Knowing they are not all built to be generals, but responding to intelligent leadership when they see it, they achieve the capacity for democratic action, by practicing it in application to their own problems. Understanding that control is the price of united action, they pay the cost in acceptance of discipline.

There is another qualification for union relationship. It is a quality of courage. Those who make the beginning have courage to stand alone; Those who wait and come later may have only the courage which can stand with others. Some men get a joy out of the battle—for sooner or later every live union has its battles. Trade unions today are marching on the greatest battleground of their whole history in the United States.

* * *

A new test of leadership is being applied now to American organized labor. Legal government is being extended now to the control of industry. Its form is being patterned patterned partly after olr political forms. NRA aims to formulate a representative government. That is one meaning of the "collective bargaining" clause. The democratic control of the economic processes is to be attempted. The logic of the machines is compelling the experiment. Trade unions, plus trade associations, are now fumbling with the elements of democracy.

For County Judge

The main planks of my platform are:

First—To balance fixed charges against the county with the revenue it receives.

Second—To forego issuance of more bonds until the county's finances are "in better shape."

Third—To co-operate with the federal government in providing work for the unemployed.

Fourth—To see that all county funds are spent in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Fifth—Repeal of the act creating the post of chairman of the county school board, insure a nine-month school term, remove "politics from the schools" and see that teachers are paid a decent-living salary.

Sixth—To use my influence for the consolidation of city and county departments which are doing duplicate duties—the school and health departments.

Seventh — Creation of a county commission form of government.

Eighth — Abolition of the delinquent tax collector's office, the work to be performed by the county trustee.

Ninth — Abolition of the county back tax attorney, placing the duties of this official upon the county attorney.

Tenth—Employment of a disinterested auditor to audit the books of the County Judge as well as other offices.

Eleventh — Enactment of legislation to abolish the iniquitous fee system under which justices of the peace operate.

I served in the Legislature of 1912-13, and my vote and influence was given to all legislation suggested by David Hanly, Legislative Chairman of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Painters Win Union Pay On Federal Buildings

Washington.—Union painters in the District of Columbia won a final decision in favor of the union rate of wages as the prevailing wage in Washington. Conferences on the controversy were held in the treasury department at which representatives of the contracting painters on federal work here and officials of Local Union No. 368, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America were present.

At the conclusion of the arguments Turner W. Battle, assistant to the secretary of the treasury, declared that the "information developed at these conferences tend to confirm the position previously taken by this department that the prevailing rate of wages for painters in the District of Columbia has been during the life of this work and still is $1.37½ per hour."

ANNOUNCEMENT

I am, after a period of fourteen years, again seeking political preferment and am announcing my candidacy subject to the action of the Democratic primary of March 15, for the office of Circuit Court Clerk. I retired from the office of County Trustee with a clean record, and if elected to the clerkship of the Circuit Court I promise to give it my entire attention and to conduct the office so as to merit public approval and with the ever present thought that a Public Office is a PUBLIC TRUST. I will greatly appreciate your help.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

SETTLEMENT OF TAXI STRIKE IN PHILADELPHIA RATIFIED

Washington, Jan. 18.—Ratification of the agreement settling the Philadelphia taxi strike has been reported to the national labor board by the Philadelphia regional board.

"The national labor board is gratified by the agreement of the cab companies and the Taxi Drivers' union settling the strike," Senator Wagner, chairman of the national labor board, said. "That agreement begins 'The cab companies and the representatives of the union earnestly desire to co-operate with the national labor board.' The substance of the agreement is largely that recommended by the Philadelphia regional labor board on Dec. 6 by the national labor board on Dec. 18.

"This outcome is worth pondering by those who have hastily assailed the national labor board system whenever a recommendation or ruling was not accepted instantly. Friendly critics have shouted for us to be belligerent and hostile critics have dared us to be. That was not the policy of the board. Why? Because the board knows that voluntary agreements are always preferable and that lasting agreements generally grow out of second thoughts rather than controversial first thoughts. In the Philadelphia taxi case the national labor board's decision supported the recommendation of the Philadelphia board, and when acceptance was not immediate, we remained patient but persistent. This persistence had its reward, first in a conference I had last week with ex-Senator Pepper and next in a conference at my request between Mr. Pepper and the labor leaders, which evolved the agreement substantially along the lines of our board's decision."

$3,300,000,000 Public and Civil Works Fund Provides Jobs for 5,000,000 Idle

Washington.—Officials of the public works and the civil works administrations estimated that up to Dec. 31 at least five million jobless, more than a third of the largest roster of unemployed at the lowest depth of the depression, had been put to work by these two federal organizations.

Of those "back on the job," 4,000,000 are working for a comparatively brief period on direct jobs given without hope of reimbursement under the civil works administration to take up the slack, and 1,000,000 are working on comparatively long-term jobs, on jobs financed with money advanced by the PWA but which it expects to get back except in the case of direct grants.

The ultimate success or failure of the programs as a means to overcome the depression depends on the tempo of the nation's industry increasing to take workers on permanent payrolls.

While only 1,000,000 have been put to work by the PWA and 4,000,000 have obtained jobs through the CWA, $2,900,000,000 has been allotted for the former, while the "quick relief" administration has received only $400,000,000 of the original appropriation of $3,300,000,000.

It has been stated that PWA will ask from $1,500,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 for further works, the computation being based upon the amounts requested by municipalities which are considered to have worthy projects. Secretary Ickes some time ago indicated that he would ask for $1,500,000,000.

Reading Socialists Lose City Control

Reading, Pa.—The first of January witnessed the retirement of the last of the socialists who at one time controlled every office in the city government here.

Six years ago, J. Henry Stump, a cigarmaker, was elected mayor on the socialist ticket. With him two other socialists went into office as members of the city council, James H. Maurer, for seventeen years president of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor, a plumber by trade, and George W. Snyder, a piano tuner. Two years later two more socialists were elected to the council, and for five years the five socialists had absolute control of the city government.

In 1932, a fusion movement elected the mayor and two councilmen, and last November defeated the remaining two socialists members of the council.

Opponents of the socialists claimed that while the socialist platform opposed bond issues, nevertheless in two years they increased the municipal debt from $2,750,000 to over $5,200,000.

ICKES ORDERS ACTION.

Washington.—Eighty-four towns, cities and counties have been ordered by Secretary Ickes to begin use within ten days of the PWA funds allotted to them or lose their allotments. Ickes said he will not allow the funds to remain idle, and reallocations will be made unless use of the money starts at once. He said use means that "actual construction with men on payrolls must get under way."

NEW YORK COURTS REFUSE TO ENJOIN UNION WORKERS

One Judge Declares He Does Not Believe in Government Injunction, Another Says NRA Has Stripped Employers of Company Union and "Open Shop" Weapons Against Organized Labor.

New York City, Jan. 18.—Organized workers here have won two big victories by decisions of New York courts.

In one case, the judge said he did not believe in government by injunction; in the other case the judge declared the national recovery act had deprived employers of the company union and the "open shop."

Following a hearing on petitions for injunctions and damages filed against each other by the Radio Factory Workers union and the Cornell-Dubilier Condenser corporation, in the Bronx, Justice Charles B. McLaughlin, of the Bronx supreme court, said:

"I don't see much need for an injunction. I will not restrain organized labor. We don't want government by injunction if we can help it."

In Brooklyn supreme court, Justice Paul Bonynge denied an application for a temporary injunction to restrain a union from picketing.

The Kings County Haberdashers' association, which controls twelve stores in Flatbush, sought an injunction against the Retail Hat and Furnishing Salesmen's union, asking that the union's officers and members be restrained from interfering with its customers by picketing, approaching its employes or "doing any other illegal acts."

"Motion for temporary injunction denied with $10 costs," Judge Bonynge wrote. "The defendants have neither committed nor threatened any illegal acts. The law recognizes their right to spread the gospel of unionism and to picket places of business of recalcitrant employers. The plaintiffs' assumption that the provisions of the national recovery act fortify their position is a mistaken one. Nothing in the act curtails the rights previously enjoyed by labor. Quite to the contrary, congress has greatly strengthened the arm of labor by stripping its traditional enemy of two highly effective weapons, viz.: the company union and the open shop."

General Tire and Rubber Employes See End of Notorious Company Union

Akron, O., Jan. 26.—Coleman Claherty, district representative of the American Federation of Labor, expressed the belief that the first test of the strength of the General Tire and Rubber company's company union here, scheduled to take place within the next few weeks, will end the life of that notorious corporation-financed institution.

The company union masquerades under the title of "company representation" plan. For a long time it has been a bone of contention among employes of the company, nearly nine-tenths of whom are members of the United Rubber Workers Federal union, a bona fide organization affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The test will come at the election for collective bargaining representatives supervised by the national labor board. On that day the employes will declare whether they desire company union representatives or American Federation of Labor representatives.

"It is not difficult to forecast the result of the vote," Claherty said. "Sentiment among the men and women has always been against the company union since its inception. The firm has made every effort to substitute its own organization for the bona fide union, but each try has met only failure."

Asserting that William O'Neil, president of the General Tire and Rubber company, refuses to recognize the United Rubber Workers, Claherty added:

"This election, when it is held, will show the true sentiment of the employes and will force his hand. He recognizes only the company union, the very existence of which is a moral violation of the NRA."

Price U. S. Pays Held to Disprove Living Cost Data

Veterans' Bureau Head Figures Declared by Postal Clerks to Dispute Basis of Federal Workers' Pay Cut.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The irreconcilabilityof the government policies of continuing wage cuts for its own employes while demanding increased wages and shorter hours for private employment is dramatically accentuated, says the February issue of the Union Postal Clerk, official organ of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, by a direct conflict of statement between two government agencies as to increases in the cost of living.

A cost of living survey conducted by the bureau of labor statistics presented such figures to the president that, under the mandatory features of the economy act, he was unable to restore any part of a 5 per cent cut in the wages of government employes. The economy act predicates return of such cut upon increases in the cost of living during six-month periods, one of which ended Jan. 1 last.

Higher Prices Cited.

This deprived government employes of any hope of wage restoration until July 1. In the meantime, legislation continuing the 10 per cent wage cut through the fiscal year beginning July 1 was approved by the house appropriation committee and tacked onto the first appropriation bill reported by it.

Testifying before this very committee, at the hearings at which this continuation of the wage cut was approved, Brig.-Gen. Frank T. Hines, head of the veterans' administration, said that much higher prices are now being paid for supplies. He predicted still further increases. Among other items listed by him was an increase of as high as 90 per cent for flour, 50 to 150 per cent for coal and fuel oil and increases ranging from 8 to 120 per cent for other articles commonly purchased by households.

Two Agencies Disagree.

"Reduced to its lowest terms," the Union Postal Clerk says, "it appears that one agency of the government, dealing with wages of government employes, finds no increase in prices upon which to base restoration of wages and salaries. At the same time, another agency, engaged in the buying of supplies for the government, finds heavier appropriations necessary because the same classes of commodities purchased by households have materially risen and will probably go still higher."

"WE STAND FOUR-SQUARE BEHIND ORGANIZED LABOR"

Mr. and Mrs. Jones, whose electric bill is about $2 a month, are delighted with their savings under the

New Electric Rates

All customers benefit from the new Residence Electric Rates. The example given here applies to our several thousand customers whose monthly bills formerly were $2.00. If it does not apply in your particular case, we invite you to visit our offices for complete information.

POWER CO. REPRESENTATIVE: "Mr. Jones, have you figured how much you'll save immediately on your electric bill under the new Reduced Rates?"

MR. JONES: "Well, we've talked some about it, but I'm not sure that I understand it exactly."

POWER CO. REPRESENTATIVE: "Mr. Jones, I'm sure you'll be delighted to know that your bill, which has been running $2.00 a month, will now be reduced to $1.56. In other words, you will save 44 cents a month. This is a reduction of 22 per cent."

MR. JONES: "That's fine! I wish we could cut all of our living expenses 22 per cent. Now what about those extra kilowatt-hours which your ads say I get at no extra cost? How many do I get, and what can I do with them?"

POWER CO. REPRESENTATIVE: "In your case you'll get 24 kilowatt-hours for your $1.56—and you're entitled to 3 kilowatt-hours extra at no cost whatever—or a total of 27 kilowatt-hours a month—all for your reduced bill of $1.56."

MR. JONES: "But do I have to buy some new electrical appliances in order to get this extra current that you're talking about?"

POWER CO. REPRESENTATIVE: "Indeed not! You could, if you wished, add some appliances, but it is not necessary to do that. The first thing I would suggest would be to make more use of the lighting in your home. You know, Mr. Jones, there are very few homes that are properly lighted. So often people only have one light burning in the living room—to save on the electric bill. In your case, Mr. Jones, you wouldn't have to do this, since you have some free lighting coming to you. Good light in the home is most important . . . for reading, sewing and general comfort. Poor light often produces eye-strain, headaches and general discomfort. You should never read for a long period under a lamp of less than 60-watt size. And Mrs. Jones shouldn't do much sewing under less light than a 60 or 75-watt bulb gives."

MRS. JONES: "We've never paid much attention to the lighting in our home. But with this reduced rate and the extra electricity we get I think we should."

MR. JONES: "Well, I believe I understand about the savings and the advantages we get with the new rate. Now what about this still lower rate that I've read about?"

POWER CO. REPRESENTATIVE: "This lower rate applies to people who want to make an even greater use of electricity than they have been doing in the past. In your particular case, Mr. Jones, you would automatically get this lower rate if you increased your use over and above the 3 extra kilowatt-hours. Under this rate it would cost you very little more to further electrify your home. You could make still more liberal use of your lights, your percolator, waffle iron or any other appliances you may now have, and all for a very little increase in your bill. Thousands of our customers will now cook electrically or use an electric refrigerator under this Low Rate (we call it the Promotional Rate) and for amazingly small cost. Now, don't we all agree that electricity is a real bargain under the new rates?"

MR. AND MRS. JONES: "Yes, we do, and I think we ought to use our electricity hereafter to a greater advantage, as you have explained to us. Thank you so much for calling."

We will be glad to have one of our Home Lighting Specialists call at your home and assist you in improving your lighting. This service is free.

LABOR BOARD FLAYS STUBBORN ATTITUDE SOCK MILL OWNERS

Harriman Crowd Severly Condemned for Their Tactics.

Public Statement Charges Bad Faith and Desire to "Perpetuate Discord, Foster Industrial Unrest and to Obstruct the Forces of Recovery"—Says Workers Offered Many Concessions.

Governor Spurned As Strike Mediator

Good offices of the Hon. Hill McAlister, governor of Tennessee, proffered Harriman mill owners in an effort to adjust the strike of hosiery workers at that place, were declined by the management, his excellency told a committee of trades unionists which called upon him at the executive mansion this week. Gov. McAlister stated the offer had been made some days ago.

Record of the sock mill management is thus kept 100 per cent perfect in their refusal to assist the government and other agencies to promote industrial peace as an important part of the recovery program.

Among those calling on Gov. McAlister this week were T. R. Cuthbert, secretary of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council; Fred G. Held, vice-president of the National Federation of Hosiery Workers; R. L. Gossage, secretary-treasurer of the Harriman local, and others.

Harriman mill barons, who have pursued an arrogant, destructive attitude in their relations with their employes since an organization was formed at the Harriman Hosiery mills last fall, were severely censured by the national labor board in a statement made public last week, a brief resume of which was sent out over Associated Press wires.

The national labor board declares that the position taken by the mill owners is "indicative of a desire to perpetuate discord, foster industrial unrest and to obstruct the forces of recovery."

Good faith of the mill barons is challenged by the board, which recalls that an agreement entered into between the board, the employes and representatives of the mill, was rejected at the eleventh hour.

"The national labor board strongly condemns the action of the company," the statement declares.

It follows, in full:

For three months the national labor board and the Atlanta regional labor board have exerted every possible effort to bring about a satisfactory settlement of the strike at the Harriman Hosiery mills in Tennessee. These efforts have been consistently nullified by the unyielding attitude of the company, which has refused to submit any of the disputed matters to arbitration.

At the hearing before the board of representatives of the company promised to make an earnest, genuine and conscientious effort to reach an agreement with the representatives of its employes. The workers were represented at the hearing before the board by union officials. On Jan. 10, after full consideration of the evidence, the national labor board rendered a decision, containing, among other things, the following provision: "In the event an agreement is reached, it shall be reduced to writing and a copy of the agreement signed by an official of the company and a duly selected representative of the employes, shall be posted upon the bulletin board of the mill."

Thereafter the company prepared a unilateral statement purporting to be an agreement provided for by the decision of the board, bearing the following caption: "Harriman Hosiery Mills

Cuthbert Returns Commission As Local Organizer

A Busy Boy

T. R. CUTHBERT

T. R. Cuthbert, for the past several months voluntary organizer for the American Federation of Labor, this week surrendered his commission as such, due to increased business which requires all of his time at his regular work.

Mr. Cuthbert told The Labor World Thursday that, while he very much regretted the step, it was absolutely necessary. He also asked that appreciation be expressed to the many who have co-operated with him in the work of organization of new unions. "There are some recently-formed unions," he said, "which I feel duty bound to continue to advise and work with until they are 'on their feet,' and my resignation as organizer does not mean that I have ceased activities entirely in the local movement. My whole existence is tied up in the effort to be of some use to my fellow-workers, and I will continue to give all possible spare time to the cause."

During his term as organizer, Mr. Cuthbert has done yeoman service for organized labor, having received highest commendation for his activities from high officials of the A. F. of L. and international unions.

Rossville Merchants Set Business Hours

Retail grocers of Rossville appeared before the compliance board this week in an effort to agree on hours for opening and closing. Chairman McFarland surrendered the chair and the merchants formed a temporary organization which agreed on the following schedule: Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, 7 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Friday, 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.; Saturday, 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. The agreement, was approved by the board. It was said that more than 80 per cent. of the grocers were present and participated in the meeting.

The Rossville board is composed of Chairman McFarland, representing the public; Charles Puckett, labor; C. L. Suggs, merchants; Taylor Guinn, retail clerks; John L. Hutcheson, Sr., manufacturers; Mrs. Earle Miller, consumers, and Will McClure, attorney and secretary of the board.

The Rossville body is said to have functioned harmoniously, and much good has been accomplished through its efforts.

Hosiery Workers' Secretary Writes Of His Experience As 'Guest' Of Roane Sheriff

Gassage Describes Night in Jail, With Shoes for a Pillow and Bugs for Bedfellows—"Will Take More Than a Few Labor-Hating Stockholders to Whip Us," Unionist Declares. Signs Communication "Strikingly Yours."

How it feels to spend a night in jail, with shoes for a pillow and with bugs for bedfellows, is dramatically told in a communication received by The Labor World this week from R. L. Gossage, financial secretary of the Harriman local of Hosiery Workers, who indicates beyond question the splendid spirit of determination which is held by strikers at the Harriman Hosiery mills.

Mr. Gossage was among some seventy-five to 100 union members who were jailed for alleged violation of an injunction which was said to have prohibited picketing at the Harriman mills, where a strike has been on for several months. The union official's experience in the "bastile," however, was short-lived, he having been in Washington at the time the first arrests were made, in conference with officials of the United States government and the mill owners in an effort to adjust the disturbance.

The strike referred to is the one mentioned in another column of this issue, in connection with which the national labor board publicly excoriated the mill barons, charging them with bad faith, and a desire to perpetuate discord, foster industrial unrest and obstruct the forces of recovery.

Mr. Gossage's letter follows:

Editor Labor World:

Just out of jail—and what a grand and glorious feeling! Who could stay cooped up in an old jail when the first snow of the winter is on the ground? Only one day and night in that hole, but I wasn't sorry to tell it "Au Revoir." Think what the feelings were of those who had spent ten days in that space, built to hold forty and over a hundred men in there. It reminded one of "The Black Hole of Calcutta." What a blessing it didn't happen in the summertime. Only room to stand.

A disgrace to the state of Tennessee—men thrown in jail for laughing and singing.

The scabs have made effigies out of snow of the union leaders. They are allowed to ridicule us, curse us or abuse us in any way, yet we are not allowed to even laugh at them without violating the injunction. Oh Justice, where are thine eyes?

I was admitted after the others had had their supper, but the jailor was very considerate; he brought mine and the president's supper—white beans, four slices of bread in a pan about 12 inches by 3 or 4 inches deep, and a tin cup of water. Delicious.

There was no sleeping for me. Each prisoner had to make down his own bed. As I was fixing my bed the old-timers (who had been in there for ten days) kept bringing me bedbugs, saying "Here's your bedfellow." By the time I was in bed I could feel bugs crawling all over my pillow. I used my shoes for a pillow. I will never forget this night in jail. All through the lonely night I could hear my loyal brothers tossing and turning. Suddenly I heard a great commotion outside. The door opened and in came the old war horse, Gertha Brewer. What a grand and glorious reunion.

For breakfast we had a great slab of fat meat, gravy as thick as mush, bread and black coffee. Very appetizing.

For lunch today we had a feast—pinto beans, bread, and for dessert an onion, which was purchased by our loyal members on the outside, and a cup of genuine water.

I arrived home in time to eat some of Madam Queen's cooking. Though it was only potatoes, it certainly tasted good. "Be it ever so humble, there is no place like home."

We all came out with the determination to "stay out" until we win. We may be down and we certainly are out, but we haven't yelled "calf rope" yet. As long as there is the same determination that we have now it will take more than a few labor fighting stockholders to whip us.

Yes, the mill offered to bond us out of jail if we would agree to stay off and keep our families and relatives off the picket line. Any red-blooded American citizen would have done as we did—refused their offer. We would have been in jail yet, but we heard that the mill management thought that we couldn't make bond and we wanted to show them that we could when we wanted to.

What the management submitted to us in the form of "rules and regulations" we consider an insult. Why didn't they submit the entire thing for publication instead of just the few parts of it that was favorable to them? What would be the advantage of going back to work under conditions such as they offer? We would be worse off than we were before we came out on strike. There is nothing in the proposed instrument that coincides with the national labor board's decision.

Strikingly yours,
R. L. GOSSAGE,
Secretary-Treasurer.
Harriman, Tenn., Feb. 3.

Hosiery Workers Lose a Member

John Elbert Chrisman, active member of Branch 53, Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers, died Tuesday, Jan. 23, at his home in Rossville, aged 50. Funeral services were held on Jan. 25, with interment at Cloud Springs. Mr. Chrisman was a member of the Cloud Springs Baptist church. He is survived by six children, all of whom reside here.

Mr. Chrisman was loyal to his organization, and an indication of the respect in which he was held is seen in a resolution, prepared by R. V. Jester, Leonard Lowe and Mrs. A. D. Swader, which was passed at the regular meeting of Branch 53 last Saturday, as follows:

Whereas, it has pleased a Divine Providence to call from our midst our fellow-worker and brother, John Elbert Chrisman; and,

Whereas, Brother Chrisman was loyal to this organization and to his fellow-workers, and was a citizen of sterling character; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deplore the taking away of this brother, and will miss his counsel and fellowship; that we extend to his bereaved relatives our heartfelt sympathy in their loss; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be spread upon the minutes, furnished the family of deceased, and The Labor World and the Hosiery Worker for publication.

Make Peace With Baseball Company

Papers were signed Thursday ending a "row" with the Chattanooga Baseball company which had continued since last summer, when President Engel built a home with non-union labor. Trades unionists recalled that when Engel stadium was erected there was some disagreement, which was "patched up" at that time, and which flared anew with the incident of last summer. An agreement satisfactory to all parties concerned was reached this week, following negotiations which had been in progress for some time.

President Kamin, of Central Body, said Thursday the conferences were conducted in fine spirit, and a perfect understanding was reached. He said all central bodies in the Southern circuit will be notified of the adjustment.

Low-Rent Houses Opened For Use of British Workers

Aldershot, England.—G. H. Shakespeare, parliamentary secretary, ministry of health, took part in the opening at Aldershot recently of the first thirty of 286 houses which are being erected by the Workmen's Housing association, 1933, Limited. The houses are the first to be built under the 1933 housing act, and they are to be let at rentals of 9 shillings and 9 shillings 9 pence, respectively. One type has two bedrooms and the other three, while both have bathrooms.

Shoe Repairers All "Doing Their Part"

The following item, offered by a member of the Master Shoe Repairers' association, indicates a splendid spirit of co-operation among the downtown shop owners and their employes:

"Local Chapter No. 618 of the Boot and Shoe Repair, wish to announce that every repairman of the downtown district is now displaying a union card and working in full accord with the NRA. The public is asked to take notice of this fact and support this organization that is now helping to bring back better times."

Shoemakers Hold An Open Meeting

Open meeting of Shoemakers' local held Thursday night at Odd Fellows' hall, on West Seventh street, is reported to have been an enjoyable as well as a profitable session.

Members of the Master Shoe Rebuilders' organization were special guests of the union, and a general get-together spirit prevailed. A number of short speeches were made, the guests being introduced by C. R. Massey, and refreshments were served.

Paul Aymon, president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, delivered an address. The program was arranged by a committee consisting of Walter Starnes and Lee Pollard.

PRESIDENT GIVES LABOR BOARD FULL POWER IN ELECTIONS

"Company Union" Advocates Are Given Another Setback.

Defiance of Weirton Steel Company, Budd Manufacturing Company and Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company Hit by Roosevelt in Executive Order Granting Rule Over All Disputes in Plant Elections.

Washington, Feb. 8.—Corporations and individuals who persist in violating the labor section of the national industrial recovery act were dealt a heavy blow by President Roosevelt in an executive order giving the national labor board express power to conduct elections for collective bargaining representatives in any plant where a substantial number of workers express the desire to have an election held.

The president's action was the outgrowth of a nation-wide movement by antiunion employers to organize, finance and control company unions in plain violation of Section 7-A of the recovery act. Determined to wreck collective bargaining, which is the basis of the trade union movement, these concerns deliberately flouted the jurisdiction of the national labor board, established by the president to adjust industrial disputes, refused to obey its decisions, refused to hold elections for collective bargaining under its supervision, and even challenged the board's right to step into their plants.

Employers Who Oppose Labor Board.

Notable among the company union concerns which have fought the jurisdiction of the board are the Weirton Steel company, with plants at Weirton and Clarksburg, W. Va., and Steubenville, O.; the E. G. Budd Manufacturing company, of Philadelphia; the Philadelphia Rapid Transit system, and the National Lock company, of Rockford, Ill.

Many of these concerns have been assisted in their subversive policy by the National Association of Manufacturers, notorious for its opposition to trade unionism and the outstanding enemy of the abolition of child labor, which has given them legal advice or other aid in their efforts to nullify the labor section of the recovery act, and especially the clause which was written into the act for the express purpose of outlawing company unions.

Throughout the labor movement and among recovery officials the association has been regarded as the coordinating force in resisting the labor board and in organizing company unions, which are devised for no other purpose than to intimidate employes from joining bona fide independent national and international unions.

Executive Order Is Drastic.

The president's sweeping order was designed definitely to clear away all doubt of the labor board's authority over company union controversies and collateral disputes, with unlimited authority to hold elections for collective bargaining representatives.

The president put no strings on what the labor board may do in these controversies. The executive order declares that the board may determine "in such manner as it sees fit," whether a "substantial number" of employes want an election for representatives to deal with the management, and it may define in its own discretion what the substantial number may be.

Board Rules Election.

It may conduct the election under its own exclusive control and under whatever rule it chooses to lay down

It shall require those voted for be a majority shall represent all of the employes.

It shall certify the names of the elected representatives to the employer and if he declines to deal with them or recognize them "or is in any other way refusing to comply with the requirements" of the labor sections of the industrial law, the board shall report the case to the NRA administrator "for appropriate action."

Attorney-General Consulted.

It was announced that Atty.-Gen. Cummings had been consulted in the preparation of the order and was regarded as believing it would remove

Geo. W. Perkins Veteran Unionist Goes to Reward

Attack Fatal

GEORGE W. PERKINS

Chicago, Feb. 8.—George W. Perkins, veteran trades unionist, for thirty-five years president of the Cigar Makers' International union and for many years a close friend, associate and adviser of Samuel Gompers, died here Thursday, following an illness of about a week. Death was due to heart trouble. Mr. Perkins was 77 years old.

Mr. Perkins was associated with the American Federation of Labor from its very beginning. With Samuel Gompers, he took a leading part in its early history and his advice and guidance was sought by labor all through his long life. He was always keenly interested in everything that had to do with the advancement and progress of the organized workers and he gave lavishly of his time tnd strength to the labor movement.

Born near Greenfield, Mass., on December 8, 1856, Mr. Perkins became a member of the Cigar Makers' International union on July 6, 1880, when he initiated as a member of Local Union No. 68, Albany, N. Y. He was active in the affairs of the union from the day he joined.

Another Youngster At Morris Home

Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Morris were blessed again this week, when another son was born to them Wednesday morning at Children's hospital. "Papa" Henry was too excited to remember just how many this makes for the Morris family, and when asked the name of the newcomer, stated they are considering the use of numbers, names having become somewhat scarce.

Mother and child are doing well. Father is still considerably nervous, but is managing to attend to business with a degree of regularity.

Mr. Morris is with the Angel Printing company.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Who is president of the new union in the headgear industry?

A.—Michael F. Greene. The new union, a merger of the United Hatters of North America and the Cloth Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers' International union, is named the United Hatters, Cap and Millinery Workers' International union.

Q.—Does organized labor believe that the manufacture of naval vessels and war munitions should be done by the government?

A.—Yes. The last A. F. of L. convention demanded that construction of all naval vessels, machinery and equipment be confined to navy yards and arsenals.

Q.—How long has Frank Morrison been secretary of the American Federation of Labor?

A.—Thirty-seven years, since January, 1897.

What Next!

Potato starch, so important in the textile industry that 28,000,000 pounds have been imported in a single year, is being produced from sweet potatoes by the United States bureau of chemistry and soils. The bureau has also produced a new type of postage stamp gum from the sweet potato. These new uses for the sweet potato are expected to help the sweet potato growing districts of the south.

OTTUMWA LABOR WANTS CWA OFFICIALS SACKED

Ottumwa, Ia.—The Ottumwa Trades and Labor assembly petitioned Harry L. Hopkins, civil works administrator at Washington, to remove officials of the county civil works administration here. The assembly had been in receipt of grievances presented by workers against the county administrator and his assistants and had endeavored to remedy them.

The men whose removal is sought are charged by the union men with coercion and intimidation of workers, using the CWA as a collection agency with a threat of removing men from jobs for failure to pay bills, open opposition to the policies of the president of the United States and opposition to the wage rates of the civil works administration.

ST. JOSEPH ORGANIZED CLERKS MAKE BIG GAINS

St. Joseph, Mich.—The first year's work of the St. Joseph Retail Clerks' union resulted in an increase from a group of seven charter members to a membership of about 500, according to reports of officers of the union.

At the present time about 140 stores are completely organized and display the union's card. The union has members in three large chain organizations, filling stations, furniture, clothing, dry goods and cigar stores and many other businesses.

During the coming year the union hopes to organize every eligible clerk in St. Joseph, which will bring the membership up to about 1,000.

How Black-Draught Holds its Popularity

A LAXATIVE made from highly approved, medicinal plants—yet about the least expensive laxative you can find: Thedford's Black-Draught.

There's no expensive container for you to buy when you ask your dealer for Black-Draught. And its light weight has saved freight bills in your favor. Black-Draught is right with you in economy. It brings prompt, refreshing relief to sufferers from constipation troubles.

Don't put up with sick headache, sluggishness, gas, dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, biliousness, coated tongue, bad breath, distress after meals, when due to constipation, but take Thedford's Black-Draught.

Organization Need Grows

Growth of company unions menaces the labor movement and recovery. At the recent conference of national and international union heads in Washington, President William Green of the American Federation of Labor said that company unions had grown 180 per cent since the enactment of the NRA. This is an alarming situation, which was recognized not only by the delegates to the conference but by Senator Wagner, Representative Connery and others in public life who addressed the labor men.

Fortunately, labor is fully aware of the danger and prepared to cope with it. The conference approved an organization program adapted to the needs of the hour. It allows for flexibility and is designed to promote organization in whatever form or method seems best fitted to rally American wage earners to the banner of organized labor. The form of organization will not be dictated. The workers can have the form that they feel is best.

The program calls for tolerance and co-operation on the part of all national and international unions. That this will be given was evidenced by the temper of the Washington conference, which plainly showed its determination to push organization in the most effective way. Now it is up to every trade unionist to put his shoulder to the wheel and boost organization among his fellow citizens as never before.

No Going Backward

A business news agency says that in the background of many "business minds" is the idea that as soon as prosperity returns, the old "normal" higher hours of work will be restored.

This is a delusion on the part of the "business minds." Such an idea is contrary to progress. Once shorter hours are established, there will be no going back to old standards. And if there should be, it would mean disaster for the nation.

That the "business minds" should even dream of restoring former hours shows that they do not realize what has happened and is happening. Progress means ever shorter hours and higher pay, as pointed out by organized labor. The nation is gradually coming to realize this, and "business minds" may rest assured there will be no return to old conditions.

Four Backward States

At its first convention, in 1881, the American Federation of Labor demanded stricter laws making employers liable for all accidents to employes resulting from employer negligence or incompetency. Later the A. F. of L. demanded radical modification of the unjust bar to recovery of damages based on the legalistic and judicial fellow servant doctrine, and its accompanying waiver of rights, assumption of risk, and contributory negligence, all of which were clever schemes devised to relieve employers from financial obligation toward injured employes.

As a result of organized labor's efforts, the State of Washington, in 1911, enacted the first adequate compensation law. Other states have followed the example set by Washington until now forty-four states and the District of Columbia have compensation legislation.

The justice of workmen's compensation is generally admitted. It is therefore regrettable that the legislatures of four states still refuse this meager equity to the workers who are the victims of accidents, often fatal, while engaged in the production of commodities and the performance of services solely for the private profit of their employers. Nevertheless, this basic right is still denied working men and women and their dependents in Arkansas, Florida, Mississippi and South Carolina.

Organized labor in these states have persistently fought for the enactment of appropriate workmen's compensation laws. But the industrial and legislative bourbons who dominate the legislatures have succeeded in blocking the proposal. Usually the outstanding persons opposing this legislation are those who have persistently fought adequate child labor laws and refused to recognize the right of their employes to organize in effective trade unions for the purpose of collective bargaining in the adjustment of wages and hours and other working conditions.

The political and industrial leaders in these four backward states should cease their opposition to adequate protection for injured workers and their families and promptly enact up-to-date workmen's compensation laws. By so doing they will get more in touch with the general spirit underlying the President's Recovery Program.

Sales Tax Defeated Again

In rejecting the proposal for a $400,000,000 sales tax the Ways and Means committee of the federal House of Representatives reflected the view of the great masses of the American people.

The American Federaton of Labor, representing millions of workers and all persons receiving modest incomes has fought the sales tax levy as a policy of raising revenue for the government from the very inception of the propaganda launched by the wealthy in favor of it.

The scheme is an open and unpatriotic attempt to shift taxation from the rich and well-to-do, who are able to pay it without the sacrifice of any useful element in their lives, to the masses of the people who are least able to bear the tax burden and whose living standards are necessarily reduced by every dollar extorted from them by tax collectors.

The sales tax is also reprehensible because it is a concealed tax. It is collected from every purchaser of an article, but the tax is not revealed so that consumers can see and understand the amount they are called upon to pay.

Frequently sales tax advocates throw a sop to working men and women and all other small-income groups by exempting the necessaries of life from their reactionary proposal. This is an attempt to deceive the masses. If the sales tax limited should become a law, the wealthy and their propagandists would immediately endeavor to have the limitations removed and extend the scheme to cover sales of all articles, including products necessary to sustain life.

The American Federation of Labor congratulates the members of the Ways and Means committee for their refusal to adopt a system of taxation which is nothing but an instrument to "soak the poor."

Mrs. Roosevelt Scores

The public school authorities of the District of Columbia were administered a just rebuke by Mrs. Roosevelt in connection with the inauguration of free lunches for over 4,000 school children whose parents were unable to provide them with food.

When the lunch system was opened, the event was celebrated with appropriate eclat. The First Lady was invited to attend the ceremony and eat one of the lunches, which included milk and fruit. Later a rumor reached her that the lunch, which she had pronounced good, was a phoney lunch prepared especially for the occasion and not a sample of the real lunches given the children. The First Lady determined to find out the truth by a personal visit, without the knowledge of the authorities, to one of the schools at lunch time and eat an actual free lunch.

The First Lady was surprised. The lunch consisted of clam chowder. No fruit. No milk. Of course Mrs. Roosevoolt condemned this parsimony, which proper medical authorities declare is not conducive to the children's health. The school officials immediately got busy and made arrangements to include fruit and milk in the free lunches. They will probably serve no more phony lunches to the First Lady.

Company Union Growth Held Big Danger to Labor

Situation Imperatively Demands Great Unionization Efforts, Washington Conference Says.

Washington, Feb. 1.—Warning that under provisions of the national recovery act, employers are exerting every effort to form company unions and that the situation imperatively demands the utmost in organization effort by the labor movement, representatives of international and international unions, in conference here, issued a stirring call to labor to intensify organization work throughout American industry.

Speakers, from President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, down the line of national and international union heads, declared that American labor faced a critical situation and that no time must be lost in organizing the wage-earners. It was emphasized that the rapid growth of company unions threatened the very existence of organized labor, that jurisdictional disputes must be settled in the spirit of tolerance and that organization must be pushed in whatever form or method best designed to rally the workers under the banner of the labor movement.

In addition to declaring for intensive and aggressive organization activities, the conference condemned continuation of wage cuts in the federal government service and listened to complaints against the operation and administration of the NRA. The meeting was held in pursuance to action taken by the last A. F. of L. convention.

Buying Power Of Postal Workers Cut $51,000,000

Washington, Feb. 1.—The drastic reduction in living standards imposed on government employes by the 15 per cent wage cut and other pay reductions, enacted by congress as economy measures, was clearly pointed out in the statement made by Gilbert E. Hyatt, legislative representative of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, before the house sub-committee handling the postoffice appropriation bill that the slashes took $51,000,000 from the postal clerks alone during the six months ended Dec. 31 last.

Citing an example of the retrenchment to which workers had been forced to resort as the result of diminished income, Mr. Hyatt reported on a survey in the Minneapolis office, with 385 employes.

"The survey," he said, "disclosed that 136 of them had removed their telephones, that 227 were forced to borrow, that 183 were forced to discontinue their checking accounts, that 59 curtailed the education of their children, that 283 were forced to reduce or discontinue contributions to welfare organizations and that 138 neglected medical care. If you will multiply that by the total number of postal employes in the government service, and all others in the government service, it indicates that the increase in buying power contemplated by the national recovery act has been very materially slowed down."

CRIMINAL JUDGE
FIRST DIVISION

I believe I have caused more comment and drawn more intelligent attention to the Justice of the Peace Courts and the financial affairs of this County since I have been on the County Court than any one man in twenty years.

I not only believe in marching in the vanguard of progress, but I believe in leading a reconnoitering party composed of militant thinkers who are untrammelled and unafraid as political sharpshooters ahead of the vanguard, and I find I am having plenty of good company.

If I am elected Criminal Judge I would cause the people in Hamilton County and Tennessee to study crime and criminals in a more intelligent manner than they have ever done in the past. I have plenty of ideas that will be thought-provoking and commented on a plenty.

I took the most humble office in the judiciary and widened its range of interest in the minds of thousands, by bringing issues to a dramatic climax.

In this age of the world we need men who are colorful, and studious, and who can give their ideas wings, and gain a hearing.

In my humble way I am trying to be such a man.

...These are points worth putting ...n for future reference. Today la... is divided between praise and the ...erse. Affecting the second largest ... all industries, it is of tremendous ...portance. Harmony in this industry means a stable foundation upon which governmental help for construction may be poured out. Will there be harmony? The cards do not reveal the answer.

The national adjustment board set up by the code comprise ten representatives of labor, ten representatives of the employers and an impartial chairman named by the president. The board is to adjust labor disputes in the industry and through regional sub-boards, to negotiate wage, hour and other labor agreements for the various sections of the country.

Pending the negotiation of such agreements, the industry is to operate on a 40-hour week basis with a minimum wage of 40 cents an hour for unskilled labor and $12 to $15 a week for office workers, depending upon population.

Labor had demanded a shorter work week and specific wage scales for all types of labor, but agreed to the code in view of the fact that it provides for machinery for further consideration of reduction in hours and for the fixing of wage scales for all kinds of skilled workers.

President Roosevelt, in a letter to Gen. Johnson, announcing that he had signed the code, suggested that the national adjustment board give early consideration to the development of a solution for the jurisdictional disputes that have disturbed the industry for years. Gen. Johnson called the board "certainly the most comprehensive planning board yet written into the national recovery administration" and "perhaps the most comprehensive self-governing instrumentality yet conceived."

ROOSEVELT PLANS AID TO SMALL BUSINESSES

Washington.—It was announced at the White House that methods were being considered to protect small business concerns from alleged handicaps under the fair competition codes established by the president under the national industrial recovery act. It was suggested that it might be found advisable to create a board to receive complaints and act upon them in the manner now applied by the national labor board in adjusting disputes between employers and employes.

Consumers Charged Extortionate Prices While Buying Power Lags

Washington, Jan. 18.—Frederick R. Hoisington, Jr., chairman; Meyer Parodneck, treasurer, and J. Charles Laue, executive chairman of the emergency conference of consumer organizations, 315 Fourth avenue, New York City, charged extortionate prices for milk, coal, copper and other consumer commodities at a price hearing of consumer protests before A. D. Whiteside, NRA division administrator.

The emergency conference of consumer organizations declared that prices have increased extortionately in proportion to purchasing power. The organization made public a brief showing price increases exacted from the ultimate consumer ranging from 17 per cent for coal to 250 per cent for copper hot water boilers.

An analysis of the position of the consumer issued by the organization indicated in general a continuation of the decline in real income and spending of the individual employed consumer. According to the analysis, the less than 7 per cent net gain in money wages of New York factory workers since the first quarter of 1933 has been insufficient to offset the larger increase in living costs.

MRS. MYRTLE L. FOX
For County Register

I hereby announce my candidacy for county register, subject to the action of the democratic primary, March 15. This is my initial experience as a candidate for a public office. Almost since the ratification of the Nineteenth amendment to the constituton of the United States it has been customary to elect a woman to this office. It occurs to me that this practice should not be abandoned, as the women are entitled to some recognition in county offices.

For twenty-eight years I have been a resident of Chattanooga. For the past twenty years I have been identified with the business world. From the clerical and bookkeeping experience I have gained I feel competent to do the work in the county register's office. I shall conduct the register's office as economically and efficiently as I have the business with which I am associated.

I am personally acquainted with many readers of The Labor World, whose active support I will appreciate. I believe it is only fair to recall now that I belong to a family of trades unionists, my father, two brothers and a brother-in-law having been actively connected with Chattanooga unions for many years.

Bakery Workers Ask More Pay, 35-Hour Week Under NRA Code

Washington, Feb. 3.—Demand for higher wages, and the 35-hour week was made by the Bakery and Confectionery Workers' International union at a two-day hearing on the proposed bakery code before Walter White, NRA deputy administrator.

The industry seeks to continue blanket code provisions of the 44-hour week for machine bakeries and 50 for handcraft bakeries. The union proposed a flat 35-hour week, except for a tolerance of three hours per week at time and a half for handcraft shops, with restoration of skilled wages as of July 1, 1929.

Thirty-five charts accompanied the union case. The union proposed reopening of the hearing in ninety days for revision of hours to compel complete re-employment. It proposed a board of technological adjustment to study displacement of men by machines, with power to create a tax on machines. The union asked representation on the code authority and proposed a complete set-up of industrial relations councils, 50-50 labor and employers. President William Green, of the A. F. of L., strongly supported the union's position.

Statistical Advisor Arnold, for the administration, in a statement made at the request of Deputy Commissioner White, paid high compliment to the unusual work done by both the National Bakers' council and the Bakery and Confectionery Workers' International union in the gathering and presenting facts.

the uncertainties which hitherto have prevented cases of industrial defiance from being taken to court.

Under the executive order it is understood that whenever an employer refuses to allow an election or to recognize its results, the case will go to NRA's compliance boards. On failure to settle there, it will go to the department of justice.

Long Hours and Low Pay in Grocery Code

48-Hour Week and $10 to $15 Minimum Wage Imposed on 1,000,000 Employes.

Washington.—President Roosevelt's signature to the NRA retail food and grocery code of fair competition made it effective on Jan. 6. The code involves 480,000 grocers who are said to employ more than 1,000,000 persons.

The code defines the retail food and grocery trade as selling these goods to the consumer, but there are exemptions for the selling of confectionery in confectionery stores, bakery products in bakeries, milk from house to house, and the sale of food in restaurants for consumption on the premises.

In a gesture to protect consumers from profiteering, one clause provides that no food or grocery retailer shall increase the price of any merchandise sold after Jan. 6, over the price on June 1, 1933, by more than is made necessary by the amount of increased production, operation, replacement, and invoice cost of merchandise, and by taxes and other causes arising since the latter date from the national recovery act and the agricultural adjustment act. This phrasing sounds melodius and encouraging, but the code contains no effective provisions for protecting consumers from the profiteering which it forbids.

Both the maximum hours and minimum wages provisions of the code are disappointing to labor as wholly out of touch with the declared purpose of the recovery act to provide employment for the jobless and increase mass purchasing power to promote prosperity.

The code establishes the maximum 48-hour and six-day week, limited to 10 hours per day, with many employes excepted from the general rule. Basic weekly minimum wages run from $10 in places of less than 2,500 population to $15 in those of more than 500,000.

Retailers are compelled to keep their stores open sixty-three hours per week, excepting those who were open less than sixty-three hours before June 1, 1933. If this latter group desire to continue to operate on the shorter hour schedule the code permits them to do so.

It's so awfully simple to demand UNION GOODS and SERVICE that it is simply awful more trade unionists do not do this important thing.

Agreement to Be Bound by the Following Rules and Regulations," and which bore the signature of the company alone. As written, the company was the only party to the agreement and no provision was made for signature by a duly selected representative of the employes as required by the decision of the national labor board. This statement contained several provisions which were inconsistent with the board's decision and which were statements of policy of the company which have no place in collective bargaining arrangement.

The company, after the workers rejected the unilateral agreement, submitted the same to the board, requesting from the board its "stamp of approval." The board informed the company that the "Rules and Regulations" did not conform with its decision. When the company was informed of its error, it sent its general counsel and treasurer to Washington, where they met the employes and their representatives and initiated negotiations for an agreement with them. After two days of patient negotiation, an agreement was finally prepared which was approved by both parties. Thereupon the general counsel and treasurer of the company announced that the authorization of the board of directors would be necessary before the agreement could be signed. This authorization they promised to obtain on Friday night, Jan. 27, and they agreed to appear at 10 o'clock on the following day before the staff of the national labor board to announce the result of their conference with the directors. The workers appeared at that time, but the representatives of the company returned to Tennessee without even advising the board that they would not appear.

The company has informed the national labor board that it will not enter into any agreement with the representatives of its employes. It objects to the caption of the proposed agreement, which reads as follows: "Agreement made this.....day of January, 1934, between Floyd Johnson, R. L. Gossage, Mrs. Edna Gossage, G. E. Brewer and Fred G. Held, representatives of a group of employes and the management of the Harriman Hosiery Mills," and it offers merely to reduce to writing a unilateral statement of the terms under which it will operate its plant.

Numerous concessions were made by the representatives of the employes and the objections which are now made by the company to the agreement prepared by its general counsel are captious and unsubstantial. There is lacking here the earnest, genuine and conscientious effort to reach agreement which the company promised this board to exert and which is required by the national recovery program.

The eleventh hour rejection of this agreement impugns the good faith of the company and is indicative of a desire to perpetuate discord, foster industrial unrest and to obstruct the forces of recovery. The national labor board strongly condemns the action of the company.

OWNED BY THE CHATTANOOGA TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

THE LABOR WORLD

DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF ALL THE WAGE-EARNERS

Volume XVIII | CHATTANOOGA, TENNESSEE, FEBRUARY 16, 1934 | Number 43

NON-PARTISAN GROUP NAMED TO REPORT ON CANDIDATES' RECORDS

Open Meeting for Candidates Arranged; Fee-Grabbing Condemned; Police Radio Approved; Mass Meeting Endorsed.

It seems that Central Body meetings get bigger and better every session. Last Monday evening in Roosevelt hall some 150 delegates were in attendance and enthusiastic interest evidenced.

Especially was this shown in the forthcoming primary to be held March 15. As a climax to the drive being conducted in the labor movement for the last eight months, the poll tax and vote committee reported that speakers had appeared before various local unions and that reports from them indicated that union labor is really going to take their case to the ballot boxes and protect their interests. Attention has been particularly emphasized that poll tax receipts are not necessary in this election, but registration is essential. Registration will be held for three days—Feb. 21, 22 and 23—and all union members should be watchful that everyone registers, the committee warned.

In line with the regular custom of allowing candidates the privilege of the floor, an annual open meeting has been set for Monday night, Feb. 26. At this time candidates who wish to do so will be allowed not more than five minutes time to address the assembled trades unionists and say whatever they please. The candidates will be guests of organized labor, it was pointed out, and no heckling or cross-firing will be permitted.

It was the desire of the council that all candidates be invited with the exception of Frank S. (Skinny) Shipp, who was called by name as being excluded from the list, and that his presence in the labor hall was not wanted and unwelcome.

The report of the Nonpartisan Political committee is being drawn up, and its findings will be presented as soon as possible after the next meeting of the council. This committee was authorized to prepare, in its discretion, one question to be presented by a candidate several days before the open meeting, and then it is the privilege of the candidate to answer or not to answer.

Members that have been appointed to serve on the Nonpartican Political committee are: Matt Robinson (Machinists), Joe Dobbs (Plumbers), J. T. McKenna (Textiles), R. M. Cooke (Typos), Z. B. Bender (Carpenters), C. F. Weidner (Painters), J. P. Bales (Teachers). This committee is to go into the records kept of the candidates and report their findings.

A mass meeting called for Saturday night, Feb. 16, at the courthouse for the purpose of discussing the TVA and its possible benefits was indorsed by the council. Sponsored by the Chattanooga Citizens' council, and supported by other civic groups, Mayor John T. O'Connor is scheduled to speak. Delegates were urged to attend this meeting and take part. The question of a referendum vote being taken is expected to be the subject of greatest interest, and one which has been opposed by prominent individuals locally.

Replies to telegrams sent to Senators McKellar and Bachman and Congressman McReynolds that they support the $50,000,000 appropriation for public schools were read. All three reports reported that they had supported the measure.

Delegates from Musicians' union reported that a truce had been declared with the Club Lido for the time being.

The secretary was ordered to write Commissioner Eugene Bryan commending him for action taken toward securing low-wave radio for police cars. The commissioner was requested, however, not to purchase Ford cars in which to install these radios. Ford's arrogant attitude toward NRA and his consistent unfair

Ratify U. S. Ban On Child Labor, Andrews Urges

New York Industrial Commissioner Stresses Need to Permanently Protect Children by Federal Government.

New York City, Feb. 15.—Early ratification of the federal child labor amendment is necessary to hold the great social and economic advance made by the NRA abolition of child labor under the codes, State Industrial Commissioner Elmer F. Andrews declared in an address broadcast over the national network of the Columbia Broadcasting system.

Commissioner Andrews said that the NRA abolition of child labor had been indorsed by the conscience and good sense of the American people and is probably the most popular single act of the present administration. But he warned that this abolition is not permanent; hence the urgency of ratification.

"At a time when the proper use of adult leisure is a subject of national concern," he said, "when the 30-hour week is being talked of as an economic necessity, when every attempt is being made to spread available employment among as many adults as possible, there is not even the shadow of justification for the employment of our children for hire.

"We cannot afford the postponed cost of exploiting growing boys and girls at the most critical stages in their lives. Not they, but their parents must be given gainful employment if we are to have a physically and mentally healthy generation of adults ten or twenty years hence.

"Whatever else we may do about the economic, industrial and social reconstruction and rehabilitation of America, however cautious some of us may be in putting the new deal into practice, it would seem obvious that we can agree to say now: 'Adults, not children, shall work. In fairness both to children and adults, congress, acting for the people of the nation, shall see to it that the people's desire for the limitation, regulation and prohibition of child labor is enforced throughout the nation.'"

There is no similarity between the child labor amendment and the recently repealed Eighteenth amendment, Commissioner Andrews said. Whereas the Eighteenth amendment wrote into the constitution itself a specific prohibition against intoxicating liquors, the child labor amendment merely permits congress to enact laws regulating child labor. He stressed the fact that these laws may be repealed or amended simply by a majority vote in congress whenever the people of the nation so desire.

CHILD LABOR AMENDMENT WINS SUPPORT IN TEXAS

Austin, Tex.—The labor committee of the Texas legislature adopted a unanimous report in favor of the child labor amendment to the constitution. In a letter to the organized labor movement in Texas announcing the action of the committee, Commissioner of Labor Charles H. Poe said:

"You will be interested to hear that the federal child labor amendment passed favorably and unanimously out of the committee of labor, with recommendation that it be printed.

"Will you and other members of your organization wire your senator and representatives, so that they will know of your interest and therefore be acquainted with your desire that they vote favorably for the national child labor amendment?"

Unemployment Insurance Bill Goes to Congress

Wagner-Lewis Bill Provides Tax on Payrolls to Stimulate State Legislation.

Washington, Feb. 15.—Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, and Congressman David J. Lewis, of Maryland, jointly introduced in the senate and house of representatives a bill to encourage the enactment of unemployment insurance laws by state legislatures.

In a joint statement explaining the measure Senator Wagner and Congressman Lewis said:

"The bill imposes a new federal tax upon the payrolls of all employers, except very small ones and a few special classes such as farmers, domestic servants and hospitals. Each employer will be allowed to offset against this tax any sums of money that he contributes under the terms of state unemployment insurance or reserve laws. He will be allowed an additional offset whenever his contributions under state law are decreased because of his success in stabilizing employment.

"By this offset principle sentiment would be created favorable to the enactment of state laws, as the inhabitants of the several states will prefer keeping their money at home rather than contributing it to the federal government. At the same time, the federal tax upon employers who are not operating under state laws will defeat the old argument that state unemployment insurance or reserve laws would impose an undue handicap in interstate competition.

Does Not Dictate Method.

"A feature of the bill is that it does not dictate to the states what manner of laws they should pass. Each state may prescribe statewide funds, industrial pooled funds or individual reserves.

"Each state may determine whether contributions are to be by employers, by employes, or by both, and whether the state is to bear a share of the cost. This means that each of the forty-eight states may become an experimental laboratory for the testing of the wisdom of particular proposals for relief of the unemployed."

The bill provides that no offsets will be allowed unless the state law under which the employer operates is "a genuine unemployment compensation law" that meets "decent minimum standards."

Whether or not the state enactments are satisfactory will be certified by the secretary of labor and no state law will be certified unless it provides for regular contributions by employers, systematic weekly benefits of at least $7, or twenty hours' earnings for at least ten weeks, or for a period fairly measured by past employment. Provision is also made for impartial hearings on matters in dispute and specific safeguards for labor standards and membership in trade unions.

SHOE SHOP PICKET NOT A UNION MAN

Boot and Shoe Workers' Union No. 620 wish to inform the public that the picket in front of the Model Shoe Shop is not an organized labor affair. The man himself is not a member of any local union, and organized labor knows nothing of him, it was stated.

The sign the picket carries does not even bear the union label, but states that "Model Shoe Shop Is Unfair to NRA."

The repair men employed by the Model are members of the Shoe Workers' union.

Picture Operators Win Birmingham Theater Houses

Birmingham, Ala.—The significant achievement in making it possible for Birmingham workers to attend union-manned picture shows was announced by Ralph Root, business agent of Local No. 236, International Alliance of Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators, when the union agreement with the Fairfield and North Birmingham theaters became effective.

"In the past two weeks," he said, "Local 236 has been successful in signing new contracts with all our theaters with an increase in salary and a reduction in hours.

"We now have only one downtown theater and two suburban theaters that do not employ members of our local and we hope to soon have them lined up. Then we shall be 100 per cent organized."

Labor Is Making History In an "Open-Shop" Town

Huntsville, Ala.—Labor union history is being made in this formerly untouched "open shop" town. Last fall there were only thirty-six union members in this entire district. Today there are 2,600 men and women carrying union cards here and the number is increasing daily.

Even the insurance agents are unionizing. Local No. 1 of the United Association of Insurance Agents has been formed and is on its way to a 100 per cent membership.

BUSINESS PLANS STRIKE TO KILL COMPENSATION

Havana, Cuba.—Cuban industrial and commercial concerns, largely owned and controlled by American capitalists, threatened a nation-wide strike by closing the doors of their establishments unless the government modified the recently enacted workmen's compensation law which makes employers liable not only for accidents to workers but also for illness of any kind suffered by them.

Washington Labor Wins Anti-Injunction Law; Bills Against Workers Are Defeated

Seattle, Wash., Feb. 15.—The Washington State Federation of Labor was active in protecting the interests of the workers at the special session of the state legislature recently adjourned, according to a report to the affiliated organizations by President James A. Taylor.

Outstanding among the achievements of the organized workers was the enactment of an anti-injunction bill, which was piloted safely through both houses and signed by Gov. Martin.

The legislature also passed a bill making it a misdemeanor for any employer to attempt to coerce or compel any person to purchase meals or lodging of any particular person or place.

Enabling acts to secure the erection of buildings by the University of Washington at an approximate cost of $1,300,000 were also passed. These measures were approved by both the State Federation of Labor and the Seattle Building Trades.

On the negative side, the state federation prevented the enactment of two positively antilabor bills. The first one applied to industrial insurance and medical aid. It would have taken away the right of appeal from workmen injured in accidents and would have made final the workmen's compensation commission decision in every case. Labor succeeded in having this bill tabled.

The second bill would make it necessary for anyone entering employment in industry to undergo a physical examination despite the fact that the workmen's compensation act does not pay for occupational diseases. Due to organized labor's influence, this measure got no further than the committee to which it was assigned.

The State Federation of Labor also approved a recovery measure patterned after the California state code law. After considerable juggling, the legislature passed a code bill which covered a portion of the matter contained in organized labor's bill, but did not compare with it in effective protection of the workers.

President Taylor expressed organized labor's appreciation of the assistance given labor legislation by Representative Titus, chairman of the house labor committee, and Senator Ryan, chairman of the senate labor committee.

STRIKE WINS 5-CENT CUT IN PRICE OF GASOLINE

San Juan, Puerto Rico.—The automobile and truck drivers' strike and boycott against 25 cents per gallon for gasoline was ended when Acting Gov. Benjamin J. Horton issued a decree fixing the price at 20 cents per gallon.

Union's Homes For Its Members Make Dream Come True

Philadelphia Hosiery Workers to Have Modern Conveniences.

Philadelphia, Feb. 15.—Modern homes for workers, well-lighted and ventilated, with all conveniences, at low rental—a dream of idealists, you say?

Well, dreams sometimes come true. Last Saturday, before a distinguished gathering, and with Mrs. Cornelia Bryce Pinchot wielding the shovel, the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers broke ground for 284 apartments, consisting of 1,084 rooms, all of which will surpass these specifications. They will have individual porches and will be equipped with all sorts of labor-saving gadgets, including laundry, ranges and refrigerators. There will be a playground and nursery for children, a swimming pool for adults, and a large auditorium fitted for theatrical productions and for dances and social events.

All this will cost the workers less than $9 per room, counting heat, electricity for lighting and cooking, refrigerators, etc.

No Longer Utopian.

It's an unprecedented kind of housing the hosiery workers have undertaken, a few years ago regarded as Utopian. It made its beginning three years ago, when hosiery workers first started to lose their homes by the hundreds, along with other wage-earners, and once comfortably housed families were forced to "double up" or were pushed into undesirable quarters in Philadelphia's slum quarters.

Architects are said to have figured out how to bring building costs lower than anyone ever conceived possible for construction of this type.

And Uncle Sam, through the housing division of the public works administration, thinks enough of Roosevelt's "forgotten man" to invest something more than $1,000,000 in the project. Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes signed the contract for the construction and fifteen hours later workers were on the job. More than 1,000 will be given employment—and, needless to say, they will all carry union cards.

Fought the Politicians.

The launching of this great project marked the end of a long and bitter fight with political and financial interests determined to scuttle the venture before it could get launched. Mayor "Hampy" Moore, a faithful member of the Vare machine, held up the enterprise for months, contending that government aid to private housing was "unfair competition" with the local landlords.

Builders and real estate interests fought the proposal at every step. Only the united action of the city council, which overrode Moore's veto, saved the program from disaster.

LABORERS' UNION WINS WAGE INCREASE STRIKE

Burlington, Ia.—The Common Laborers' union here won its first victory of this year, according to President Leo Burke, when a five-hour strike was called on the Meinberg laundry job due to a contractor's refusal to pay the union scale. Shortly after the men walked out the contractor signed an agreement to pay the union rate of wages.

The Laborers' union was organized fourteen months ago, and has aided materially in advancing the labor movement here and securing improved conditions for the workers by means of collective bargaining.

CLOTHING WORKERS WALK OUT AGAINST WAGE CUT

Los Angeles, Cal.—The Los Angeles local of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America is vigorously conducting the strike against Kurtzman Bros., who violated their agreement with the union by insisting upon a 20 per cent wage reduction. The walkout occurred ten weeks ago and the men are standing as solid as when they first came out, not one desertion then or since.

Union officials claim the concern is violating the NRA code of fair competition for the clothing industry and attempting to undermine the faith of their competitors in the union. It is also claimed that the concern has refused to submit its case to the regional labor board as requested by the union.

Hearst Would Return Idle To Charity Rolls

That's Implication of Publisher's Argument for Suspension of Recovery Agencies to Await Convenience of Business.

By JOSEPH A. WISE

Chicago, Feb. 15.—William Randolph Hearst's latest front page double-barreled editorial attack upon NIRA says that NIRA is a deterent rather than a help to industrial recovery and should be suspended until business is able to stand the added load. Hearst says that the principles embodied in the national industrial recovery act were enacted into law as a matter of "social justice" which can well await the convenience and pleasure of big business for their practical application.

Hearst, publisher of a national chain of daily newspapers, two of which are in Chicago, quotes with much unction the utterances of Ogden L. Mills, the aristocratic former secretary of the treasury, who attacked NIRA in a speech made in Kansas and which Mills and his friends hope will pave the way to the presidency of the United States in 1936. It is amazing how many reactionary, mossback presidential politicians have their lightning rods up, and it is still more amazing that Hearst, the former iconoclastic poseur, is in their camp body and breeches, with all of his bridges burned behind him.

Hearst would have the NRA, the PWA, CWA and the other alphabetical recovery setups abolished and a return of the unemployed to the charity rolls. He doesn't say that in so many words, but that is the implication of his weird and bewildering arguments.

There are thousands upon thousands of the world's most skilled mechanics and efficient white collar workers roaming the streets of Chicago in idleness and despair; men whose families have been broken up and scattered to the four winds; men who have terribly deteriorated and are unable to perform their old-time tasks efficiently when they get a chance for a few days' employment; men who, because of the depression, will never be able to hold down a regular job again—human wreckage upon the sands of time.

Hundreds of thousands of adults of both sexes, and still other hundreds of thousands of young boys and young girls are roaming the highways and byways of the land, loading up every empty box car and gondola and riding the rods and the front end of passenger trains, foraging off every countryside and "jungling up" in every "jungle" camp in the nation—men and women, boys and girls all indiscriminately, heartlessly, brutally, shamelessly thrown upon a horrible human scrap heap that will exact a fearful toll from future generations.

Hearst and his Chicago newspaper publisher colleagues—McCormick, of the Tribune, and Knox, of the Daily News—are free with their criticism, but the only solution that they offer is a return of the few who have been rescued to the charity rolls, the box car, the gondola, "the front end," "the rods" and "the jungles."

That is the thing that Hearst and other metropolitan daily newspaper publishers are advocating—that and a resort to the old Napoleonic trick of promoting a foreign war to escape the wrath of the people at home.

Washington, Feb. 15.—The senate passed the administration bill, already adopted by the house of representatives, appropriating $950,000,000 for federal unemployment relief and Civil Works administration projects, on which about four million workers have temporary employment.

Senator Cutting, of New York, offered an amendment increasing the appropriation to $2,500,000,000 to lengthen the civil works program. Senator LaFollette of Wisconsin offered an amendment increasing the appropriation to $1,500,000,000 with the same object in view. Advocates of the increases declared the bill actually contemplates complete demobilization of the 4,000,000 working men and women employed on civil works projects by May 1. It was stated that the demobilization will begin as soon as the president approves the measure and will continue at the rate of 250,000 a week until the entire 4,000,000 are thrown back into the permanent unemployed army at the mercy of public and private charity, which means living standards far below elemental decency.

In support of increasing the appropriation and continuing the civil works employment for the 4,000,000 who now have jobs on these projects, Senator Cutting said:

"What are we going to do with the unemployed? Are we going to let them starve? There are twice as many of them off the CWA rolls today as there are on them. We have to take care of those people before we consider turning off the rolls of employment any of those who are already there."

In urging the senate to adopt his amendment for a larger appropriation to continue the civil works projects, Senator LaFollette declared:

"To vote down this amendment will bring despair to 4,000,000 men and their dependents who have been lifted out of the slough of despond and given the chance to resume their places as respected citizens. The defeat of this amendment and the rapid abandonment of civil works which must follow will mean the end of an activity chiefly responsible for averting another collapse."

After several hours debate the senate defeated Senator Cutting's amendment by a vote of 58 to 10, and then knocked out Senator LaFollette's proposal by a vote of 52 to 14.

So it looks like the garbage cans of charity before long for the millions of civil works projects employes and their families.

Positive action to prevent contractors on public works financed by Uncle Sam from discriminating against union workers was taken this week by Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes. The regulations also apply to all work under the direction of Harry L. Hopkins, CWA chieftain.

Politicians, too, must keep hands off, Ickes declared. In this connection, he said he had received protests

COOKE CALLED BY SECRETARY PERKINS

Along with other labor representatives from different sections of the United States, Editor Cooke has answered a summons from Secretary of Labor Perkins to attend a conference concerning needed labor legislation. Mr. Cooke is representing the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and was accompanied by Commissioner W. E. Jacobs, of the Department of Labor for Tennessee.

During Mr. Cooke's absence T. R. Cuthbert is pinch-hitting in getting out this issue of The Labor World. When asked how long he intended to be away, Editor Cooke replied he would have to see this week's Labor World and find out if it was safe for him to return Saturday. If not, he threatened to "lay low" until the storm blew over.

What Next!

Two London men have been granted a patent on a telephone system in which connections are made by voice alone. The patent covers "voice operating switching," described as "in a telephone transmission system, a means under control of voice currents for the transmission of an auxiliary preliminary signal with the commencement of talking and an auxiliary following signal upon cessation of talking."

DIZZINESS
relieved by Black-Draught

"I decided to take Thedford's Black-Draught, as I had been having bilious spells," writes Mr. Charles E. Stevens, of Columbus, Ind. "When I get bilious, I feel sleepy and tired and do not feel like doing my work. It is hard to tell how I feel, but I do not feel good. I get awfully dizzy. I know then that I had better take something. After I found how good Black-Draught is, that is what I have used. I guess it rids me of the bile, for I feel better—don't feel like I am dropping off to sleep every time I sit down. That, to me, is a very bad feeling."
Now you can get Black-Draught in the form of a SYRUP, for CHILDREN.

Employers Stepping Over Line

Labor has nothing to say about the prices of finished products. That is the employer's business.

The employer has nothing to say about the methods to be used by labor for organizing, and for selecting representatives for collective bargaining with the employer. That is the business of the workers.

Any interference with this business of the workers is to be resented. It is against the law. The business of the employer is to meet with the representatives of labor, and deal with them, just as it is his business to buy raw material and to sell finished products.

Employers have been encroaching upon this field of the workers. Gradually they are being made to see where the line is drawn between their business and the business of the workers. Labor may frequently have to point out to them this line. It will greatly simplify matters if they fill attend strictly to their own business. Then labor can attend to its business and the outcome will be more agreeable and comfortable all around.

No Placee for Child Labor

In the first case reported to the national recovery administration, the national compliance board withdrew the Blue Eagle of a Hannibal, Mo., laundry owner charged with working his son, under 16, for more than three hours a day, in violation of the president's recovery agreement.

"The decision emphasizes the fact that, regardless of relationship, child labor will not be tolerated under the NIRA," the recovery administration announced.

This announcement apparently indicates the inflexible determination of the NRA not to permit child labor. As such it will meet with the applause of all enemies of child labor.

The Hannibal case was a minor violation but it should serve notice on industry, big and little, that there is no place for the exploitation of child workers under the national industrial recovery act.

Too Many Exemptions

In urging a separate code for the cooperage industry, Joseph Kunz, of the Coopers' International union, revealed a situation that is holding back progress under some of the codes.

"The lumber code," he said, "ostensibly provides a 40-hour week, but it is so whittled and chiseled away by exceptions and exemptions that it becomes nearer being a 48-hour week and, actually, many employes are being forced to work, 12, 14 and even 16 hours per day under that code. That is because it provides no daily limitation of work hours but has loopholes of averaging and of seasonal and other exceptions."

Labor realizes fully the danger of nullifying hour reductions by too many exemptions. It knows that if the way is open for evasions of the codes, unscrupulous employers will take full advantage of the situation. It knows it is better that codes be drawn so there are no loopholes in the first place and it is striving to impress this fact on industry and the national recovery administration.

Ban on Alabama's Convict-Made Goods Upheld by Supreme Court

Washington, Feb. 15.—The supreme court refused Alabama permission to bring suit against Arizona, Idaho, Montana, New York and Pennsylvania to prevent them from enforcing laws prohibiting the sale within their borders of products made by convicts in Alabama prisons.

The state of Alabama requested permission to bring such suits in connection with the federal Hawes-Cooper act, which provides that when convict-made goods from one state are shipped into another they come under the laws of that state the same as if manufactured therein. The five states mentioned have enacted legislation which bars from their borders prison-made goods from other states. Alabama claimed these laws seriously restricted the sale of goods made by the inmates of her prisons and consequently were detrimental to the state's finances.

In the ruling, announced by Justice Butler, the court unanimously declared the proceedings in the form in which Alabama had presented them could not be entertained and decided on their merits.

The opinion analyzed the extent to which the closing of the market in the five states would reduce Alabama's revenues.

Leave to file suit would not be granted, it added, unless the threatened injury to Alabama was clearly shown to be of serious magnitude and imminent.

In the absence of a specific showing to the contrary, it will be presumed, the court said, that no state will attempt to enforce an unconstitutional enactment to the detriment of another, and this places a greater burden on Alabama to establish fully and clearly all essential elements of its case.

Teachers Start Action to Collect Judgment for $90,000 Back Wages

Charlotte, N. C., Feb. 15.—Employes of the public school system here, from teachers to officials and janitors, brought mandamus proceedings in Mecklenburg superior court against the Charlotte city government demanding payment of approximately $90,000 to them in back salaries for the school year 1932-1933. The school employes recently secured judgments against the city in this amount and the mandamus proceedings are an effort to enforce the judgment. It is claimed the city had money available to pay the entire bill.

Monroe Paper Makers Union Enrolls 2,000

Monroe, Mich.—Local No. 132, International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, has probably made the greatest headway of any new labor organization in southern Michigan or northwestern Ohio. Although it was not organized until Aug. 28, shortly after the national recovery act got into operation, the efforts of Karl Oberbacher, secretary and business agent, have pushed the membership past the 2,000 mark and new members are still being enrolled. All of the five paper manufacturing concerns here have recognized the union.

Bakers Try Five-Day Week To Make Jobs for Idle

Washington.—The Bakers' and Confectioners' local union here adopted the five-day week plan as a temporary experiment in place of the old six-day week. Union officials declare that a large number of men who were formerly employed one or two days a week are now employed three or four days and that a few who were totally unemployed have been put to work.

Bakeries employing union members were reported to be lending splendid co-operation in the union's efforts to help the jobless. The shops still operate on a six-day week, due to the nature of this business.

Toronto Mayor Hits Municipal Wage Cut

Toronto, Can.—Mayor Stewart, in a vigorous address before the board of aldermen, definitely opposed the scheme for a sliding scale of pay cuts averaging 15 per cent for municipal employes. He received loud applause from citizens in the council chamber when he roundly scored employers who took advantage of men's poverty by paying wages that were "a positive disgrace." He declared that in many instances Toronto employers paid such low wages that the city is virtually forced to subsidize industry by giving direct relief to the workers.

JOSEPH O'MALLEY, GLASS WORKERS' OFFICIAL, DIES

Fostoria, O.—Joseph O'Malley, for many years national representative of the American Flint Glass Workers' Union of North America, died here, Jan. 27, as a result of a nervous breakdown extending over a number of months.

He returned to his home here just before Christmas from assignments for his union in Connellsville and Mt. Pleasant, Pa. During his stay here his condition grew worse, and he passed to his reward after years of faithful service in the economic interest of thousands of glass workers and all working men and women.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

One southern dress manufacturer, who had to lose his Blue Eagle before he would be good, has been converted. It was the old story of the increased production which comes from the shorter workweek of which the steel industry stands as the most important witness.

This manufacturer wrote to the National Recovery Administration: "Since our operators are getting 30 cents per hour and only working 40 hours per week, they are working with more pep and some are producing from 25 to 35 per cent more work. Not only are they producing more work, but they are producing from 25 to 35 per cent more work. Not only are they producing more work, but they are producing better work."

This factor in production, long known to students of labor problems, and to efficiency engineers who know their stuff, will doubtless furnish many pleasant surprises to some of the unwilling members of industries coming under NRA, and will probably puzzle some of them for a while.

Brutality of stupid and incompetent police in applying the unspeakable "third degree" system of forcing confessions from guilty or innocent alike has long been regarded as obsolete, outmoded and inhuman. One reads with satisfaction that the United States Department of Justice has rejected the use of the "third degree" in its war on crime. This may be taken as an indication that detection is to be made more intelligent and therefore more effective.

Recently, also, there was begun a nationwide campaign to abolish this practice through better police regulations and state laws. New school penologists will see in these two assaults on an ancient evil another victory in their long fight for just, humane and efficient law enforcement.

The third degree harks back to the days of the Inquisition. As a means of getting at truth, the torture of suspected criminals is the same as the old ordeals of fire and water. It is the device of policemen too stupid or lazy to get the real facts of a crime. And, denials to the contrary, even in this day of scientific research, the third degree is being practiced widely throughout America.

In his report to the Wickersham commission, Investigator Ernest Jerome Hopkins reported proofs of 67 cases of forced confessions in appellate court records between 1920 and 1930. In the past 20 years there is not a single record of such practice in England.

"To defend the third degree is to advocate lawlessness," the Wickersham commission found. "The practice of coercing confessions is a violation of constitutional rights. Many forms of the practice are crimes."

Government can not stamp out crime by turning criminal.

The American Flint Glass Workers' union has just secured wage increases of 10 to 17½ per cent, restoring the record high wage levels of 1929 and 1930. Achievements like this are convincing arguments in favor of trade union organization under the banner of the American Federation of Labor.

Flint Truck Drivers Win Union Wage Rate Strike

Flint, Mich.—Truck Drivers' Local Union 332 here won a decided victory for unionism in a short strike against the management of various coal yards.

The matters in dispute between the dealers and the drivers concerned wages and union recognition. Robert M. Pilkington, of the conciliation bureau of the United States department of labor, came here to adjust the matter, and after the strike had lasted thirty-six hours brought about an agreement in which the employers accepted the union wage rate and agreed to sign new union contracts.

LAUNDRIES SETTLE STRIKE AS CITY SHUTS OFF WATER

New York City, Feb. 15.—Following issuance of an order by Mayor Guardia shutting off the water supply of two Brooklyn laundries because they owed the city for water, the laundries agreed to settlement of a seven weeks' strike affecting about 500 workers. The strikes settled were at the Colonial Laundry and the Sunshine Laundry.

Settlements were reached through intervention of the NRA regional labor board. One laundry owed the city $17,000 and the other $20,000. The mayor admitted that the labor policies of the laundries was a factor in his order.

The basis of settlement provides that the workers shall get the state minimum wage of 31 cents an hour and that Section 7-A of the NRA code, guaranteeing to workers the right of collective bargaining, shall be observed by the employers. All strikers are to be rehired and strike-breakers discharged.

After the conference, Local 135 of the International Laundry Workers' union officially called off the strike. The negotiators considered the settlement of these two strikes as giving promise that ten other laundry strikes in Brooklyn, involving 2,500 employes, would be ended soon on a like basis.

California Plasterers Awarded 30-Hour Week

Sacramento, Cal. — Edwin M. Daugherty, commissioner of corporations, signed the state code for the plastering industry which provides that no employe in the industry shall be employed for more than six hours per day, or for more than five days per week. The code was concurred in by T. W. Reardon, director of the department of industrial relations.

All contracts entered into after December 31, 1933, come under the provisions of the code, which includes plasterers, lathers, plasterers' tenders (hod carriers), building laborers, modelers, model makers and casters.

The hourly rates set by the code as the minimum wages are: Plasterers, $1.25; lathers, metal furring, $1.25; lathers, all nail-on work, including exterior, $1.25; plasterers' tenders, $1.10; modelers, $2; model makers, $1.25; casters, $1.12½; laborers, $0.83 1-3.

OIL LABOR BOARD'S DECISION SEEN AS ADVANCE FOR LABOR

A. F. of L. Head Approves Ruling in Case of Magnolia Petroleum Company as Distinct Step Forward in Giving Workers Full Rights Under National Recovery Act.

Washington, Feb. 15.—Decision of the petroleum labor policy board that employes of the Magnolia Petroleum company's refinery at Fort Worth, Tex., should hold an election to choose their own plan of representation for collective bargaining was approved by President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor.

President Green, however, took exception to a portion of the decision which provides that workers may decide whether they wish to bargain collectively with the Magnolia company. He criticized this part of the decision as misleading and unworkable.

"The decision of the petroleum labor policy board," Green said, "marks a distinct step forward in defining the meaning and provisions of Section 7-A of the national recovery act. Labor has consistently held that Section 7-A meant all that this board declared it meant. Labor has constantly maintained that Section 7-A guarantees to workers the right to organize into bona fide trade unions, to bargain collectively and to select representatives of their own choosing. Any interference on the part of employers with the exercise of the right of the workers to organize into bona fide trade unions is a clear and definite violation of the national recovery act.

Law Violation Found.

"Evidently the petroleum labor policy board found that the management of the Magnolia Petroleum company engaged in an active campaign to prevent the workers from organizing into bona fide trade unions and from engaging in collective bargaining through representatives of their own choosing. As a result, the petroleum labor policy board has ordered an election so that the workers may determine, by a secret ballot, the union through which they wish to bargain collectively with their employers.

"There is one feature of the decision of the petroleum labor policy board with which labor takes issue. It is that portion of the decision which provides that workers may decide as to whether they wish to bargain individually with the corporation. Labor contends vigorously that Section 7-A provides for collective bargaining and not for individual bargaining.

"The labor provisions of the national recovery act were enacted into law for the purpose of conferring upon workers the right to bargain collectively rather than in their individual capacity.

"The impracticability of individual contracts is made apparent when one considers that through individual agreements there may be as many different agreements in operation as there are individuals to bargain with. An agreement in operation at a manufacturing or industrial plant must, for all practical purposes, be uniform in application. Individual agreements are impracticable and unworkable under the national recovery act."

In approving the decision of the petroleum labor policy board, Secretary of the Interior Ickes, the oil administrator, said the a petition of the majority of the Magnolia Petroleum company complained that the workers had been denied the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. An investigation by the board revealed that a plan of the company denied the workers the right to choose their own method of collective bargaining, he added.

Unions Forge Ahead In Huntsville, Ala.

Membership Grows from 36 to 2,600 in Few Months—Retail Clerks and Insurance Agents Add Many Recruits.

Huntsville, Ala.—Organized labor's drive to enroll all of the workers in this district in trade unions is meeting with success.

Jack W. Ellison, Jr., general organizer of the Retail Clerks' International Protective association, declared that Huntsville is about the hottest trade union center he has seen. All of the employes of three large stores have joined the union and in six more concerns most of the clerks carry union cards.

Local No. 1 of the United Association of Insurance Agents of America initiated a large number of applicants. Organizer Ted Williams was enthusiastic over the outloog and declared that by midsummer he expected the local would have a 100 per cent membership of union agents.

Last fall there were only about thirty-six union men in the Huntsville district. From that small number today approximately 2,600 working men and women carry union cards. With the clerks and the insurance agents meeting with such success among the workers in these two callings it is believed that the rest of the workers here will undoubtedly see the advantages of union membership.

A certain man was recently talking about the annual statement of a certain well-known local company. "The man who wrote that," he said, "reminds me of a window cleaner who was doing his work when a very loud crash brought the owner of the office into the room.

"What was that," he asked.

"Ladder slipped, boss!"

"Have you broken the window?"

"No, not all of it."

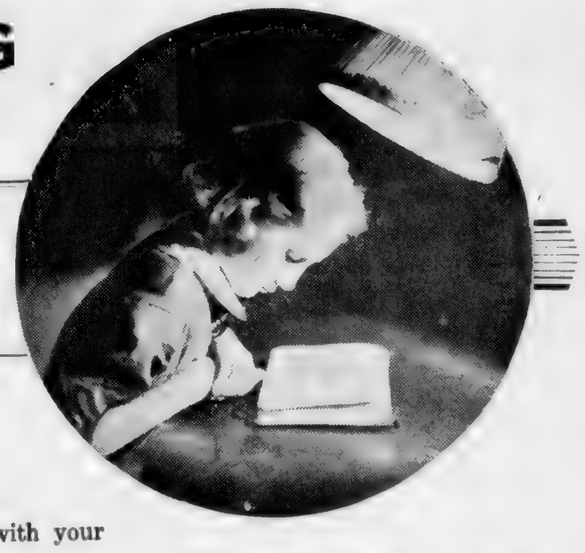
HAVE YOU EVER "checked up" on your LIGHTING?



IMPROPER LIGHT such as this often results in EYESTRAIN . . . sometimes causing NEAR-SIGHTEDNESS

WHY take chances with your eyes, or the sensitive eyes of your children, when good light costs so little? With the new Electric Rates you can improve your home lighting at little or no additional cost—now that nearly every home can use a certain amount of electricity without increasing the electric bill.

An easy way to check your home lighting is to select some small type in your newspaper and see if you can read it comfortably by your favorite reading lamp. But for a more accurate test . . . phone for one of our Home Lighting women to come to your home and actually measure your lighting.

These ladies will bring with them a "light meter," an instrument which records various amounts of light. With it you can tell at a glance just how much light you have in any part of your house—and can easily determine the kind and size of light bulbs you should use for proper light. There is no charge for this service.

PROPER LIGHTING is no longer a matter of guesswork . . . this shows the amount of light you are getting and the amount you should have for various purposes.

attitude toward organized labor was pointed out.

Fee-grabbing was roundly denounced and a committee of seven was named to represent labor on the Committee of One Hundred that will serve from some twenty or more local organizations to drive this public leech away forever. The fee-grabber drive was originally sponsored by the Civitan club, but the idea became so popular that everybody is in it now. The following were named on the committee: S. E. Smith (Teachers), W. F. Lange (Machinists), Joe Seibold (Plasterers), J. L. Carpenter (Carpenters), Walter Gardner (Typos), E. L. Bork (Plumbers), George Rogers (Musicians).

Fourteen delegates from Dalton, Ga., were introduced to the Central Body, and Brother Tom V. Crow, president of Textile Union No. 1893, spoke. From the spirit evidenced in Dalton generally, it won't be long before a non-member in Dalton will be hard to find.

All in all, the labor movement in Chattanooga is coming into its own. The working people are becoming conscious of their economic power, and the way they are started, they are going places.

Auntie—Well, Junior, give me a kiss and you shall have a nice new penny.

because he and his subordinates were ignoring "influence," but that policy will be continued.

Union workers, both skilled and unskilled, must be obtained through local unions in the places where projects are being constructed, Ickes ruled. Only when the unions are unable to furnish the qualified men within forty-eight hours may contractors apply to the United States employment service.

Makes Chiseling Costly.

Inspectors employed and paid by the PWA to check on hours, wages and other labor conditions will also be instructed to see that this feature of the employment regulations is complied with in all cases, Ickes said, and added:

"Any irregularities regarding wages and hours and in hiring men will mean that the contractors' money will be held up and they will be left holding the bag. I am going on the theory that the way to stop chiseling is to make it expensive."

Ickes declared he is determined to prevent contractors from importing men into communities where local workers are available, a practice that was widespread under the construction program in the Hoover administration.

Workers Stranded.

In many instances workers brought into the communities were paid such low wages that they were forced to apply to charitable agencies for relief, and when the work was completed the contractor moved out and left the men behind.

In all cases, a preference is to be given ex-servicemen.

Both Ickes and Hopkins stated that there must be no discrimination against workers because of their economic views, and they insisted that every man must be free to join any union he chooses and that he shall not be penalized for protesting against conditions and demanding changes.

We used to gather gapingly on the street corner when we listened to a medicine show. . . Now we can hear it any time by sitting down comfortably near the fire and turning on the radio.

Helped By Cardui

Here's the true story of how Cardui helped Mrs. H. E. Dunaway, of McComb, Miss., as written by herself:

"I was sick and rather discouraged. I was so weak and thin, I was not able to do my work as it should be done. This made me fret a good deal, and did not help my condition.

"I had pains across my back and lower part of my body. My nights were spent in rolling from one side of the bed to the other, hoping I would soon go to sleep. Then when morning would come, I would be just as tired as when I went to bed. A neighbor, seeing how badly I felt, told me to try Cardui. After I had taken one bottle, I was much better. I kept on taking Cardui, and I was stronger and slept much better at night."

"HOME STORES" AND ATLANTIC ICE CORP. TO BE DISCUSSED

New Developments Are Indicated in 2 Major Matters

Candidates Will Be Guests of Central Body Delegates Monday Night — Open to Union Members of All Crafts.

Next Monday night will be "candidates' night" at Central Body, and those who have been invited will be given ample time in which to place their claims for nomination before the labor organizations of Chattanooga. It is announced that the meeting will be open to all local trades unionists, although it is stressed that due to the limited capacity of Roosevelt Hall the general public will not be admitted.

The meeting will open promptly at 7:30, in order that an important business session may follow the speechmaking.

Developments in the "Home Stores" and Atlantic Ice-Southeastern Brewing company affairs will be discussed at regular session of Central Body Monday night, and it is intimated that reports of committees having these matters in charge will prove unusually interesting.

The Southeastern Brewing company, a subsidiary of the Atlantic Ice and Coal company, chain corporation operating in the southeastern states, it will be recalled, are distributors for Lion Pilsener beer, and when the corporation decided to equip a plant for bottling and distribution of the beer, organized labor was given a "cold shoulder." This concern also has had some trouble with local code authorities, and was forced to give back pay to a worker who alleged he was "gypped" out of a part of his wages. Little or none of the beer is sold at present on the local market, and it is said sales in other localities are not as brisk as they might be.

Officials of Central Body stated that, with the coming of summer months, a campaign of publicity concerning the attitude of the corporation will be renewed, and will cover all territory where the chain operates.

It was also said that the retail price of ice will be watched locally with considerable interest, a sudden drop of 50 per cent. recently announced causing some concern as to the rate which will be charged during the next few months, when it is not believed the smaller concerns can manufacture the commodity and sell at the price now being charged.

'DONALD AGAIN IN THE LIMELIGHT.

Roy McDonald, "Big Shot" in the local grocery, bakery, dairy, drug, store, printing and "publishing" business, was again in the limelight this week when he announced that milk will be sold at his "Home Stores" at a price which dealers declare is below cost, as a "leader." McDonald's competitive methods have been the object of comment from time to time, and the NRA will probably be asked to again look into the business ethics of the self-styled "Individualist." McDonald was before the local board when the grocery code went into effect, having "sold" his stores to the various managers and "retired" from the retail grocery business, announcing the move as a "dream of years," but which, by a strange coincidence, came true at exactly the time when he would have been forced under the code to pay his managers $ per week each.

The "Home Stores" head also had a vision of himself as a great daily newspaper publisher, but this dream faded when his efforts to start as a modest weekly newspaper publisher grew into a snag when local business people declined to use his advertising columns.

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

Furniture Workers To Vote Shop Rules

An important called meeting of the members of Local 1882, Furniture Workers, is announced for Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 27, at 4 o'clock, in Room 3, Central Labor hall.

Officers of the local announce the purpose of the special session is to vote on shop rules and working conditions, and every member is urged to be present. Other matters of importance, it was said, will be taken up at this time.

Boot and Shoe Union Names Fair Shops

The Boot and Shoe Workers' Local No. 620 of Chattanooga take great pleasure in announcing to the brothers of other crafts that the leading shoe shops of this city now have union shop cards, and will in the near future have the stamp on all work put out by the following shops who are members of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union No. 620:

American Shoe Shop, 2424 North Chamberlain avenue.

Brainerd Shoe Shop, 3233 Brainerd road.

Belcher's Shoe Shop, 18 West Eighth street.

Dri-Shod Shoe Rebuilders, 16 West Sixth street.

Daniels' Shoe Repair Parlor, 17 East Seventh street.

Economy Shoe Shop, 6 East Seventh street.

Kenton Shoe Shop, 18 East Eighth street.

Lee's Shoe Shop, 1402 South Dodds avenue.

Lee's Shoe Shop, 2435 Glass street.

Model Shoe Rebuilders, 19 East Eighth street.

Murphy's Quality Shoe Hospital, 2014 East Main street.

Uneeda Shoe Hospital, 12 West Fifth street.

Vanderstoop's Shoe Shop, 122½ East Eighth street.

Willow Shoe Shop, 413 Willow street.

Post Shoe Shop, Ft. Oglethorpe, Ga.

Valley Shoe Shop, South Pittsburg, Tenn.

So in the future be sure you patronize shops who are members of the union, where you will get the highest grade of workmanship and quality.

We highly commend Mr. Shepherd on his criticism against the Red Star Shoe shops, who are not members of the Boot and Shoe Workers' union, and who will not be a member of said union until they comply with the NRA.

Signed.

Boot and Shoe Workers' Union No. 620.

Burlington Unions Elect Editor of Iowa Labor News

Burlington, Ia.—The Burlington Trades and Labor assembly elected L. P. Lavine to the position of editor of the Iowa Labor News, the publication of which is governed by a policy board of the assembly. In announcing the appointment, George T. Sharp, president of the assembly, said:

"We hope to furnish this community with a clean, conservative paper, where labor shall have a voice, and we solicit the co-operation of all affiliated organizations."

O'Connor Calls For Immediate Action On T. V. A. Power

Says Eyes of Nation Are on Tennessee Valley— Urges Support of President.

John T. O'Connor, mayor of Knoxville, who recently led a successful fight in that city for TVA power, brought to its feet a crowd which packed the criminal court room, second division, at the courthouse last Saturday night.

Mayor O'Connor was a special guest of the Citizens' league, which sponsored the gathering, and was introduced by Mayor Bass. The Knoxville official declared the Tennessee Power company had been given until the 25th day of February to say whether or not it wants to sell its lines, "and if it doesn't say by then we will build a plant."

The speaker declared the eyes of the nation are on the Tennessee valley, and called upon his hearers to place themselves on record squarely behind the program of President Roosevelt.

"The community," he said, "which wouldn't take advantage of the proposition for cheap power ought to have its head examined."

Paul J. Aymon called upon the crowd to go to Washington, if necessary, to appeal for building of the Chickamauga dam.

Resolutions, introduced by J. D. Bales and unanimously adopted, called for a special session of the Tennessee legislature to act on mortgage foreclosures; asked for a federal appropriation of $150,000,000 for public education; urging a special legislative authority for the city to take advantage of TVA power.

L. J. Wilhoite, president of the league, presided.

Roy Lee Improves At Oteen Hospital

Roy Lee, secretary of Local 79, Brewery and Soft Drink Workers, is reported as greatly improved in health after a brief stay at Oteen, N. C., where he and Mrs. Lee went when Roy developed an ailment which was thought to be serious and which failed to respond to the ordinary treatments. Report now is that Mr. Lee's trouble is not as bad as was at first believed, and that a good rest will put him back into good condition. All of which is good news to scores of friends of the old-timer.

CAHIR MADE STATE LABOR COMMISSIONER OF R. I.

Providence, R. I.—Gov. Theodore F. Green appointed Joseph T. Cahir, president of the Providence Central Labor union and vice-president of the Rhode Island State Federation of Labor, to the position of state labor commissioner. Mr. Cahir has been prominently identified with the Street Railway Men's Local Union No. 618, of which he is vice-president, for a number of years.

The state law passed in 1925 provides that the state labor commissioner shall be a bona fide representative of labor. Mr. Cahir is regarded as fully complying with this qualification.

ALL OMAHA BREWERIES WON FOR UNION SHOP

Omaha, Neb.—Organized labor here was tlated by the announcement of the officials of the local Brewery Workers' union that three Omaha breweries had signed up for the union shop, making this city 100 per cent union so far as the breweries are concerned. One other brewery has been on the fair list since last November.

UNION WINS BACK PAY AWARD FOR WAITRESSES

Vancouver, B. C.—Judge McIntosh in the county court here awarded $767 in wage claims for five employes of Love's cafe.

The employes had permitted the proprietor to deduct certain sums out of their weekly wages on the promise that they would be paid back in the summer months. The summer passed but no money was paid back, and when they asked for an explanation they were laid off. The claim was taken up by Colin McDonald, acting as business agent for the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' union, and the judgment secured.

LABOR PROGRAM IS APPROVED BY CONFERENCE

Washington Pow-wow Adopts A. F. L. Policies.

SEEK UNIFORMITY STATE LABOR LAWS

Southeastern Meeting to Discuss Possible Measures at Early Date.

A two-day labor conference which met in Washington last Thursday and Friday under the direction of Secretary of Labor Perkins adopted a program calling for uniform state labor laws and agreed upon the main outlines of labor legislation that will be urged in the various states.

The conference was attended by representatives of governors of forty-four states, comprising state labor commissioners, supplemented by representatives of state federations of labor.

W. E. Jacobs, commissioner of labor for Tennessee, represented Gov. McAlister, and R. M. Cooke, editor of The Labor World, represented the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

The model code of state legislation proposed by the conference, covers unemployment insurance, old-age pensions, workmen's compensation, child labor, hours legislation, minimum wages, employment exchanges and safety and health protection.

The enactment of uniform state labor laws has been part of the legislative policy of the American Federation of labor for many years. Organized labor has found that employers in one state would urge that labor legislation, such as old-age pensions or unemployment insurance, would handicap them in their competition with neighboring states. Employers in the neighboring states would argue likewise.

To bring about uniform practice so that such objections would become invalid has been militantly urged by the American Federation of Labor and the various state federations of labor.

This policy is well illustrated in the A. F. of L.'s model anti-injunction bill, model unemployment insurance bill, and in its drive for the adoption of the child labor amendment to the federal constitution. It was emphasized by the conference of representatives of the 109 national and international unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. which President Green recently convened in Washington to consider a broad program of both state and federal labor legislation.

The labor conference convened by Secretary of Labor Perkins recognized the significant importance of the American Federation of Labor policy and made uniform state labor legislation the motive force back of the six regional conferences which it proposed to set up in the effort to give the workers better protection from subversive employers.

An echo of the recent southeastern states conference was seen in the Washington pow-woy when it was determined to call another such session at an early date, and representatives of other groups of states promised to attend this session when held.

Providence Window Washers Enroll in Union Movement

Providence, R. I.—A thriving window washers' union was chartered here by the International Building Service Employes' union. The organization was established by William R. Guest, business agent for Providence Barbers' Local No. 285. The new union applied for affiliation with the Providence Central Federated union and the Rhode Island State Federation of Labor.

Arizona Labor Editor Chosen For State Compliance Board

Phoenix, Ariz.—Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, national recovery administrator at Washington, appointed L. W. Phillips, of Phoenix, to the position of state labor compliance officer of the national emergency council. Mr. Phillips is editor of the Arizona Labor Journal, published here. The appointment was made in connection with the new set-up of a state NRA compliance board.

Postal Employes Stage Gridiron For 4 Officials

Springfield, Dennis, George and Forbes Honored at Dinner.

Employes of the United States postoffice entertained their friends to the number of some 350 at Hotel Patten Thursday night, the occasion being a courtesy to the retiring and new officials — former Postmaster Willard Springfield, former Assistant Postmaster R. M. George, Postmaster Ernest Dennis and Assistant Postmaster George Forbes.

For some three hours the humorous jibes of Hays Clark, toastmaster, were interspersed with a few serious notes brought forth by various speakers and with entertainment features furnished by Mrs. B. F. Gannaway, Miss Anita George, Miss Alice Holt, Miss Betty Jane Burkhart, Miss Dorothea McPherson, the Letter Carriers' band and a radio team billed as Rex and Johnny.

W. Ed Hays, who was general chairman of arrangements, delivered the address of welcome, and suitable gifts were presented the retiring officials.

The banquet, described as one of the most enjoyable occasions of its kind in years, was sponsored jointly by local branches of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks, the National Association of Letter Carriers and the Postal Supervisors.

Daugherty Heads Postal Clerks

James Daugherty, veteran member and official of the Postal Clerks, was last Friday night elected president of that organization, succeeding Pitner D. Moore, who asked to be relieved of the "heavy" duties of chairman for personal reasons. Mr. Moore, however, accepted the vice-presidency, and thus remains near the head of the family. Mr. Daugherty has formerly served Uncle Sam's boys in the chief's role.

Gus "Himself" Griggsby was renamed secretary, and, carrying out their favoritism for the experienced members, the local again selected Claude Coppinger for treasurer. W. C. Carter, Eugene Melvin and Mr. Daugherty will constitute the welfare board, and there seems to be a feeling around the postoffice that affairs of the local will be in good hands during the coming year.

Delegates to Central Body will be named later by President Daugherty.

Union Officer Appointed To Michigan Plumbing Board

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Gov. Comstock called up Archie Schwartz, treasurer of the Grand Rapids Federation of Labor, on the telephone and informed him that he had been appointed a member of the new state plumbing board, which consists of two master plumbers, one journeyman, an engineer, and a state health officer, who is chairman.

Mr. Schwartz has been employed by the city of Grand Rapids for sometime as an inspector and has an enviable reputation as a conscientious worker in promoting the usefulness of his department. His appointment to this important state board is regarded as a compliment to organized labor.

Fort Pierce Bricklayers Establish Strong Union

Fort Pierce, Fla.—A thriving local of the Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers' Union of America was organized here with twenty charter members and a large number of applications to be acted on later. The new organization was installed by Ed Long, business representative of the Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers' Union of West Palm Beach, Fla.

San Rafael Dairy Workers Union Boosts Membership

San Rafael, Cal.—Members of the Creamery and Dairy Employes' union No. 304, of San Rafael, gave a jubilant note to their installment of forty-four new members in the local, which brings the membership up to nearly 100. As a result of extensive organization work the local expects to have 150 members in the near future.

PRESIDENT SCORES DAILY PRESS; TOLD TO "CLEAN HOUSE"

Mother of Ed Fisher Passes to Reward

Local trades unionists and other friends were grieved to learn this week of the passing of Mrs. D. S. Fisher, aged 62, at Fort Payne, Ala. Ed D. Fisher, at whose home deceased passed away, a son, and another son, H. H., of Chattanooga; two daughters, Mrs. Walter Allen and Mrs. Curtis Samply, of Fort Payne, and two brothers, S. B. Howard, of Bridgeport, Ala., and the Rev. B. H. Howard, of LaFayette, Ga. Funeral services were held Sunday at Fort Payne, with interment at Fisher cemetery.

Disabled Vets to Entertain Chief

At a recent meeting of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War plans were made for the coming visit of the national commander of that organization, Commander Joe W. McQueen.

A banquet will be given in his honor at noon on Monday, Feb. 26, and a mass meeting for the public at large will be addressed by Commander McQueen Monday night. This mass meeting will be held in the ballroom of Hotel Patten at 8 p.m. Prominent citizens, city, county and federal officials will welcome Commander McQueen to Chattanooga.

All ex-service men and their families as well as all who are interested in veterans' affairs are urged to attend the mass meeting and hear Commander McQueen. He is an able speaker and will discuss veterans' legislation, and the information he will give will be instructive as well as interesting.

Mayor Ed Bass will represent the city of Chattanooga, and Judge Will Cummings will represent the county government. The press will be represented by Will Shepherd, of the Hamilton County Herald; Adolph S. Ochs, of the Chattanooga Times; G. Fort Milton, of the Chattanooga News, and R. M. Cooke, The Labor World.

The federal government will be represented by Postmaster Ernest Dennis and Assistant Postmaster George Forbes. Father Francis T. Sullivan, Dr. Oliver Hart and Rabbi Abraham Fienstein will represent the ministry. Other prominent citizens who have accepted the invitation to be on the welcoming committee are: Dr. Alexander Guerry, T. C. Thompson, A. V. Snell, Dr. Barnett, of the Spanish-American Veterans' organization, and Silas, Williams, past national commander of the American Veterans, and Lyle Stovall, national vice-commander of the American Veterans. Col. W. S. Grant, commandant of Fort Oglethorpe, will represent the army, and Capt. B. Mankin, the reserve officers of this section. Frank Darwin, commander of the local chapter of the American Legion, will represent that organization.

The following committee of the Disabled American Veterans are in charge of all arrangements: Col. Charles P. DuVergey, post commander, is general chairman; Dr. Louis Prosterman, past commander, has charge of publicity. Others serving are: Rev. T. B. Cowan, Capt. W. A. Myers, W. W. Gann, J. C. Harrell and State Commander Walter L. Davis.

Teamsters and Chauffeurs Organize in Douglas, Ariz.

Douglas, Ariz.—A thriving local of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers of America, affiliated with the A. F. of L., was organized here through the efforts of Pete Puzzi, chairman of the organization committee of the Douglas Central Labor council, with the co-operation of other members of the committee.

All unions are very active in the southern part of Arizona and splendid work for the cause is being liberally donated by union men of this section.

Roosevelt Snaps Fingers in Face Of Implied Threat

Signing Newspaper Code, Chief Executive Sharply Rebukes Publishers and Declares Freedom of Press Is Not Menaced.

By B. C. CLARKE

Washington, Feb. 22.—Freedom of the press has no relation to newspaper chiseling and it requires no sanctimonious affirmation in a code of fair competition for daily newspaper publishers, said President Roosevelt in giving his approvel to the daily newspaper code. He administered at the same time the most stinging rebuke to these publishers in the daily newspaper field that has been handed out to an industry coming before the NRA.

The president's biting sarcasm and intimation of child's play antics was his reply to the smug insistence of these publishers that a clause relating to freedom of the press must be included in the code, with the implied alternative that if the clause was rejected, these publishers through their columns would "crack down" on Gen. Johnson and the Roosevelt administration.

Defies Implied Threat.

The chief executive snapped his fingers in the face of this implied threat, warned the publishers to clean their house within sixty days, and instructed the code authority to render a report to him on the clean-up at that time.

Approval of this code comes after six months' of wrangling and hair-splitting by daily paper publishers for a "freedom of the press" clause. And this clause, which was permitted to remain in the code, was characterized by the president as "pure surplusage" with "no meaning." It was permitted to remain in the code, he said, "because it has been requested and because it could have no such legal effects as would bar its inclusion."

Provisions of Code.

The code calls for a 40-hour week in cities over 50,000 people; 44 hours in cities of 25,000 to 50,000, and 48 hours in cities and towns under 25,000 people. A maximum eight-hour day is specified, with minimum wages of 40 cents an hour, and $11 to $15 a week for clerical workers, graded according to local populations. Employment of children under 16 years is prohibited except to deliver or sell newspapers in the day hours.

Question of hours and wages of workers in the news departments—reporters, artists, re-write men and sub-editors—is to be made the subject of a report to the president within sixty days. The president calls upon the government members of the code authority to give particular attention to provisions authorizing minors to deliver or sell newspapers, and calls for a report on this subject within sixty days. Manifestly the president is determined, even in the face of bludgeon blows from "the power of the press," to put an end to some of the chiseling, cheap practice, starvation wages, and cold-blooded treatment of unorganized employes, rampant from time immemorial in the daily newspaper field.

Commenting on the "freedom of press" clause, the president says: "Of course a man does not consent to what he does not consent to. But if the president shall find it necessary to modify this code the circumstance that the modification was not consented to would not affect whatever obligations the non-consentor would have under Section 3-D of NIRA. Of course, also, nobody waives any constitutional rights by assenting to a code. The recitation of the freedom of the press clause in the code has no more place here than would the recitation of the whole constitution or of the Ten Commandments. The freedom guaranteed by the constitution is freedom of expression, and that will be scrupulously respected—but it is not freedom to work children, or do business in a fire trap, or

Q.—What will be the effect of the president's fixing of the value of the dollar at 59 cents?

A.—Discussing this question, the current American Federation of Labor monthly survey of business says: "The best expert opinion is clear that we may expect a rise in prices to follow this devaluing of the dollar, and some believe that the general price level may rise more than 50 per cent. Workers must look forward to a period of rising living costs and their living standards will be reduced unless wages rise proportionately."

Q.—When was the first organized effort to shorten the workday in the United States?

A.—In the decade 1830-1840, when the "10-hour movement" swept the industrial centers, with extensive strikes. Philadelphia building trades workers won the shorter day in 1833. The movement then spread rapidly and was successful for the building trades in most cities.

A Laxative that costs only 1¢ or less a dose

NEXT TIME you need medicine to act on the bowels, try Thedford's Black-Draught. It brings quick relief and is priced within reach of all. Black-Draught is one of the least expensive laxatives that you can find. A 25-cent package contains 25 or more doses.

Black-Draught is made of approved laxative plants, firmly ground so you take the medicine into your system just as naturally as you get nourishment from the food you eat.

Refreshing relief from constipation troubles for only a cent or less a dose—that's why thousands of men and women prefer Thedford's Black-Draught.

A Sound Decision

The labor section of the national industrial recovery act declares that employes coming under codes of fair competition "shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives."

From the inception of the codes, company-union and other antiunion employers have violated the plain mandate of the act. They have used "interference, restraint, or coercion" in elections held for employes to choose their representatives. Gradually the national labor board, vested by the president of the United States with complete authority to supervise elections, is meeting this issue in decisions on specific cases setting forth just what employer activities are outlawed by the statute.

One of these activities is cited in the order of the board annulling the first election held at the plant of the Hughes Tool company, of Houston, Tex., and ordering a new election under the supervision of the New Orleans regional labor board.

In the first election the ballots specified a straight vote on the issue of the organization to represent the employes, many of whom had joined the International Association of Machinists. The ballot called for a vote for the "Employes' Welfare Organization of the Hughes Tool company" (a company union) or for the "American Federation of Labor."

Before the election Col. R. C. Kuldell, president of the company, issued a circular advising the workers which way to vote. He declared that if representatives of an outside union were chosen the company would put limitations on its dealing with them, and even threatened victimization of trade unionists if a majority of the employes voted for the A. F. of L. union. One paragraph of the circular read:

> "Whether justified or not, the fact is nonetheless real that there exists in the minds and hearts of your foremen, superintendent, manager and general manager an antipathy to the professional organizer and representative."

The circular then stated that employment relations in the company's plant are purely personal and added that it would be very unfortunate for the employes to jeopardize their interests by selecting representatives who were not favored by the foremen and officials. Col. Kuldell did not mince his words. He bluntly told the workers that company officials and supervisors would grant favorable conditions of employment to employes who voted against the A. F. of L. union and for the company union. He said:

> "There being, therefore, older men who do not join the outside union, and new men constantly coming in, who cannot be made to join under the law, there will always exist before each foreman the choice of personnel and the selection for advancement, the selection for special tasks, carrying higher rates, and for transfer to the toolroom, and regardless of your vote, or the law, human nature remains as it is, and your foreman will be prejudiced in their selection to that employe who has not divided his allegiance and loyalty between his employing company and an outside organization.
> "It would seem to me, therefore, the course of personal advantage to each employe to retain this position of favor with his foreman and superintendent. * * * *"

As a result of the plain coercion contained in this letter the employes cast 1,000 votes for the company union and 600 for the A. F. of L. union.

When the conditions under which the election was held were reported to the national labor board, the board annulled the election on the ground that the circular letter issued by Col. R. C. Kuldell was "an illegal interference with the employes' free choice of representatives," positively prohibited by Section 7-A of the national industrial recovery act.

This is a clear-cut decision. It should be a warning to other company-union employers in their misguided efforts to nullify the labor section of the recovery act and defy the president of the United States, who administers it.

Individual Bargaining

The petroleum labor policy board's decision in the case of the Magnolia Petroleum company, of Fort Worth, Tex., is a notable defense of the collective bargaining principle set forth in the national industrial recovery act. The weak part of the decision is its consideration of the individual contract.

According to the evidence, officials of the company induced a part of their employes to surrender their right of collective bargaining, guaranteed by the recovery act, and persuaded them to favor a company union promoted by the company itself. The board decided that these were improper activities, designed to present the employes from fairly considering and voting for the unrestricted right of collective bargaining and representation authorized by the statute.

To give the employes the opportunity to exercise the full legal rights, the board ordered an election with the ballot in such form as to authorize the employes to vote for collective bargaining through a bona fide union, or for the company union, or to bargain individually with the company. It is the individual bargaining provision on the ballot which organized labor criticizes. On this point William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in a statement commending in general the decision of the board, said:

> "Labor contends vigorously that Section 7-A provides for collective bargaining and not for individual bargaining. The labor provisions of the national recovery act were enacted into law for the purpose of conferring upon workers the right to bargain collectively rather than in their individual capacity.
> "The impracticability of individual contracts is made apparent when one considers that through individual agreements there may be as many different agreements in operation as there are individuals to bargain with. An agreement in operation at a manufacturing or industrial plant must, for all practical purposes, be uniform in application. It must be a collective agreement applying to all workers subject to its provisions.
> "Individual agreements are impracticable and unworkable under the national recovery act. For this reason that part of the decision of the petroleum labor policy board providing for individual bargaining and individual agreements is misleading and impracticable."

Regarding the decision of the board that the ballot should be in such form as to authorize the employes to bargain collectively and not to merely choose representatives for bargaining, Mr. Green said that "so far the election of representatives has meant little, as the employer has not been forced to enter into real collective bargaining even after such representatives were elected." He added that the decision "seeks to remedy this weakness of the law, and to make Section 7-A really effective."

WILL F. CHAMLEE
Candidate for COUNTY JUDGE

States position on matters of interest to the workers of Hamilton County.

Mr. Chamlee, in a speech at Oak Hill schoolhouse Wednesday night, gave the following as his position on various matters of interest to local workers

OLD AGE PENSION

In keeping with the Rooseveltian emphasis upon human values, I will use my influence in support of the old age pension.

Men and women who have grown old in the service of their communities and country and find themselves in the evening of life without funds with which to live, should not be deprived of their social standing and placed in some isolated spot to spend their remaining days among strangers. They should not be placed in a home for old people or in a county poorhouse, and made to feel that they are subjects of charity. With the old age pension they will be enabled to spend their old age among their friends and surroundings of their choosing.

EMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

In my opinion the employment situation can never be satisfactorily adjusted without employment insurance, and I favor and will support suitable legislation to that end. I believe that all men and women should be assured of an opportunity to earn their living and a chance to maintain their self-respect and independence.

FEDERAL CHILD LABOR AMENDMENT

I favor and will support a bill ratifying the Federal Child Labor Amendment by the State of Tennessee. The place for the children of this country is in the schoolroom and out in God's given sunshine, and not in the mills and factories, there to be deprived of the opportunities that are so necessary for the proper development and welfare of our future citizenship.

COOPER-HAWES BILL

I favor and will use my influence in support of the ratification of the Cooper-Hawes Bill, which will prevent the shipment of convict-made goods into this state, because I believe that men who are in business and employ free labor cannot compete in the open market with goods that are made in the penal institutions of our country, and I believe that the ratification of this bill is necessary to preserve the independent business people of this state.

FREE TEXTBOOK LAW

In the City of Chattanooga, as well as other large industrial centers of the State of Tennessee, free textbooks are furnished to the school children. I heartily approve of a law of this sort, and I think it should apply to Hamilton County, as well as the entire State of Tennessee. My reason for supporting this bill is due to the fact that we find so many parents who are unable to buy the school books for their children, and for that reason are compelled to keep their children away from school, or appeal to some agency of charity in order to get a set of books for their children. Children should not be started among other children as a subject of charity, but should be given an even chance to make progress.

FEDERAL INJUNCTION BILL

I will favor and support legislation ratifying the Federal Injunction Bill, because I believe that the injunctions in labor disputes have retarded and persecuted men who were striking in order to better the living conditions of the people of the community.

NATIONAL RECOVERY ACT

I am behind the program of President Roosevelt with all my heart and soul, and I believe the State of Tennessee should ratify the National Industrial Recovery Act, in order to control industries and businesses that only do a business within the State of Tennessee. The purpose of this National Recovery Act is to create jobs for the unemployed, and we know that there are many of those in this county who should be employed. It is also the purpose of the law to increase wages, in order to increase consuming power. The lack of consuming power in this country has been very largely responsible for the serious economic conditions through which we have been passing. It is also the purpose of this law to abolish cut-throat competition, and this law should have the support of all good citizens.

$950,000,000 RELIEF BILL SIGNED; 150,000 CWA WORKERS DISCHARGED

Four Million Are to Be Separated from Government Payroll by May 1 and Returned to Jobless Army of Unemployed.

Washington, Feb. 22.—Despite the fact that President Roosevelt signed the bill appropriating $950,000,000 for various forms of federal relief for the unemployed and their dependents, Harry L. Hopkins, civil works administrator, ordered 150,000 persons employed on civil works projects dismissed immediately.

Those continued on the payroll will be tossed back into the jobless army at the rate of 10 per cent per week until May 1, when the last of the 4,000,000 out-of-works furnished with jobs and pay envelopes during November and December will be fired and turned over to charity relief organizations, public and private, whose policy is to restrict relief to enough food to keep the jobless from starving and enough fuel to keep them from freezing.

The wholesale slaughtering of the workers' right to earn a living was begun by dismissing workers on federal projects as follows: War department, 42,000; navy department, 4,000; lighthouse commission, 300; fisheries, 1,700; coast guard, 350; veterans administration, 700; bureau of mines, 225; coast and geodetic survey, 15,000; Tennessee Valley Authority, 16,600; agriculture, 56,000; Smithsonian institution, 1,100; interior department, 1,750; public health service, 50,000.

The only grain of hope held out by the authorities to the dismissed civil workers employes was that perhaps some of them would later be given jobs on federal public work projects, which it is expected will afford considerable employment by spring.

UPHOLDS AUTO WORKERS.

St. Louis.—After hearing both employes and employers, the St. Louis regional labor board has recommended to the Chevrolet Motor company and Fisher Body company here that the firms re-employ, without discrimination, all workers laid off for union activity. The board pointed out that the national recovery act is explicit in forbidding interference by the employers with the workers' right to organise.

ORGANIZED LABOR WINS UNION PAY ON CWA JOBS

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 15.—The trade union movement here won a decided victory when Maj. J. D. White, director of civil works projects in Sangamon county, ordered the payment of union labor wage scales on all CWA jobs.

Heretofore all common laborers have been paid 50 cents an hour, the minimum wage scale under CWA terms. The new scale for this county will be 55 cents an hour for common laborers. A separate rule for skilled crafts fixes the following wage rates: Boilermakers and hoisting engineers, $1.25; plasterers, $1.50; sheet metal workers, $1.25; slate and tile roofers, $1.25; roofer's helpers, 65 cents; lathers, $1.25; electrical workers, $1.25; bricklayers, $1.25, and all others, $1.20.

Nagging Pains are WARNING SIGNALS

TEMPORARY pain relief remedies may save you much suffering at the moment, but putting a mask over a warning signal does not clear up the condition it was telling you to avoid.

When periodic pains, due to a weak, run-down condition, distress you, treatment for the cause of the trouble should be started without delay.

Take Cardui to build up against the nagging symptoms of ordinary womanly ailments. It has been in use for over 50 years. So many women praise CARDUI, it must be good to have the widespread use that it has today. Sold at drug stores.

Heavy Fines for Employers Violating Women's Pay Law Recommended by Judge

Montreal, Canada, Feb. 22.—Persistent violation of the women's minimum wage law for the province of Quebec should be penalized by heavier fines than are now possible, according to a statement made by Judge Marin in denouncing as socially subversive the actions of employers who continually violate the law.

Judge Marin's remarks were made after the Mayflower Dress company had been found guilty of underpaying sixteen women employes by $3.97 weekly and the Royal Silk mills had been convicted of failing to furnish information regarding wages paid thirteen girl employes to the minimum wage board. Both concerns were fined the maximum, $50 and costs, at present allowed by the law.

This wholesale condemnation of the low wage employers was approved by Lucien Rodier, attorney of the Quebec women's minimum wage board. He said that the prevalence of convictions like those referred to by Judge Marin made it necessary to take steps "to increase the fine to a reasonable sum." He explained that at present many employers who are underpaying women workers several hundred dollars yearly do not mind appearing before the court once or twice a year and paying a $50 fine.

"What we are trying to do," Mr. Rodier told the court, "is to increase the fine to that of the Ontario board.

"If this were done, first offenders would be liable to a fine from $200 to $500 plus costs and if they appeared before the court a second time they would be liable to both a $200 to $500 fine as well as a two-month jail sentence."

No goods nor service are "just as good" except they are guaranteed by a UNION LABEL and SHOP CARD.

MORE ABOUT DAILY PRESS

Hearings on the proposed newspaper code several months ago were significant chiefly in the smug complacency of publishers who came with a "take it or leave it" attitude to present their code of fair competition. No kings and captains of monopolistic industry, big trusts, and company unionized shops, have marched before NRA with quite such an arrogant goose-step. And that their threats of reprisal were not idle ones has been significant since in the assaults and attacks upon the whole recovery program by the McCormicks, Hearsts and other barons in the daily newspaper field.

Plainly if this code was not accepted as presented—plainly if underpaid reporters slaving for ten, twelve and fourteen hours a day on the low pay of clerical workers were not excluded as "professional workers—Johnson and the whole recovery program of re-employment and cessation of wage slashing would meet with an assault similar to the kaiser and his legions overrunning Belgium and reducing treaties to "scraps of paper."

Here were the mighty lords wielding the "power of the press," and filling their own pockets through practices that were being barred in every other industry and trade in the land.

The president has answered this bluff; he has "cracked down," and he indicates pretty clearly that even newspaper barons are not exempt from the laundrying process of dirty industries.

Nolle—How did you get out of admitting that your father was electrocuted?

Prosse—I said he occupied the chair of applied electricity at one of our public institutions.

Wagner Asks More Power Of Congress For Labor Board

Strengthening of Collective Bargaining Clause of Recovery Act and Increased Authority for National Labor Body Indicated in New Move of Fighting Chairman.

Washington, March 1.—Strengthening of the collective bargaining clauses of the national recovery act (Section 7-A) and increased power in the hands of the national labor board are indicated as the probable result of Senator Wagner's report to President Roosevelt of the work of the board up to Feb. 1.

"This record has a disquieting aspect," said Senator Wagner. "Its percentage of settlements is too low, and some settlements have been unsatisfactory. The statistics bear out what the boards in many regions have been reporting for some time; namely, that the willingness to use the boards, displayed by the majority, is encouraging the impediment of a small minority whose desire for industrial peace is not uppermost.

"This impediment is increasing. Certain industrialists' effort to challenge the board's authority is symptomatic. Far more significant is the fact that three-quarters of all the disputes involve complaints of denial of the rights of self-organization and collective bargaining contained in section 7-A of the recovery act."

Wage Complaints to Fore.

These references refer to the difficulties of the board with the company union propaganda, especially at Weirton and other steel centers.

As causes of disputes, after violations of Section 7-A, came wage questions, with a growing complaint of reduced weekly earnings from the shorter work week under the industrial codes. Other facts about the work of the NLB and of seventeen of its eighteen regional labor boards are:

Disputes involve 914,000 workers, total of 1,818 cases, of which 69 per cent were settled. About 650,000 workers put back to work.

Strikes Total Nearly 600.

Strikes total 599, 80 per cent settled; 197 other strikes averted—a total of 482,500 returned to work or kept at work in strike situations.

Cases pending, 322, or 18 per cent, involving 164,000. Mere existence of boards settles some strikes. One-half of settlements by agreement, most of which promise durable peace.

Industrial elections supervised, 97; 70 cases jointly submitted for arbitration. "Support of the majority is very reassuring and indicates that the general principles of the boards are soundly based," says the report.

Workers reinstated (exclusive of strike figures) after charges of discrimination, unjust layoffs, etc.; regional, 6,852.

Government to Continue Part In Economic Life, Woll Says

To Turning Back to Old Order, Labor Man Declares—Holds More of Profits of Industry Must Go to Workers to Assure Recovery and Future Progress.

New York City, Feb. 22.—Under the recovery program, the federal government is concerned with the double problem of introducing the element of balance and control and planning in our national life and there can be no return to the old order, Matthew Woll, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, said at a dinner held here by the Economic Club of New York.

"There will be modifications in administration, there will be changes in the law, but from the broad policy of the identification of government with the whole enterprise of our national economy, there will be no turning back," Woll declared.

"Our old political structure," the speaker continued, "is a new economic structure—erected, in the first instance, 'for the emergency.' The constitution, private property rights, existing contracts, freedom of contract have by no means been set aside. But for all practical or economic purposes they have been subordinated. The process has been easy and natural because the constitution, private property rights and freedom of contract had already been radically revised in value for the overwhelming majority of people by the semi-collapse of the old economic system. The silent revolution which has been going on consists in the fact that at last the predominance is all universally recognized; and that recognition has been, at least temporarily, embodied in the political system itself. The constitution and the old legal and political systems remain, but they have not much left to operate on."

More of the profits of industry must go to the workers if there is to be balance between consumption and production, Woll pointed out. "Raising the national standard of living is imperative not alone for permanent recovery, but to avoid further retrogression," he said. "Industry, in proportion as the increased purchasing power of the masses exceeds the increasing productivity of industry, depressions will become less severe. But recovery will continue until a balance is struck between consumption and production. That means that there must be in addition to radical reduction in the present disproportion between profits and wages, between dividends, interest, rent on the one hand and, on the other hand, the income of the masses—whose purchases account for 83 per cent of our home market and three-fourths of our entire market, domestic and foreign.

"To restore this balance, to assure more consumption and less investment in machinery of production, the first requisite is to advance mass purchasing power by every method adapted to that purpose. The second requisite is to use every practicable method to keep down excessive profits."

Hamilton Unions Vote German Goods Boycott

Cap Makers Win Wages and Hours Strike—Molders Ask Compensation for Silicosis.

Hamilton, Can.—The Hamilton District Trades and Labor council at a largely attended meeting unanimously decided to boycott German-made goods and services as a protest against the action of Chancellor Hitler's government in destroying the German trade union movement.

The Hamilton Molders' union went on record in favor of amending the workmen's compensation act of Ontario so as to include molders in the workers who receive compensation for the dread occupational disease, silicosis.

Some years ago the act was amended to include granite cutters and placer miners. The molders asked to be included at the time and were disappointed because their request was not granted. The proposal of the local molders' union has been approved a number of times by the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada.

The Cap Makers' local union here won a victory in the settlement of the strike of twenty-two employes of the Victoria Cap works which lasted eight weeks. The firm granted the 40-hour week and a wage increase averaging from 5 to 10 per cent.

Memphis Reports Quarter-Million Profit on Water

Depression Cuts Profit for Taxpayers, But Large Sum Is Turned Over to People.

The depression of 1933 hit Memphis an awful blow. Yeah!

The waterworks in that city, owned and operated by the people, returned a net (clean) profit for the year of $233,791.74. Of course, this was after deductions for reserves, bond sinking funds, bond interest and all that sort of thing had been figured, and represented the amount turned into the general fund of the city to pay the taxpayers' general expenses.

Recalling that two or three years ago the Memphis waterworks turned $1,100,000 into the general fund as a "pick-up" for the taxpayers, the extent of the depression effects may be seen; however, a notation in the annual report says that 499 new service connections were made during the year, and 58,980 lineal feet of water mains were extended, which would seem to the layman to indicate that some improvements were made despite poor business caused by the depression.

The report, printed in last week's issue of the Memphis Labor Review, is interesting. A chart shows the apportionment of each dollar of waterworks income, as follows: Administrative expense, 2 cents; meter readers and inspectors, 2 cents; general office and miscellaneous expense, 9 cents; operation of plants and distributing system, 17 cents; bond interest, 24 cents; bond sinking fund, 14 cents; net profit, 20 cents.

The following paragraph also appears in the report:

The water department does not participate in the distribution of the tax money paid by citizens of Memphis, but is operated and maintained entirely by revenue derived from the sale of water, and all interest and sinking funds to retire bonds issued for the use and benefit of the water department are cared for out of this revenue.

Whereas, Almighty God, in His infinite wisdom, has removed from our midst the wives of our esteemed and worthy brothers, Earl Trundle and Leonard Lofty; Whereas, the officers and members of Local 175, I. B. E. W., deeply regret their untimely passing; therefore, be it

Resolved, by the members of Local 175, I. B. E. W., That we extend to our brother members our heartfelt sympathy and condolence; and be it further

Resolved, That as a body we stand in silence for one minute in their memory, and that a copy of these resolutions be spread on our minutes, and a copy sent to our bereaved brothers, and a copy sent to The Labor World for publication.

Augusta Schoolhouses Are Built by Union Carpenters

Augusta, Ga.—Two public school buildings here will be erected by union carpenters as the result of the agreements negotiated by J. W. Luquire, business agent of the local union of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, with the Claussen Lawrence Construction company and Wheatley & Mobley, local contractors.

Under the terms of the school building contracts, the construction companies may elect to conform with the public works administration regulations governing the employment of skilled workers by securing them either through the re-employment bureau or through agreements with local trade unions. Both of the firms chose the latter method.

It was announced that other unions in the building trades expected to secure union contracts for the employment of their members on the two school buildings.

CALL IS ISSUED FOR CONVENTION OF FEDERATION

Labor Forces to Meet at Memphis May 7.

IMPORTANCE OF MEETING STRESSED

Officials Point to Many Major Problems to Be Considered by Delegates.

What will probably be one of the most important conventions in the history of the Tennessee Federation of Labor is scheduled to be held at Memphis, beginning Monday, May 7, and continuing "until the business of the meeting is concluded," usually three days.

For the first time since the federation was organized, some two decades ago, no convention was held last year, economic conditions being regarded as not favorable for a gathering at that time. Consequently, an accumulation of matters "left over," together with the unusual situation, politically and economically, facing the workers this year, will doubtless work to make the sessions the largest attended, as well as the most important, and it is expected that local unions will make a special effort to have representatives present.

Among the items stressed by President Aymon and Secretary Cheek, in the call issued this week from Nashville headquarters, are the following:

"We should pledge the support of candidates for public office to old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, ratification of the child labor amendment to the federal constitution and much other legislation as may be indorsed by the Tennessee Federation of Labor. Consideration should be given the T. V. A. and many other problems that confront the state and nation."

The call follows:

Nashville, Tenn.,
Feb. 23, 1934.

You are hereby advised that the Thirty-seventh annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor will convene at the Gayoso hotel, Memphis, Tenn., Monday, May 7, 1934, at 10:30 a.m. The sessions will last about three days. Hotel rates are herewith enclosed. It is the hope of the convention committee that all delegates will use the regular hotel headquarters.

Basis of Representation.

Article III, Section 3. The Tennessee Federation of Labor shall be composed of one delegate from each trade union and labor organization in the state. Trades and labor councils and district bodies shall be entitled to three delegates. All bodies must be affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Section 6. No delegate shall be admitted to a seat in the convention whose organization is in arrears with his local union.

Article XI, Section 8. No delegate shall be seated in the annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor unless his organization is affiliated with the central body in his city, if one exists, and said central body affiliated with the American Federation of Labor; this shall not apply, however, to fraternal delegates from farmers unions. Nor shall any delegate be seated who does not wear union-made clothes if same can be obtained in the community in which he lives; nor any delegate who in charge of any work that can be done with union labor who does not use same, when charges to this effect are sustained.

Credentials are enclosed herewith in duplicate. The original must be filled out and given to the delegate to be presented at the convention. The duplicate must be filled out and mailed at once to W. E. Cheek, secretary-treasurer, 207 Polk avenue, Nashville, Tenn.

It is very essential that each Central Body and local union in the state be represented, due to the fact that a large majority of the employers are leaving no stones unturned to defeat the purpose of the NIRA and to prevent the organization of their employes.

We should pledge the support of candidates for public office to old age pensions, unemployment insurance, ratification of the child labor amendment to the federal constitution, and such other legislation as may be indorsed by the Tennessee Federation of Labor. Consideration should be given the T. V. A., and many other problems that confront the workers of this state and nation.

Bakers Add Another 100 Per Cent. Union Shop to Their List

McMillan Company Signs Agreement—'Sunny Maid' Products Gain.

Local union bakers Thursday announced another bakery has signed the union agreement, and it is expected that products of the McMillan company, of Dodds avenue, shortly will carry the label of the international union.

"We are glad to announce the addition of the McMillan bakery to the ranks of 100 per cent. union shops," an announcement by officers of the local union says. "This is the second bakery to sign our contract, the first being the Dixie bakery, at 340 East Ninth street, originators of 'Dixie Maid' products. The Dixie bakery is increasing its production, having recently placed upon the local market a high-grade brand of cinnamon rolls and dinner rolls, which are of the same quality as the 'Sunny Maid' bread. These new products are destined to reach the same degree of popularity which has marked the introduction of Dixie Maid bread, and we hope all members of organized labor and their friends will make it a point to patronize these as well as other union-labeled products.

"Organization movement in the local baking industry is progressing nicely, with the exception of the Colonial bakery, which we have not as yet been able to convince that organization of the workers is to the best interest of labor as well as the employer.

"However, we are greatly encouraged, and with the undivided support of our brothers and sisters of other crafts, we are confident that eventually we will have a 100 per cent. organization in Chattanooga."

J. F. Anderson Is Called By the Angel of Death

Charter Member of Local Succumbs Following Complication of Ailments.

Chattanooga trades unionists were shocked last Saturday morning to learn of the passing, at a local hospital, of James F. Anderson, veteran boilermaker of the Southern railway and charter member of his local lodge. Mr. Anderson passed away at the age of 67, victim of asthma and complications. He was stricken suddenly while at his work, and died some time before arriving at the hospital.

Mr. Anderson, affectionately known to scores of friends among local trades unionists as "Shorty," was an earnest and able advocate of organized labor, and until his advancing age prevented, had been active in the work of his organization. He was one of the best known and best loved of the "old-timers" in the local movement, and his demise will be regretted by all members of organized labor.

He is survived by two sons, Edmund and James; two daughters, Mrs. Jack Horner and Mrs. Nimrod Dobbs, all of this city; two sisters, Mrs. Davis Lucas, of this city, and Mrs. Dave Oliphant, of Norman, Okla.; a brother, T. E. Anderson, of this city; four grandchildren, Dwight, Franklin, Wilma Ruth and Betty Horner. He was a member of the Woodmen of the World, Ridgedale lodge, F. and A. M., Boilermakers' union and Tabernacle Baptist church.

Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon, with a large number of prominent citizens attending to attest their appreciation of a splendid citizen.

The Labor World joins hundreds of friends in deploring the passing of Brother Anderson, and in extending to his surviving relatives heartfelt condolences in their loss.

N.R.A. to Investigate Labor Disturbances At Ford Auto Plant

National Compliance Board Announces Intention to Make Detailed Study of Company's Refusal to Bargain Collectively With Employes of Edgewater Plant.

Washington, March 1.—Edsel Ford, president of the Ford Motor company, has been notified by National Compliance Director William H. Davis that the latter will proceed with a detailed investigation of the company's alleged refusal to bargain collectively with employes of its Edgewater, N. J., plant.

This decision, it was announced, was prompted by the Ford company's refusal to participate in the hearing held Feb. 23, when nearly a score of employes appeared to substantiate charges previously made in affidavits.

In a letter to Mr. Davis, informing him "it is not our intention to be represented or to take any part in the hearing . . .," B. J. Craig, secretary of the Ford company, asserted ". . . in our opinion, the answer and exhibits which have already been sent to you are more than sufficient to disprove, beyond any possibility of doubt, the complaint that this company violated Section 7 of the code for the automobile manufacturing industry."

Reinstatement of Men Refused.

Briefly, the employes charged that following their "walkout" on Sept. 29, in an effort to force better working conditions in the Edgewater plant, company officials persisted in a refusal to reinstate the strikers in a group and that all efforts to bargain on the point have been repulsed.

It was said by several of the employes that spokesmen for the United Automobile Workers, Local No. 18613, an American Federation of Labor affiliate, attempted to dissuade the workers from the "walkout" and that the plant manager, Neil S. Brown, also remonstrated with them.

One of the striking employes produced a letter written to him by Edsel Ford in which the latter asserted "Mr. Brown is our representative and you may discuss with him the working conditions to which your letter makes reference."

Strikers Charge Threat.

"It has always been our chief care," Mr. Ford asserted in the letter, "to see that working conditions in our plants shall be of the highest possible order, and we should be glad to hear of any instance where this may not be the case."

It was charged at the hearing, however, that on a previous occasion when the strikers sought to confer with Brown, he threatened that unless they returned to their machines within five minutes they would be permanently barred from the company's employment. It was also charged that following the "walkout," some fifty-one strikers were "blacklisted" and that none of them have since been rehired.

These complaints of the company's alleged violation of Section 7-A of the national industrial recovery act were filed with National Recovery Administrator Johnson by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and were referred by the administrator to Mr. Davis.

Full Pay Cut Restoration Voted For Federal Employes by Senate

Five Per Cent Will Date from February 1, With 10 Per Cent Effective July 1—Leaders Predict House Approval.

Washington, March 1.—By the close vote of 41 to 40 the senate voted to restore the entire 15 per cent pay cut which the last congress imposed on over half a million government employes in the administration's determination to compel the already underpaid federal workers to contribute $189,000,000 annually to satisfy the capacious maw of that insatiable hobby which salary slashers call "balancing the budget."

The action of the senate was taken on the amendment offered by Senator McCarren of Nevada to the independent offices appropriation bill substituting the restoration of the entire 15 per cent reduction for the 10 per cent recommended by the senate appropriations committee, which, in turn, was a substitute for the 5 per cent restoration contained in the bill as it passed the house of representatives. According to the senate amendment, 5 per cent of the restoration will be available as of February 1, and the remaining 10 per cent on July 1.

House Approval Seen.

Representative Joseph W. Byrns, of Tennessee, majority leader in the house of representatives, and Representative Clifton Woodrum, of Virginia, chairman of the house appropriations subcommittee in charge of the bill, made the prediction, after conferences with Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, majority leader in the senate, that the house of representatives will approve the full restoration adopted by the senate.

House Gave Only 5 Per Cent.

President Roosevelt originally recommended a restoration of 5 per cent of the 15 per cent cut, effective next July. The house appropriations committee included the 5 per cent in the independent offices appropriation bill and prevented any increase in this figure by passing a "gag" rule which prohibited all amendments to the bill except those approved by the appropriations committee.

Senate Committee Gave 10 Per Cent.

After listening to the arguments in favor of full restoration made by representatives of organized labor, headed by William Green, president of the A. F. of L., the senate appropriations committee recommended a 10 per cent restoration, 5 per cent applying as of Feb. 1 and another 5 per cent on July 1, with the proviso that the president should restore the remaining 5 per cent if the increase in the cost of living warranted it.

Senate Wipes Out Entire 15% Cut.

By adopting the McCarran amendment the senate authorized the restoration of the entire pay cut and decided to balance the budget by other methods than reducing the earnings and living standards of hundreds of thousands of deserving government employes.

The independent offices appropriation bill as amended by the senate will be referred to the house of representatives, whose leaders predict that the amendment for full salary restoration will be overwhelmingly approved and go to the president with the indorsement of both houses of congress.

PORT ARTHUR BAKERS WIN STRIKE FOR UNION SHOP

Port Arthur, Tex.—The Port Arthur local of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers' International Union of America won a vigorous strike against a number of leading bakeries in this city. As a result the bakers secured a contract providing closed shop working conditions, including a fixed wage scale of $22 a week for journeymen and $17 for apprentices.

The only concession made by the union was an agreement to accept as members four men whom the Peck bakery had imported. Peck took back all of his foremen and several of his other employes.

What Next!

Water mains that are virtually everlasting seem to be an accomplished fact, says "Scientific American." One of the largest manufacturers of iron pipe has concluded an extensive research program on a corrosion-resistant lining for iron water pipes. As a result there is now on the market a pipe lined with a special cement composition which is said to have three times the durability of ordinary cement mixtures. The pipe is intended primarily for carrying water or solutions which rust, corrode and otherwise attack unprotected metal pipe.

A new type of glass, developed for use in air conditioning, has just been announced. The new glass, called Aklo, has the unusual property of transmitting 70 per cent of the sunlight but holding back the heat rays so barely 30 per cent pass through. Aklo window panes, bringing in the wanted light with a minimum of summer heat, are expected to cut the cost of air conditioning and remove a barrier to air conditioning development.

Bad Taste in Mouth, Sour Stomach

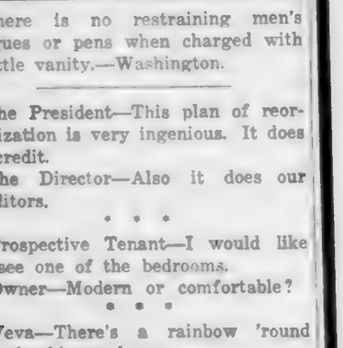
"I have suffered a great deal from biliousness and constipation," writes Mrs. D. C. Jones, of Waterloo, Ala. "When I get bilious I have a bad taste in my mouth, have sour stomach, my color is bad, and I get dizzy and feel awfully bad. I have headache constantly. When I take Black-Draught it relieves me and I feel like a new person. I don't think there is a better medicine than Black-Draught."

Now you can get Black-Draught in the form of a SYRUP, for CHILDREN.



Those Newspaper Squawks

The daily newspapers are squawking at the deserved castigation handed them by President Roosevelt when he signed the newspaper code. They say he imputed to them the desire to exploit childhood, operate in firetrap buildings and violate laws against decency. This, they charge was unfair.

What the president said was: "The freedom guaranteed by the constitution is freedom of expression, and that will be scrupulously respected—but it is not freedom to work children, or do business in a fire trap, or violate the laws against obscenity, libel or lewdness."

In all likelihood, Mr. Roosevelt did not mean that many daily newspaper publishers actually desire freedom to exploit children, to operate in a fire trap or to outrage decency, though all these things have been done by newspapers in the greed for profits. Undoubtedly what he had in mind was that under cover of the cry for freedom of the press publishers were seeking, consciously or unconsciously, to avoid complying with hour and wage regulations such as are required of other business enterprises.

If this was what the president was thinking, he only voiced in his comment on the code what newspapers have said themselves. One of these was the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, a newspaper of the highest standing, which said some months ago:

"The impression is fast gaining ground that it is not freedom of the press than certain newspaper elements are campaigning for, but freedom to escape keeping their agreements under NRA; that these elements, while editorially urging all other industries to cooperate with NRA, want their business exempt from its responsibilities."

Soaring Prices Menace Recovery

Soaring prices are now one of the greatest problems before the NRA. If prices race far ahead of wages, as they threaten to do, recovey will be seriously retarded if not halted.

At present, prices seem to be rapidly getting the better of individual incomes. It would be suicidal to permit this to continue. Wages must go up to keep pace with prices or buying will be curtailed. This will decrease business activity and unemployment, with its long train of evils, will again begin to increase.

As the American Federationist points out, there is no sense in increasing business activity unless we face frankly the need for balancing production by maintaining purchasing power adequate to buy output.

"The output of production must always be sold in order to maintain going capacity," the Federationist adds. "To complete the purpose for which production is carried on, we must plan so that those who would normally buy the output have incomes that will enable them to fit into the production program."

Fight on Destruction

Erosion, which within fifty years has created such a change in the aspect of the earth in vast areas of the western part of the United States that it approximates that of a geological epoch, is being fought by the civilian conservation corps. The work is intended to save millions of acres of fertile land from being transformed into washes by the invasion of gullies bearing water streams which strip the soil.

The CCC anti-erosion program applies on a large scale what the individual farmer applies when he terraces his land to prevent washing. Whole valleys many miles in width and length have been ruined for crops and grazing by erosion, which was intensified by the destruction of top cover by overgrazing of cattle and sheep.

The work being accomplished along this line suggests anew the desirable permanency of the CCC establishment. The federal authority has long been urged to conduct just the sort of general conservation activity as it is now pursuing as an emergency employment measure. Continuation of the work with a somewhat reduced establishment is likely to be deemed imperative.

rade Body Puts Up Shutters When Labor Demands Fair Play

hamokin, Pa., Feb. 15.—The Shain Chamber of Commerce was away to rest this week, with orized labor acting as pallbearers. re were no mourners or flowers. ack of the demise is an intereststory that emphasizes the power labor when it is in earnest.

, Some time ago the Central Labor council of Shamokin and Coal township bluntly told members of the board of directors of the local chamber that its anti-union policies, as well as those of the state and national bodies, would be met by retaliatory measures, chief among which taining membership.

That ultimatum exploded like a bombshell. The chamber named a committee to investigate, and it reported back the workers meant everything they said and suggested that the only way of regaining their favor was to dissolve the organization.

"Since the borough and township are solidly organized, and most of the citizens of these communities are working people," the report said, "the anti-union policies of the chamber are out of tune with the times."

That hint was sufficient. By almost unanimous vote the chamber decided to put up the shutters.

UNION WANTS PROPERTY CONFISCATED BY HITLER

Amsterdam, Holland.—The executive committee of the International Building Workers is taking active steps to recover the possessions of the International confiscated by Chancellor Hitler's Nazi government in Germany. The committee decided that affiliated organizations should be requested to approach the governments of their respective countries, informing them of the facts in the case and urging them to use their influence to regain the property of the Building Workers' International and its affiliated bodies.

Whitney Hits 15 Per Cent Wage Reduction for Railway Workers

Ten Per Cent Slash Has Already Cost Employes $388,000,000—Greedy Bond Owners, Instead of Wage Rates, Handicap the Railroads.

Washington, Feb. 22.—A. F. Whitney, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' association, characterized the demand of the railway managers that a 15 per cent pay cut be imposed on hundreds of thousands of railway employes as "evidence that rail managers have learned little, if anything, from the tragic events of the depression."

Railroad stockholders and bond owners have already received millions of dollars in benefits from the 10 per cent pay cut which has been in operation for many months and which expires on June 30. The railway managers demanded that the 10 per cent be continued and an additional 5 per cent added.

In a statement discussing the proposed pay cut Mr. Whitney said:

"The railroads are not suffering from the wage scales paid their employes. The real difficulty with the railroad industry is caused by the burdensome load of fixed charges and the refusal of railway bondholders to contribute their share to the relief of the industry.

"Railway labor is not disposed to continue to assume that burden. It is about time that this industry was compelled to put its house in order so it can fulfill its responsibility to aid in a revival of business and discontinue the exploitation of its employes."

Whitney asserted that since the 10 per cent wage reduction began in February, 1932, employes have lost $388,000,000 in wages, while more than 800,000 of them have been without work. On the other hand, he estimated that the roads had benefited by repeal of the recapture clause, increases in rates, and public aid to the extent of a billion dollars.

Millions in Government Loans.

Since the depression the federal government, through the Reconstruction Finance corporation, has loaned the railroads $400,000,000, of which sum $60,000,000 has been returned. For many of the loans the government does not have sufficient collateral to guarantee repayment.

Judge Tuttle's "Stench Bomb" Charge Denied in Detroit Injunction Case

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 22.—William Thorpe, attorney for Sign Writers' Local Union No. 591, called Federal Judge Arthur Tuttle to order for an entirely unwarranted charge which the judge made against organized labor in the hearing on the injunction demanded by the Cinderella Theater company against picketing the theater.

Manager Kramer, of the theater, testified that two stench bombs had been placed in the theater early in 1933, whereupon Judge Tuttle stated, according to press reports, that bombing outrages usually accompanied labor disputes. In challenging this statement, Mr. Thorpe said:

"The legitimate trade union movement does not countenance such outrages. It has been the experience of organized labor that when dairies, cleaning and dyeing firms and theaters got to fighting among themselves that bombings took place."

In discussing strikes and the right to picket, Mr. Thorpe added: "The strike is the only weapon which the working man has and he has the right to peacefully picket and disseminate literature telling the public of their grievance with their employers. This right is guaranteed them under the federal anti-injunction law."

Graphic Arts Code Signed by Roosevelt

Washington, March 1.—President Roosevelt signed the graphic arts master code, which is an amalgamation of nearly fifty separate codes and covers all the printing trades except photoengravers, electrotypers and stereotypers.

Only four other American industries exceed graphic arts in the value of products, which in normal times is $2,400,000,000 a year, with employes normally numbering 400,000.

The code establishes a 40-hour maximum work week and fixes minimum wages for different classes of skilled employes.

For administrative purposes the industries are divided into two major groups—one dealing with the production and distribution of printing, and the other with its specialized distribution.

The administrative agency will be a board called the National Graphic Arts Coordinating committee, consisting of twenty members. Each of the four major divisions of the production side of the industry will have a national compliance board, and each of the industries within each national product group will have a code authority. Provision is made for regional compliance boards and regional code authorities.

Provisions of the code setting up three separate labor boards were deleted by President Roosevelt's order. In their stead the president directed creation of a bipartisan board consisting of five employers, five labor spokesmen, and an impartial chairman to handle all labor controversies under the code.

Relieves Women's Pains

"I was very thin and pale," writes Mrs. F. H. Scott, of Roanoke, Va. "I suffered from weakness and a severe pain in my back. This pain unnerved me, and I did not feel like doing my work. I did not care to go places, and felt worn, tired, day after day.

"My mother had taken Cardui, and on seeing my condition she advised me to try it. I have never regretted doing so. I took three bottles and it built me up. I gained in weight, my color was better and the pain left my back. I am stronger than I had been in some time."

Cardui, the purely vegetable medicine which so many women take and recommend, is sold by local druggists.

The 14" RULE
—a measure of safety for your CHILD'S EYES

IMPROPER lighting frequently causes a child to bring her book much closer to her eyes than the normal reading distance—which is 14 inches.

If this is allowed to continue it may lead to defective vision, and so we suggest that you observe the kind of light your child is reading under. Only the very best is good enough because, remember, about ¾ of all the knowledge she will acquire through life will come through her eyes.

You can help your child make progress in her studies and reduce the possibility of future eye trouble by paying attention to proper home lighting NOW. We will be only too glad to consult with you.

Why not use your extra kilowatt-hours to improve your lighting? With the new electric rates the majority of our customers have an allotment of extra electricity to use without additional cost.

Candidate for

COUNTY JUDGE

In seeking the nomination in the coming primary election on March 15th for the office of County Judge I want to make my position clear to the masses of the people.

I have been a resident of Hamilton county for forty-four years, twenty-two of which I spent as an active member of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Union. I am at this time a retired member of this local. All my life I have been an ardent supporter of Union Labor and the principle on which the Union is founded. I have endeavored in every possible way to merit the support of this great body.

For the past eleven years I have been a member of your county court and with the experience derived from this source, coupled with my natural desire to be in a better position to serve the masses of the people, I believe I am better qualified to execute the duties of this office to the satisfaction of all.

I have been indorsed by the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association, Branch No. 92, and will greatly appreciate your individual and united support.

Labor Board Orders Election Held By the Employes of Overall Plant

Company Union Employer Agrees to Stop Victimizing Trade Unionists and Recognize the Union If Employes Vote for It.

Washington, Feb. 15.—The National Labor Board decided to hold an election in the plants of the Union Overall company, Bordentown, N. J., to determine whether the employes wish to have union representatives to act for them in negotiations with the management to determine wages, hours, and working conditions, and if so, who those representatives shall be. The board reached this decision after a hearing at which representatives of the United Garment Workers of America and the company stated the case.

Mrs. A. Cressenti, a member of the shop committee representing the Garment Workers' union, charged that the company fostered a company union and asked that it be disbanded. She said that in December the company discharged two members of the union who were active in union work, both of whom had been employed by the concern for a number of years. She gave an account of attempts at mediation by the local compliance board, the state compliance board, and finally by the Newark regional labor board, which notified the company it had found violations of the labor section of the national recovery act and ruled that the two discharged union employes be rehired, which was done.

A report from Prof. D. A. McCabe, the member of the subcommittee of the Newark regional board which investigated the case, showed that Jacob Zobel, part owner of the plant, had stated before the regional board that he "would not recognize any outside union or sign an agreement with any union, but he would sign an agreement with a 'company union.'"

J. B. Tomlinson, city councillor of Bordentown, spokesman for Zobel, said that Zobel had changed his mind and that the company would now "deal with the official union." He added that the company will not do anything which may be construed as a penalty for joining the union before the election is held, and that after the election it would not exercise any discrimination against union workers.

Sioux City Butcher Workers Strike Against Armour's Antiunion Policy

Sioux City, Ia., Feb. 15.—The meat packers of Sioux City insist upon maintaining company unions in their plants in violation of the expressed purpose of the national industrial recovery act and wantonly flout the legal right of their employes to organize in bona fide unions and carry on active union work without interference from the packers.

The unionist and Public Forum, the official organ of the Sioux City Trades Union and Labor Assembly, gives the following description of the situation:

"Over three-fourths of the packing plant workers are organized in the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of America, and according to the NIRA that organization should be dealt with by the packers, but it isn't. Activity against the union on the part of officials at the Armour plant last week caused a walkout of all employes of the sheep kill. Union officials made the men go back to work pending the arrival of government officials."

It was expected that representatives of the national labor board would come here from Washington and take a vote of the workers as to which organization they wished to represent them under Section 7-A of the national industrial recovery act.

Arbitrary Position Lieut.-Col. Simpson Resented by Labor

State Director C. W. A. Evidently Doesn't Like Unions.

"We Will Set Wage Scales in Future," He Declares—Locals Flood Washington Officials in Protest Against Militaristic Finality of Colonel's Order.

Attention, Mr. Simpson!

A. C. Robinson, secretary of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, Friday morning received the following wire in answer to protest against the arbitrary action of Walter Simpson:

In accordance with new rules issued March 6 by CWA, prevailing wage established with employers in your locality, and actually received by your members, is the wage that will be paid on CWA work in future.

THOMAS E. BURKE,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Militaristic finality of the ukase issued by Lieutenant-Colonel Walter Simpson, in charge of C. W. W. work in Tennessee, has had the effect, locally, of disturbing conditions connected with the government projects, and has caused a flood of protests to come into Washington against the arbitrary stand of the official with respect to future wage scales.

Building trades unions, in particular, are "hot under the collor," and in some instances have refused to work for the paltry 75 cents per hour, twenty-four hours per week, total $18.00.

Although the law provides that prevailing wage scales shall be paid, the military man declares that 75 cents per hour shall be the scale, and dictates at the same time a contempt for organized labor and union wage scales. Regardless of union rules, he is quoted as saying, "We're going to set the rates from now on." Mr. Simpson was quoted as branding W. E. Cheek, secretary of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, an "agitator," and dismissed a suggestion that he might be displayed with the remark to the effect that "I am packing my bags now."

Aside from a flood of telegrams which went into Washington, to international union officials, President Green, Administrator Hopkins and Senators T. R. Cuthbert, on behalf of the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council addressed a comprehensive letter to Mr. Hopkins on March 4, in which he outlined the situation as labor saw it, and made the terse observation that "We lack his (Simpson's) military training which demands absolute and instance obedience, but we do not believe you will allow this to continue in this state." At press time Mr. Cuthbert had received no reply.

March 4, 1934.

Mr. Harry L. Hopkins,
Federal Relief Administrator,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Hopkins: I am inclosing herein a clipping from the Chattanooga News of March 3, 1934. In it Mr. Walter L. Simpson, state civil works administrator for Tennessee, is quoted as terming secretary of the Tennessee Federation of Labor as an "agitator," and also stating that organized labor has boosted its wage scale in order to hold the CWA up.

We are in Chattanooga organized labor has been compliant to the extreme because we realized the difficulties of such an immense and urgent undertaking as the CWA, and although we were things being done and not being done that we felt were not correctly according to the rules, we remained silent in the hope that they would work out by themselves.

When the Associated Press news office issued a story on Feb. 22, stating, saying that CWA wage rates for unskilled labor were to be reduced under certain conditions, I immediately wired you for confirmation and requested that you inform me of those conditions.

On Feb. 24 I received a reply from Mr. Perry A. Fellows, action chief engineer, which said "effective not later than March 2 wages paid employes will be the prevailing rate of wage for the kind of work performed in each local community but in no case less than 30 cents per hour. These instructions sent out by Hopkins Feb. 16. These rates subject to approval of state administrator."

I immediately visited the office of Mr. Jean Hagar, resident engineer, and showed him the telegram, with request that before the "prevailing rate" was set that I be allowed to confer with him and present our side of the case in regards to what is the prevailing rate. My reception was most courteous and I was assured that our representatives would be given opportunity to appear before the CWA before rates were set.

At no time has the rate of 75 cents for skilled labor, as set by Colonel Simpson, been as low. Therefore, Colonel Simpson's statement that the unions have boosted their rates for the purpose of taking advantage of the CWA is nullified by his action in cutting under any rate of the lowest paid craft that has existed in many years. Even though Colonel Simpson's desire may be to not only hold wages at present levels but to also cut them, he is not an authority in himself, but he has certain rules prescribed and which he must follow. We feel that the "prevailing rate in each community" must be adhered to, and since we can definitely prove that 75 cents is far below the prevailing rate, we ask that his ruling be set aside. Especially is this contention on our part sustained by the fact that the entire recovery program, of which CWA is a part, is for the definite purpose of (a) putting unemployed to work and (b) to raise wages so as to increase purchasing power.

Colonel Simpson's charge that we are "agitators," and referring most particularly to our secretary of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, W. E. Cheek, is certainly not borne out by our past record of co-operation with the entire recovery program. In fact, it has been the opinion of many of our union members that Secretary Cheek and other officials of our unions have erred to the opposite degree—that is, they have been too patient and have not been active enough in voicing their protests. If it is the policy of the state CWA administrator to crush all suggestions not in line with his personal ideas with epithets and abuse, we cannot see much hope for peace. We lack his military training which demands absolute an instant obedience. However, we do not think that you will allow this to continue in this state.

This communication is not directed to you in a rancorous spirit, but we do think you should be made aware of the true condition of affairs and will grant us a hearing. If this be "agitating," we are willing to bear that tag with due fortitude and persistence.

Yours truly,
T. R. CUTHBERT, Secretary.

UNIONISTS VICTIMIZED BY CALCASIEU PAPER CO

Elizabeth, La.—Labor officials familiar with the situation charge that the management of the Calcasieu Paper company here has pursued a policy of victimizing trade unionists by discharging employes who joined a union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. They claim that the company allowed the foremen to canvass from house to house for membership in a company union and emphasized the fact none of the company union employes were relieved of their jobs.

Union officials also point out that the management discharged qualified union workers for alleged incompetency and other unwarranted reasons, and even resorted to reclassification of the employes in an attempt to evade the provisions of the national industrial recovery act.

BUILDING TRADES COUNCIL FOUNDED IN JACKSONVILLE

Jacksonville, Fla.—The Jacksonville Building Trades council, which lapsed many years ago, has been reorganized and started out in its reinvigorated life by undertaking to secure collective bargaining contracts with employers under the NRA code.

Jacksonville carpenters' local union voted to stand firmly for a thirty-hour week in conformity with the policy of the American Federation of Labor. The union is urging a wage rate of $1 per hour.

SOUTHERN CITIES BID FOR NORTHERN FACTORIES, HOLDING OUT LURE OF LOW PAY AND FAKE UNIONS

Washington, March 8.—Holding out lower wage differentials and "freedom from union interference" as inducements, various chambers of commerce in Southern states are actively bidding for the removal of factories to Southern cities from Northern and Eastern states, or at least for establishment of branch plants in the South, reports received by the complaint division of the NRA show.

Meantime, promotion of "company unions" is assuming the proportions of great civic movements in some Southern cities, with a united front against formation of independent unions, especially those offiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Former Congressman L. B. Rainey of Gadsden, Ala., speaking at a NRA public meeting preliminary to the conference of code authorities here, described some of the conditions attending unionizing efforts in the South. He said his city "is rife with code violations," and added: "The Gulf States Steel company is threatening their men with discharge if they join a union and telling those who already belong that they may return to their jobs as soon as they have severed their connections with the union. Another company there," he said, "is paying both their skilled and unskilled labor 30 cents per hour, whereas the absolute minimum prescribed by their code is 32½ cents per hour."

Complaints, according to Rainey, have been handed over to the chamber of commerce for settlement, but that brings no relief, as the members of the chamber are all tied up with the city's business interests, he said, and cannot be expected to return a fair verdict.

"They work on a principle of 'You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours,'" said Rainey. "And there is only one hope. Send us disinterested parties to settle the differences and enforce the codes or, mark my words, gentlemen, we will have strikes by June, with the possibility of trouble, bloodshed and destruction of property which such disturbances so often bring in their train."

Regarding the Rainey complaint, the following sentences from the speech of President Roosevelt opening the code authorities' conference are of interest:

"It is sufficient for me to point out once more that the difficult and dangerous situation into which the United States has got itself was due to the general attitude 'Every man for himself; the devil take the hindmost.' Individuals were seeking quick riches at the expense of other individuals. Geographical sections were seeking economic preference for themselves to the disadvantage of other sections. Cities were recklessly offering inducements to manufacturing plants to move away from other cities. . . . There was little consideration for the social point of view."

McDaniels on Full Time for Local 175

E. E. McDaniels, veteran official of Local 175, Electrical Workers, has again been placed on full time as business manager for the "wire twisters," affairs of the union having having reached a point where it is necessary for a representative to devote his entire attention to business matters in connection with the organization's work.

Mr. McDaniels said Thursday the Electrical Workers are in better condition now than at any time for several years, membership having grown by leaps and bounds and the local is working in perfect harmony with practically all the downtown shops and contractors.

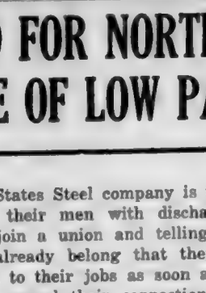
He has opened an office at Seventeenth and Cowart street, or may be reached otherwise at his home, 1603 East Forty-eighth street, phone 3-1037-J.

"Red" will likely have to spend more time around home now for a while, the occasion being the arrival of "Red, Junior," who came to operate the McDaniel domicile last Monday morning.

"He looks just like me," said papa.

But at press time they hadn't drowned the newcomer.

On N. R. A. Board



J. COHEN

Memphis, Tenn.—J. Cohen, president of the Memphis Trades and Labor council, received an appointment to the NRA adjustment board for Tennessee. The Tennessee board consists of three members to hear complaints under the permanent NRA codes. It will also serve as a court of appeals, and decisions of the state NRA director may be taken to the board for ruling. The appointment of Mr. Cohen was recommended by the Tennessee State Federation of Labor.

Bakers to Hold Special Meeting

Officers of Bakers' Local 25 announce a special meeting for members, to be held at Roosevelt Hall Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Members of the union are urged to be present, as several matters of importance are to be considered. Addition of the McMillan bakery to the "100 per cent. union" institutions, announced in The Labor World last week, together with increasing sales of "Dixie Maid" bread and other products of the Dixie bakery, is said to have put new life into the members, and efforts are being renewed to make two of the larger bakeries 100 per cent. organized.

It was said that the two mentioned are nearly 100 per cent., and it is hoped that goal will be reached this spring. There are still no members at the Colonial.

BAKERS WIN STRIKE

Port Arthur, Tex., March 8.—The Port Arthur local union of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers' International Union of America won a vigorous strike against a number of leading bakeries in this city. As a result the bakers secured a contract providing closed-shop working conditions, including a fixed wage scale of $22 a week for journeymen and $17 for apprentices.

Local Unionists Find Encouragement In President's Speech

Address to Code Administrators Believed Forerunner of Better Day.

Nation's Chief Tells Industrial Representatives Letter and Spirit of Recovery Program Must Be Obeyed—Section 7-a Means "Exactly What It Says."

"That which is law must be made certain, and the letter and the spirit must be fulfilled. . . . We have arrived at the time for taking stock for correcting manifest errors, for rooting out demonstrated evils."

Thus did President Roosevelt, in opening the conference of code authorities at Washington this week, give the greatest single bit of encouragement to labor since the national recovery act began to demonstrate that "the leopard cannot change its spots," and that the arrogant, selfish industrialists for the most part were still the arrogant, selfish industrialists, without the will or apparently the capacity to co-operate with a sorely stricken nation in its efforts to recover from the worst crisis in its history.

Chattanooga trades unionists were jubilant at the forceful and unmistakable language of the nation's chief executive, who enjoys complete confidence of workers as well as millions in all walks of life.

Opinion of local workers was tersely summed up Friday morning by A. C. Robinson, secretary of Local 43, Plumbers and Steamfitters, who said:

"The president's address was typical of the man. He indicated a genuine spirit of patriotism in demanding of all groups compliance with the recovery act, and particularly pleasing, of course, was his plain notice to 'chiselers' their days are numbered. He told them, in effect, to 'play ball or turn in their mitts,' and I for one believe he meant just what he said."

Highlights in the address were:

"It is the immediate task of industry to re-employ more people at purchasing wages and to do it now."

"With millions still unemployed, the power of our people to purchase and use the products of industry is still greatly curatiled. It can be increased and sustained only by striving for the lowest schedule of prices on which higher wages and increasing employment can be obtained."

"We must consider immediately co-operation to secure increase in wages and shortening of hours."

"The reorganization must be permanent for all the rest of our lives."

". . . that which is law must be made certain and the letter and spirit must be fulfilled."

". . . we have arrived at the time for taking stock for correcting manifest errors, for rooting out demonstrated evils."

"The law itself has provided free choice of their own representatives by employes. Those two words 'free choice' mean just what they say."

The address was the longest the president has made since taking office. It was a sustained, steady drive toward "increase in wages and shortening of hours" and toward elimination of chiseling. He said "We cannot tolerate abuses of economic power—abuses against labor, abuses against employers or abuses against the consuming prohibitions." That forecasts tightening of enforcement.

The president bore down hard on the issue of democracy versus dictatorship, ridiculing the idea that NRA connotes dictatorship of any kind. He regards NRA as democracy in industry, clearly.

A. F. OF L. BACKS ROOSEVELT'S RECOVERY PROGRAM, GREEN SAYS

Washington, March 8.—Working men and women in the United States do not believe they have benefited as much as they should by the NRA codes of fair competition, but nevertheless they stand whole-heartedly back of President Roosevelt and General Johnson in the broad recovery program of the administration with the expectation that in hours, wages and other working conditions the codes will yield more and more to the principles of economic justice, which labor is convinced should govern both the national industrial recovery act and its administration.

This was the underlying thought in the statement made by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, before the general meeting which opened the public forum convened here to present the views of the people on everything connected with the NRA.

On the question of providing employment for the millions of jobless, Mr. Green pointed out that after many months' operation of the president's re-employment agreement and the NRA codes there were in January, 1934, according to American Federation of Labor figures, "11,690,000 persons seeking work but unable to find employment in normal industrial production services."

Shorter Work Week Necessary.

"These figures are significant," he said. "Their meaning is that, having put about three million idle workers back to work during the last eight months under the administration of the national recovery act through a shortening of the work week, we must continue to follow that rule and apply that formula. This means that if we are to overcome unemployment absolutely and definitely the hours of labor per day and the number of hours worked per week must be reduced.

"We have put 3,000,000 men back to work by reducing hours. We can only put more back to work by applying the same rule. This is inevitable. There is no choice in the matter. The amount of work available must be equitably divided among all who are willing and able to work."

Turning to the recovery program in general, Mr. Green said: "It is but natural, it is human, that we should all become impatient and that often in our unsound and bitter criticism we would attack those who are actually engaged in doing a piece of almost superhuman work.

"In eight months we have succeeded in bringing back into private industry approximately 3,000,000 who were unemployed. That is accomplishing a great deal. True, in accomplishing this great task we have developed complaints and criticisms, and labor complains bitterly because we have alternated between hope and disappointment.

"Labor has suffered greatly. We have not realized our hopes, our expectations, our ideals. The extent of our suffering will be shown in part in the complaints filed at the group meetings. But even so, we are not ready to discard the whole recovery program and go back to the old way. What we need to do is to build this program better, to construct it on a more stable basis, to erect a superstructure of industrial recovery that will mean pure and complete success.

"Labor will stand with the administration, co-operating with it in the effort to reach that objective, so that all the criticism we offer at these group meetings will be founded upon a constructive basis. I hope that out of this will come a unity of purpose, a renewed determination, that we are going through with our program and we are going to win."

Good Man Passes

In the passing of Frank S. Carden, prominent local attorney, Chattanooga lost an able citizen and an earnest advocate for the things that he thought were right.

Mr. Carden was one of the greatest orators, perhaps, ever produced in this section. He was possessed of an unusually keen intellect, and carried the courage of his convictions to a marked degree. He was the soul of honesty, and intense loyalty to a friend was one of his many outstanding virtues.

Although Mr. Carden's career and environment was such as to center his activities in matters and affairs apart from labor problems, he had nevertheless on many occasions indicated a sympathetic interest in the efforts of working people to better their conditions, and his advice and counsel was frequently and freely given union members and officials who appealed to him for help along these lines.

Frank Carden had a host of friends among all groups of Chattanooga's citizenship, and his untimely passing will be mourned by hundreds, rich and poor, great and small.

LABOR QUERIES

Q. What is the latest international union to decide to move its headquarters to Washington, D. C.?

A. The United Mine Workers of America.

Q. When did the American factory system begin?

A. In the early 1800's, with the establishment of textile mills in which all the processes of manufacture, from raw material to finished product, were carried on. The machinery in these early factories was run by water power.

Q. Where was the first state labor bureau established?

A. In Massachusetts, which in 1869 set up a bureau of labor statistics.

What Next!

Automobile factories are installing "electric eye forges." When a bar of steel in these electric heating chambers reaches the desired temperature, its color, always the same at that point, affects a photo-electric cell and the bar is automatically removed by machinery set in motion by the cell.

COAL YARDS ELECT UNION MEN FOR REPRESENTATIVES

Duluth, Minn.—Organized labor here won a decided victory in the election by coal yard employes to name committees to represent the men in collective bargaining with the employers. In fifty-six out of sixty elections conducted the trade union candidates were elected, and under the ruling of the National Labor Board these committees will be recognized as representing all of the men.

A nonunion committee was elected in the yards of the Northwestern Fuel company and in three small yards employing only a few men. The union challenged the Northwestern Fuel company election.

Does the Times Approve?

Readers of the editorial columns of the Chattanooga Times have recently been amazed at the marked tendency of expressions of that paper toward a return to reaction and to a philosophy and theories which have long been discredited and discarded.

Two recent editorials on the federal child labor amendment were tolerated by thoughtful citizens because of the fact that they were based on "arguments" which have long ago been proved fallacious and which, to again bring into print, indicates a childish simplicity upon the part of the writer. Silly nature of the Times editor's expressions on this matter precluded even the dignity of a reply.

However, apparently encouraged by his ability to "get by" with the child-labor editorials, the Times writer has since written in similar vein against municipal ownership of utilities, the people's primary, and, not to overlook any possible chance to indicate his evident antipathy to labor, takes a pot shot at the workers for endeavoring to maintain a fair wage scale on C. W. A. work by commending Lieutenant-Colonel Walter Simpson for his attitude against the unions, and offering the hope that "May he be upheld by his superiors at Washington."

The Times editorial writer, it will be remembered, is the same gentleman who bitterly attacked Mr. George Forbes concerning expressions which the latter made in a public speech, characterizing the remarks of Mr. Forbes as "loose, inflammatory," etc. However, President Roosevelt apparently heard of this incident, and appointed George assistant postmaster at Chattanooga.

The Times editorial writer is also the same gentleman who was heard to bewail, at a recent public gathering, that "the mill class is now running the country."

What the morning paper's scribe says is, of course, of little or no consequence, because a trend of thought such as he indicates will only have the effect of making the Times ridiculous in the eyes of the people. Such a benighted philosophy in these modern days has no place in the present scheme of things, and many good friends of the morning paper are wondering whether the management ever "checks up" on the expressions of the editorial writer.

Mandate Is Unequivocal

Too many employers, especially the big and powerful ones, don't seem to be able to get it through their heads that this nation is committed to a policy of encouraging workers to organize of their own free will.

If employers universally recognized this fact, the National Labor Board would not find it necessary to repeat with greater and greater insistence that Section 7-A of the national industrial recovery act means exactly what it says.

The National Lock company, Rockford, Ill., is one of the employers who apparently do not realize that anti-unionism is as dead as the 1929 boom. The labor board denounced the company for "studied hostility" to the purposes of Section 7-A of the NIRA and took occasion to again set forth the plain mandates of the section, which guarantee the right of collective bargaining. Here they are, for the benefit of hard-headed employers and intelligent workers who are intent on securing their rights:

"Section 7-A cannot be altered by omission or qualification by those unsympathetic with its major objectives. The statute was enacted by the congress after full deliberation and debate. Its mandates are unequivocal. Representation is not restricted under the statute to fellow employes. There is no limitation on the form of organization which may be established by the workers. There is no requirement that the organization which is set up shall follow the departmental lines of any plant. Organization and representation are matters which concern the employes exclusively. The employer has no right to initiate a plan of organization or to participate in any way in the absence of any request from the employes in their designation of representatives and their self-organization. In fact such actions are expressly forbidden by the statute."

All Workers Should Enroll in Unions

The 1933 convention of the American Federation of Labor emphasized the necessity of 100 per cent. organization of working men and women in bona fide unions in order to equip themselves with the machinery necessary to secure their full rights under the codes of fair competition established by authority of the national industrial recovery act.

The importance of the convention's admonition is illustrated every day in Washington in the hearings held by the recovery administration on the various codes, as well as the procedure before and after the hearings.

The codes are practically all drawn up by organizations of employers, called trade associations, without consultation with the employes, organized or unorganized, despite the fact that the labor sections affect very vitally the welfare of all the workers.

In actual day-to-day practice it is a truism evident to all serious-minded persons that the labor sections of the codes receive much more consideration from both employers' representatives and recovery administration authorities when the employes covered by the codes are effectively organized than they do in industries where the employers for years and years have bludgeoned their employes into joining subservient company unions and similar schemes of employer "welfare work."

After the codes are signed by the president it is equally apparent, from months of observation, that the labor sections, according the workers the right of collective bargaining without employer interference and setting up maximum hours and minimum wage standards, are much more adequately enforced if the workers are organized in bona fide trade unions strong enough to fight vigorously every infraction of labor's rights both under the national recovery act and the codes themselves.

Workers everywhere should enroll 100 per cent. in unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Otherwise the labor guarantees contained in the recovery act will become just what employers of the Weir and Budd and Ford type desire them to be—mere paper declarations, with the workers kept in economic serfdom and unable to maintain their rights under the law.

Why Not, Mr. Weir?

Ernest T. Weir, chairman of the National Steel corporation, recently defied the National Labor Board and President Roosevelt by refusing to permit the board to supervise an election to choose representatives for collective bargaining, guaranteed by the national industrial recovery act, by the corporation's 10,000 employes.

Now this subversive corporation official, according to an Associated Press dispatch from Pittsburgh, in discussing the unemployment problem, announces his opposition to the thirty-hour week advocated by the American Federation of Labor, and even opposes the small reductions in the length of the work week suggested by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, recovery administrator.

According to American Federation of Labor unemployment statistics, there were 3,216,000 jobless in January, 1930; 7,160,000 in January, 1931; 10,917,000 in January, 1932; 13,100,000 in January, 1933, and 13,689,000 in March, 1933.

During this entire period those who own and control industry, typified by Mr. Weir, did practically nothing to prevent this astounding increase in the number of unemployed. The American Federation of Labor, on the contrary, insisted on shortening the work week to whatever extent necessary to provide employment for the jobless, culminating in the declaration of the 1932 convention that the thirty-hour week was required to achieve this object.

Since March, 1933, by the expenditure of billions of dollars of federal funds for public works of various sorts, and modest hours reductions in NRA codes, the number without jobs in industrial employment has been reduced to 11,690,000 in January, 1934, with employers just as barren of remedial measures as they were from January, 1930, to March, 1933.

Work at good wages for these millions of jobless is the greatest question before the American people. Our civilization cannot long endure with this huge army of the unemployed and their families reduced to abject poverty and compelled to exist on relief rations which government officials themselves describe as limited to the amount necessary to prevent starvation.

The out-of-works must have jobs. Confronted with this great problem, Mr. Weir, at a banquet in Pittsburgh, given by 600 engineers who paid $7 each for their seats, is reported to have said:

"If the thirty-hour week gives more persons work, why not a twenty-hour week or less, which would given even more employment?"

If the thirty-hour week will restore to the millions of unemployed their inherent right to earn a living by their labor, the query propounded by the chairman of the National Steel corporation will not require consideration. If the thirty-hour week does not put the idle men to work, and if those who own and control industry demonstrate that they are still unable to solve the unemployment problem in some other reasonable way, then the only solution will evidently be further shortening of the hours of work to whatever extent may be required to reduce the jobless army to zero.

Mr. Weir asks: "If the thirty-hour week gives more persons work, why not the twenty-hour week or less, which would give even more employment?" Well, why not—if it is necessary to provide work for the workless?

Partnership or Domination?

Is there to be partnership or domination under code control? On the answering of this question depends the success of the recovery program and the future of the nation.

As the American Federation of Labor points out, the codes can be so operated as to raise living standards, distribute wealth, balance production and consumption and level out the ups and downs of business cycles or they can be so operated as to concentrate wealth, increase poverty and continue the unbalance which leads to business booms and depressions.

"Codes can be operated either way," the federation goes on to say. "If the guiding influence is kept in balance, through a partnership of employers, labor and consumers with the government as supervisor, as was originally intended, code control can encourage an increasing volume of production and rising standards of living. Employers may make their gains through small unit profits on a large volume of sales; workers through increasing wages; consumers by keeping prices at the lowest figures compatible with costs.

"On the other hand, if code control is diverted from its original purpose and dominated by powerful employer interests, the effect may be quite opposite. Many codes make it possible for employers to limit production and keep prices up beyond the reach of most working men; by this process they could make larger profits on a small volume of sales.

"Unless workers have constant contact with policy making groups, code wages and hour provisions may become rigid, hindering wage increases and reduction of hours. Thus wealth may be diverted to the hands of a few and we would have increasing poverty and an unbalance of economic forces."

Lock Firm Hit By Labor Board In Strike Case

Rockford Company Sharply Denounced for "Studied Hostility" to Purposes of NRA Collective Bargaining Section.

Washington, March 8.—The National Lock company, of Rockford, Ill., whose employes have been on strike since last Aug. 31, is denounced for "studied hostility" to the NRA labor section in a vigorously worded ruling made by the national labor board.

Nine hundred employes, members of a federal labor union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, joined the strike and 400 are still out. The company obtained an injunction against the Chicago regional board which had attempted to hold a hearing on Nov. 22, and the national labor board held hearings Jan. 24 and 25.

The ruling notes that the company posted a garbled quotation of Section 7-A in the plant, and says that "Section 7-A cannot be altered by omission or qualification by those unsympathetic with its major objective."

"Two extremely severe injunctions against the strikers" were obtained by the company as well as the injunction against the Chicago regional board. The defeat of various mediation efforts is described. "At no time did the company indicate any willingness to reinstate the twelve blacklisted men or to submit the question of their right to reinstatement to an impartial tribunal."

Formation of an employes' representation plan within the plant is described, including an election ordered by the company on October 3. "This plan was promulgated by the company and was explained to the employes less than an hour before the election." The ruling notes, "the ballot itself was secret but the company officials were in position to know whether or not an employe participated in an election.

The ruling says "the record reveals a studied hostility to the purposes of Section 7-A."

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

Green Denounces Hitler Rule As Regime of Hate

Labor Head Declares Nazi Brutality Forced Workers to Protest.

New York City, Mar. 7.—The annihilation of trade unions and the persecution of the Jewish people will be regarded by all liberty-loving persons as the transcendent sin committed by the Hitler regime in Germany, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, declared in speaking at the Aldine club under the auspices of the Nonsectarian Anti-Nazi League to Champion Human Rights. James W. Gerard presided.

President Green vigorously flayed the Hitler government for its campaign of hate against the Jews and organized workers, and pointed out that it had brought upon Germany the boycott of German goods declared by European and American labor.

Referring to labor's boycott, he said:

"Every man and woman who loves liberty and who places human rights above and beyond material rights will approve and applaud the action which these economic, democratic organizations, representing the working people of so many nations throughout the world, have taken.

"The indictment against the Hitler regime in Germany is direct and amazing," the speaker continued. "These facts justify the charge that defenseless, lawabiding, upright Jewish citizens of Germany were subjected to most cruel persecution because they were jews—and for no other reason.

"The working people of Germany who had built up their trade unions and had acquired trade union property were forced to witness the destruction of their trade union institutions while their leaders were thrown into prison, not because they had committed any crime but merely because they had been identified with the bona fide trade union movement."

Green declared that the Hitler regime had pursued a policy of "ruthless extermination" toward the trade unions and had established a new industrial and economic order which reduces the worker to a status approximating slavery.

Assailing Hitler's Jewish policy, the speaker said:

"Hitler, through his campaign addresses, campaign literature and public manifestos, is largely responsible for the persecution which has been visited upon the Jewish people in Germany. He came into power singing his song of hate. Its refrain was echoed by those whose feelings and passion has been aroused against a race which has given the world men of highty intellect and genius."

In the face of the Hitler record, American labor could not remain silent and be true to its traditions, principles and policies, Green said. He added the boycott would be applied "until the working people of Germany are made free to organize into their own trade unions, and until the Jewish people, residing in Germany, are accorded the equal right, with other German citizens, to enjoy all the rights and privileges to which they are morally, legally and politically entitled."

Providence Unionist Chosen For Regional Labor Board

Providence, R. I.—William J. Fallon, secretary of the Providence Central Federated union, was notified by Senator Robert F. Wagner, chairman of the national labor board at Washington, D. C., that he had been appointed a member of the New England regional labor board, of which Judge John J. Burns, of the Massachusetts superior court, is chairman.

Mr. Fallon is a charter member of the Street Railway Men's union, to which he has belonged for twenty years. He has been secretary of the Central Federated union for fourteen years and for eight years a delegate to the convention of the Rhode Island State Federation of Labor.

Build Up Health and Pains Go Away

WOMEN who suffer from weakness often have many aches and pains which a stronger state of health would prevent.

Women in this condition should take Cardui, a purely vegetable tonic that has been in use for over 50 years.

Take Cardui to improve the general tone of the system in cases of run-down health and "tired nerves." Women have found, in such cases, that Cardui helps them to overcome pains and make the monthly periods easier.

CARDUI is safe and wholesome for women of all ages. Try it!

Strike Vote Ordered By Movie Ushers

Paramount Discharged 16 Men for Union Activities Is Charge.

New York, March 1.—A vote to call a general strike of ushers and other unskilled workers in the motion-picture theatres in New York city was ordered by the Theatre and Amusement Employes union, local 118, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The strike movement was caused by the discharge of sixteen men by the management of the Paramount theatre in Stapleton, Staten Island, for alleged union activities. Mrs. Elinore M. Herrick, acting chairman of the regional labor board, who investigated the controversy, sustained the charge and recommended that the men be reinstated. The theatre management refused to make the reinstatements.

Charles C. Levey, secretary-treasurer of the union, said that the strike, if called, would affect about 20,000 ushers, doormen, ticket-takers and janitors. The union demands include higher wages, shorter hours and better working conditions.

Since there has been so much talk about frozen assets, it is possible the origin of "cold cash" is explained.

Many years of experience as a criminal officer qualifies me for the office of Sheriff.

While Sheriff of the County it did not become necessary for the Civitan Club and organized labor to recommend laws to be passed to stop fee grabbing and night courts.

I formely served two years as your sheriff. Ask any "old-timer" about my labor record.

Atlanta Garment Workers' Union Wins Big Increase and 40-Hour Week

Atlanta, Ga., March 7.—Organized labor in Atlanta won a remarkable agreement when the Saul-Klenberg company and the L. and L. Manufacturing company signed agreements with the officials of the local union of the United Garment Workers of America here to recognize the union, increase wages 100 per cent and reduce the length of the maximum work-week to 40 hours in place of 45 to 55 hours which prevailed before the contract. The minimum wage scale is $12 for the 40-hour week. About 400 persons are employed by the two companies.

The labor representatives who negotiated the agreement were Thomas E. Evans, local president of the Garment Workers, and A. Steve Nance, president of the Atlanta Federation of Labor.

Railroad Labor Proposes Parley On Wage Dispute

A. F. Whitney Suggests Meeting With Managers—President Asks Present Agreement Be Continued.

Washington, March 1.—A. F. Whitney, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives association, has submitted to the Conference Committee of Railroad Managers a proposal to discuss the railroad wage controversy in Washington on March 15.

Whitney's offer followed serving of a demand for a 15 per cent wage decrease by the railroad managements and a recommendation by President Roosevelt that the present wage agreement, providing for a temporary 10 per cent pay deduction, be continued for another six months. The agreement expires June 30.

The president's recommendation was made public soon after the serving of the railroad wage cut demand.

In his letter, the president warned that "the emergency still exists" and that "the prosecution of a bitter controversy between the railroads and their employes over wages would have a most disturbing influence."

Roosevelt said that progress toward recovery had been made and he was sure of the attainment of the goal. The cost of living had not changed much, although he hoped for a commodity price rise. The financial condition of the railroads and their credit were still impaired although traffic was improving, he pointed out.

For the present, conditions were not yet sufficiently stable to permit a wise determination of what wages for the future should be, the president added. He said that an extension of the existing agreement would be to the advantage of all.

The same money that talks so loud walks out on you on its tiptoes. . .

To the Members of Organized Labor:

I have been a member of Organized Labor for thirty years.

I have never in my life patronized any person, firm or organization unfair to organized labor and never intend to.

To be fair to the labor movement I couldn't act otherwise.

I have tried to make you a good official and will appreciate your vote if you think I have made good.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Only the Nazis are likely to benefit om the bloody civil warfare in Aus-a. Many of the defeated socialist rkers, embittered by the attack of Dollfuss government and the imwehr fascists, will almost cer-nly flock to the Nazi government ich will be open to admit them th promises of reprisal. Then the zis can strike quickly to overcome stria and trade unionism and democracy will suffer the same fate as in Germany.

Apparently the socialist masses of Austria were the victims of a sudden mass attack. Well-informed correspondents, including Frederick T. Burchall, of the New York Times, report there had been no revolt until the socialist workers sprang to resist the raiding of their dwellings.

"Why the socialists were made the object of attack is a mystery," he writes. "It was not the socialists but the Nazis who were exploding bombs all over Austria, propagandizing against the government and striving to upset the regime of Chancellor Dollfuss. The socialists were striving to induce the chancellor to enlist them in his defense of Austria."

Among the results of the warfare are a large toll of dead, hatreds that will lost for generations and breed more bitterness and death and destruction of some of the finest workers apartments in the world, built by the Vienna socialist administration. The Karl Marx apartments, said to have been the largest in Europe, was one of those shelled and wrecked by government troops.

How to increase employment is to be one of the big subjects before the coming code authority conference in Washington.

What are the known facts? Substantially these: The main dent in unemployment has been made by the CWA. With the CWA out of the picture, codes would have caused little gain in jobs. If the CWA is not to continue, then some other means of creating jobs must be found. If codes are to be relied upon to create jobs, then something not now in codes must be put there. That seems clear. It creates a big issue, a very real issue. Many smaller businesses report they cannot shorten hours or raise wages and stay alive. They create an issue, likewise. There is no shortage of issues. Solution of the problems may be said to be under way; it has by no means been achieved. Try looking on down the road toward the solution.

Watch now for sniping by big newspapers at NRA. They won't like parts of the newspaper code. They won't like the president's suggestion of a five-day week for editorial workers.

Editorial workers have been both timid and exploited. That's no reason for continued exploitation. They've been timid about refusing or failing to organize into unions. They've been exploited because they've had pride in their work.

Writing men have been fair game for every kind of spoilsman. Craftsmen and artists, they have had a devotion to work that has outshone their judgment about getting paid, their solidarity in defense against every type of exploitation.

It's good to see some helping hand come their way.

There are those who, looking hopefully at NRA, observe that the "big fellows" dominate most code authorities. That means they will write the laws.

Many are beginning to fear for the life of the little fellows. Question whether anything can long save the little fellows, but most folks won't like to see the slaghter hastened.

NRA has its big weak spots as well as its enormous strong points. Time is at hand to get after and fix up some of the big weak spots. Price kiting is one thing that needs faster fixing than it is getting.

Men rummage through figures and know all about the price boosts, but nobody moves very fast to do anything about it.

That needs fixing.

Dry Remarks.

Speech may be silver, and silence gold, but paper money seems to be doing all the talking these days. . . We've always noticed that when a boy gets up to his ears in love he's careful about washing them. . . No matter how much a man may know, when he refuses to learn any more, he soon becomes ignorant. . . Those who saved money for a rainy day are earnestly hoping that the wet season is about over. . . Still another trouble is that one-half of the world doesn't care whether the other half lives. . . There is more wickedness in the city because the small town man goes there to celebrate.

Ever notice that the man who boasts that he never reads the paper always knows instantly if it happens to contain something he believes contrary to his personal interests?

Why will a girl waste her time on a man
Who tries to forget her as fast as he can?
She calls it love, he an impression,
She talks of Eden, he cites the depression.

N. Y. Legislature Gets Jobless Insurance Bill

State Federation Sponsors Measure Assessing Employers to Provide Fund.

Albany, N. Y., March 7.—The New York State Federation of Labor's unemployment insurance bill was introduced in the legislature by Senator William T. Byrne, of Albany, and Assemblyman William F. Condon, of Yonkers.

In a statement explaining the bill, John M. O'Hanlon, secretary-treasurer of the federation, said:

"The bill is based solely on the state fund principle, all contributions required from employers subject to the plan being paid directly into the state fund and all payments of benefits therefrom to include unemployed workers being paid to such unemployed workers by the state through its designated agencies. Using our state workmen's compensation law as a model, our bill includes within its protection all workers in the employments covered by that statute and therefore excludes public employes who can be cared for by public funds.

Payrolls Assessed.

"The state fund is to be created entirely from an assessment of 3 per cent of all payrolls of employes for whom the employer is liable. These assessments are to be paid to the state fund for a continuous period of three years. Thereafter the state industrial commissioner, who is administrator, shall determine the premiums to be paid under rules and rates made by him. The expenses of administration shall be assessed under rules and classifications so made that the industries causing the greatest expense shall bear their full share of the burden.

Follows A. F. of L. Plan.

"Our bill follows closely the plan approved by the American Federation of Labor at its last convention. No contributions shall be paid by any employe. Every employe of employers covered by the law receiving less than $2,000 a year in wages is to be entitled to benefits, if he becomes unemployed. The benefits shall be in the ratio of one week of benefits for each three weeks of employment during the preceding fifty-two weeks, to continue for not more than sixteen weeks in one year. There is a waiting period of three weeks before benefits are paid weekly as follows:

$5 to $15 Per Week.

"Fifteen dollars to an employe whose average weekly wage is over $20; $12.50 where average weekly wage is from $15 to $20; $10 where average weekly wage is from $10 to $15; $5 where average weekly wage is less than $10, but in no case, however, is benefit to exceed three-quarters of the average weekly wage."

Last year the State Federation of Labor's unemployment insurance bill passed the senate by a vote of 27 to 23, but failed in the assembly by a vote of 71 ayes to 65 noes because 76 affirmative votes were required.

6,550,000 GIVEN WORK SINCE MARCH, LABOR DEPARTMENT SAYS

Washington, March 1.—At least 6,550,000 persons have been put to work by private industry or the government since March 4, 1933, the department of labor reports. Of those re-employed, the great majority were given work on government financed projects.

Both employment and pay rolls declined seasonably for January, but neither fell as far as is customary.

The report listed the following employment gains since last March: Civil works, 3,800,000; private industry, 2,000,000; civilian conservation corps, 330,000; public works, 265,000; state road projects, 160,000.

The January drop in employment for industries was estimated at 500,000, with a weekly pay roll of $5,400,000. The gain for the 10-month period since last March—the depression low—still was 23.8 per cent for employment and 47.9 per cent for factory pay rolls.

The report served to emphasize the tremendous revival of business necessary to supplant the emergency agencies, which account for two-thirds of the employment gain.

$3,300,000,000 PUBLIC WORKS FUND NEARS END

Washington. — The $3,300,000,000 public works fund, appropriated by the last session of congress to provide jobs for a portion of America's huge army of unemployed workers which at that time numbered over 12,000,000, has all been allocated but about $150,000,000, which will be disposed of in about three weeks, it was announced by Secretary of the Interior Ickes, who is public works administrator.

The "allocation" of this immense fund does not mean that the money has all been spent, it was explained, but rather that projects calling for the money have been approved. An example of these continuing projects is the Triborough bridge in New York City, a self-liquidating work projected by the port of New York authority, a public corporation. It is estimated that the bridge will cost from $35,000,000 to $36,000,000, all of which must be earmarked in the public works funds now, although the money will be expended over a period of three years.

It is expected that the administration will ask the congress which convenes on Jan. 3 for additional public works appropriations running into hundreds of millions of dollars.

A woman who did not understand the language of business went into the Bank of England and asked to consult someone about her loan holding. The clerk to whom she talked happened to be a rather grave person. He inquired:

Young Banker—Is it a case of conversion or redemption, Madam?

The Woman (faltering)—Conversion? Redemption? Er—pardon me, is this the Bank of England or the Church of England?

Big Silk Company Accepts Decision Of Labor Board

Facing Prosecution, Real Silk Concern Agrees to Re-employ Eight Union Officers Discharged at Dalton, Ga., Plant.

Washington, D. C., March 1.—Facing the danger of prosecution, the Real Silk Hosiery Mills company, with big mills in Indiana and Georgia, agree to accept an award of the Atlanta regional labor board which it had previously ignored.

The national labor board in Washington held a hearing on February 8 on complaint of members of the United Textile Workers that eight officers of their local in the mills at Dalton, Ga., had been discharged. On December 12 the Atlanta regional board, under an arbitration agreement with the company, ruled that the eight men should be returned to work at once. The men had been with the company from five to eleven years, and the company had failed to show that they had been discharged for inefficiency. The company had failed to appear at hearings before the Atlanta board and likewise at the national labor board hearing.

The national labor board, therefore, scheduled a hearing for February 16, to give opportunity to show cause why officers of the Real Silk Hosiery company should not be prosecuted for violation of Section 7-A of the NIRA. On February 14 the company notified the national board of its acceptance of the Ttlanta board's award. The national board telegraphed the Atlanta regional board of the Real Silk company's change of front and advising that the eight men be re-employed and given retroactive pay.

Indianapolis, March 1. — Continual evasions and elaborate stallings are the tactics of the Real Silk company and its subsidiaries, the National and Fulton mills, in relation to matters brought before the Indianapolis regional board by the unionized workers here.

The attorneys for the Real Silk have challenged the election held under the supervision of the national labor board in the National plant last year. The national labor board has wired the Indianapolis board upholding the propriety and legality of the plant election, but the Real Silk attorneys continue to argue against the whole proceeding and delay matters further each week.

FARLEY THROWS 26,000 MEN ON BREADLINE AS PRESIDENT ASKS MORE PAY, HOURS CUT

Washington, March 8.—On the same day that President Roosevelt declared that "we must now consider immediate co-operation to secure increase in wages and shortening of hours" Postmaster General James A. Farley threw 26,000 postal substitutes on the breadline.

The order of the postmaster general under which this was done directly contradicted the president's statement that "reduction in hours coupled with a decrease in weekly wages will do no good at all, for it amounts to only a forced contribution to unemployment relief by the class least able to bear it."

The postoffice department declared a payless furlough of four days for postoffice clerks and letter carriers and one of a few less hours for railway mail clerks.

At the same time, it withdrew all allowances for employment of substitutes so that these employes, already reduced to dire want, will now have no incomes at all.

Vacations earned by the employes are postponed. All privileges resulting from length of service are abrogated. The order specifically declares that all arrangements necessary to this defiance of the president's policy shall be carried out "without regard to seniority rules."

In order to effect these "economies" directly contradictory to the demands now placed by the president on private employers, the postoffice department is to drastically curtail service to the public. Postmasters are required to reduce deliveries of mail even below the already restricted service.

"The president, in his burdened days, will do well to watch the activities of his postmaster general. It will be recalled that one of the heaviest burdens carried by President Wilson, in times of no more emergent character, was the diametric opposition of the labor policies of Postmaster General Albert Sidney Burleson to those of the Wilson administration," said a representative of a postal workers' organization in commenting on Farley's move.

STEEL COMPANY ADMITS FOSTERING "TAME" UNION

Throwing Down Gauntlet to National Labor Board and Voicing Steel's Championship of Company Unionism, Republic Boasts of Control Over Workers' Organization.

Washington, March 8.—Following up its recent pledge to "resist all attacks" on its company unions, the steel industry, through the Republic Steel corporation of Birmingham, Ala., told the National Labor Board that it had established a company union in its plant and would run it as it saw fit.

Under penetrating questions by Pierre S. du Pont, Delaware industrial magnate, sitting as chairman of the labor board, Republic officials admitted fostering a company union. They further admitted that the management had complete control of the "union."

Thomas S. Veach, company counsel, sought justification for Republic's attitude in the statement that "our position is that of the steel industry generally, and we will take such steps as lawfully necessary to uphold the employes' representation plan."

Plant Closed After Strike.

The Republic corporation case came before the National Labor Board on appeal from the southeast regional labor board at tlanta. In June the employe representative plan was set up by company officials. Later the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers began to organize and claimed a majority of the workers. A strike followed in December and the company, from "lack of orders," closed the plant. Later, resuming, the company discharged four employes. The Atlanta board ordered reinstatement and the company rejected the findings.

Veach said his company "is not willing to submit anything here involved to the board for mediation, arbitration, determination or for any other purpose."

Questioned by du Pont whether employes are in control of "representation plan," Veach said while men have "power to initiate changes," they cannot change the fact that the company has representatives on the control committee functioning under the system. He said there is equal representation of company and workers on this committee, and two-thirds vote is necessary to effectuate any action by the committee.

Won't Recognize Union.

Questioned by William Green, a member of the board, whether the company would deal with freely elected representatives of the workers, Vach said "when that question is presented to us the answer will be the same as in the captive mine case; we will recognize individuals as representatives of the men, but not the union as such."

DuPont asked if the company is willing to hold another election now, and Borden Burr, also company counsel, said it would not be, "since there is no way to determine the will of the employes in the matter." DuPont asked if the company is willing to retire from the control committee, adding: "You would rather do that than have the plan thrown out and an entirely new one put in, wouldn't you?"

William P. Belden of Cleveland, also company counsel, replied he would suggest modification of the plan. Veach maintained there is no dispute between the company and the workers, and said the Republic corporation indorses and accepts the steel industry's defiant statement given out after the president's executive order of Jan. 31.

George L. Googe, representing the union, said the strike occurred because of nonrecognition of the union and oppression of minor officials at the company's coal mine. He said 90 per cent of the workers belonged to the outside union, and 80 per cent had signed the petition carried before the Atlanta board. The labor board took the case under advisement.

ONLY WAY TO INCREASE PROFITS IS TO RAISE PAY, FILENE SAYS

New Orleans, March 8.—"The six-hour day and the thirty-hour week are upon us. It is hardly worth while arguing about their necessity or logic. In that length of time men can earn all the material comforts and gratifications of life they need, and, when I say that, I am thinking of wants satisfied far beyond the dreams of the average man today. There is no limit that we can see to the markets that can be opened if we try to square our activities with the economy of plenty," said Edward A. Filene, chairman of the finance committee of the William Filene's Sons company, Boston department store, and chairman of the NRA committee of Massachusetts, following on a six weeks' tour of the United States.

Mr. Filene expressed the conviction that the NRA is proving of great worth in benefiting the nation, asserting that it takes wages and hours of work out of competition. They are the same for all. Therefore, no business man need fear that he will be undersold by a competitor who pays lower wages or works his people longer hours.

"Increased wages mean increased purchasing power. Given increased production, there must be increased purchasing power if consumption is to keep the processes of production busy.

"To our fathers, it was inconceivable that there could be a profit in paying double wages. But in this new era of hours we are learning that the only way we can increase our profits is to increase the means of the people to buy—and this must be by increasing their wages. There is no other way. Under the new capitalism it will be possible to make the markets as large as we wish them to be. No one will fear to raise wages."

Filene said he does not approve of that part of the Roosevelt program which calls for reduction of production, but says the president was forced to adopt such measures "as an emergency."

Collective Bargaining Protected In Senator Wagner's New NRA Bill

Legalizes Closed Union Shop Agreements and Compels Employers to Recognize Duly Elected Collective Bargaining Representatives.

Washington, March 8.—A major purpose of Section 7-A of the national industrial recovery act was to prevent employers from exercising domination over organizations of employes. The section expressly declares "that employes shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from interference, restraint or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection."

As soon as the act was passed, subversive organizations of employers like the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which had opposed Section 7-A in all of its stages in congress, got busy and reduced the labor guarantees to a mere shadow.

The bill introduced in the senate by Senator Wagner of New York amending the recovery act, and establishing a permanent national labor board to adjust disputes arising under the act, undertakes to make effective the purpose of the collective bargaining provision of Section 7-A.

Employers Nullify Collective Bargaining.

In a statement to the senate discussing the ineffectiveness of the collective bargaining provisions of the original act and his new proposal to give them legal validity, Senator Wagner said:

"Failure to meet the problems of employer domination over employe organizations has not been the only defect of Section 7-A of the recovery act.

"This section provides that employes shall be free to choose their own representatives. It has been interpreted to mean that any employe at any time may choose his own representative or may elect to deal individually with his employer.

"Such an interpretation, which illegalizes the closed union shop, strikes a death blow at the practice and theory of collective bargaining. It allows the unscrupulous employer to divide the workers against themselves.

"No real advocate of collective bargaining would argue that a worker should be free to bargain individually even after the overwhelming majority of his co-workers desire an agreement covering all.

No Ban on Closed Shop.

"The new legislation which I am proposing does not dictate any policy on the closed union shop. That is a problem which labor must work out for itself. But the bill does make it clear that Section 7-A was not intended to ban the closed union shop, and that congress never intended to place employes in a worse position than they were before the recovery act was passed.

Compulsory Recognition of Representatives.

"The third major defect of Section 7-A is that it guarantees employes the right to organize but not the right to recognition. My six months' experience as chairman of the National Labor Board has proved conclusively to me that the second guarantee should be firmly established by congress.

"Over 70 per cent. of the disputes coming before the labor board have been caused by the refusal of employers to deal with representatives chosen by their workers.

Railway Labor Act Is Model.

"The new bill, if enacted, will remedy this evil. It is modeled upon the successful experience of the railway labor act, which provides that employers shall actually recognize duly chosen representatives and make a reasonable effort to deal with them and to reach satisfactory collective agreements."

LABOR'S FRIEND PLACED ON MAINE SUPREME COURT

Augusta, Me.—Organized labor throughout Maine and other New England states was greatly pleased when Governor Brann appointed Senator Herbert E. Holmes as a justice of the state supreme court.

In the legislature Senator Holmes not only championed measures fostered by the State Federation of Labor, but in addition placed his services at the disposal of all those whose efforts were directed toward improving the economic and social position of the masses.

The organized labor movement in Maine unanimously urged Governor Brann to appoint Senator Holmes to the judicial position. The advantages of appointing Senator Holmes were also impressed upon Governor Brann by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and Edward F. McGrady, assistant secretary of labor at Washington.

UNION WORKERS PROTEST STEEL PLANTS' ELECTION

Delegation From Pennsylvania Demands Balloting Under Supervision of National Labor Board — Governor's Wife Declares Steel Lords Seek to Beat Down Recovery Act.

Washington, March 8.—A delegation of fourteen steel workers, officers of the Amalgamated American Federation of Labor, laid a protest before the national labor board against elections held in steel plants in Pennsylvania.

Earl J. Forbeck, of McKeesport, said that, as chairman of the Amalgamated Association's District No. 1, he represented thirty-five lodges, totaling 100,000 employes. The principal delegates were employes of the U. S. Steel corporation's Duquesne works of the McKeesport Tin Plate works.

Notices of the election set for Feb. 23 and dated Feb. 17, were shown to the board. The delegates informed the board that they had in their possession evidence of interference and intimidation and that they intended, if the steel companies refused to recognize their union, to demand elections supervised by the national labor board.

The election notices explained that the employes' representation plan, established last June, had been revised "to meet legal requirements as well as to make it more permanent" and had been recommended for approval by the representatives, elected under the plan. An accompanying letter from the company declared that the plan "as amended is entirely acceptable to the management."

Sample Ballot Described.

"Feb. 23, 1934. Carnegie Steel Works, Duquesne, Pa.

"Ballot on acceptance of the plan of employe representation as revised and recommended by the employe representatives in favor of the plan."

The ballot then bore squares for marking yes or no.

The delegation protested that their members objected to voting on the grounds that "either a yes or no was a vote for the company union."

The delegation declared that they had evidence of interference and coercion, which they proposed to put to affidavit form. They stated that the elections were taking place in a number of plants simultaneously.

On the same day that the steel workers' delegation filed its protest, dispatches from Pittsburgh reported that the Carnegie Steel company and National Tube company announced that a majority of their employes favored revision and continuation of the existing employes representation system.

Weirton, W. Va.—Speaking to steel workers here, Mrs. Cornelia Bryce Pinchot, wife of Gov. Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, denounced the Weirton Steel company's defiance of the national labor board as "the most violent attempt of the steel lords" to beat down the NRA.

"E. T. Weir cannot buck the United States and win," Mrs. Pinchot declared to a mass meeting of Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers. "On the outcome of this battle hinges the future of the NRA.

"Not only the prestige of the president, but the entire recovery program is at stake," she continued. "We might as well give up being a democracy if Weir succeeds in his defiance."

Mrs. Pinchot read a list of names of company "bosses" she said were standing in front of the hall, attempting by their presence to intimidate men from entering.

Mrs. Pinchot charged that in the Dec. 15 "company union" elections at the Weirton plants men were dragged to the polls by mill police and forced to vote.

"I tell you Senator Wagner is preparing a bill to put teeth in the NRA and to end such action," she said.

Harriman Mills Among Those Asked to Show Cause Why Government Should Not Prosecute Them.

Washington, March 8.—Senator Robert F. Wagner announced that the National Labor Board has cited four companies to show cause why their cases should not be referred to the NRA compliance division and to the department of justice for action. The National Labor Board's procedure, Senator Wagner said, was being taken under the new executive order of the president modifying the order of Feb. 1.

The four firms are: Harriman Hosiery mills, Harriman, Tenn.; A. Roth & Co., Chicago, Ill.; S. Dresner & Son, Inc., Chicago, Ill., together with its subsidiaries, National Brief Case company and Gladstone Case Manufacturing company; Patrick, Inc., Duluth, Minn.

The modification of the executive order under which the National Labor Board took this action, signed by President Roosevelt on Feb. 23, reads as follows:

"Whenever the National Labor Board shall find that an employer has interfered with the board's conduct of an election or has declined to recognize or bargain collectively with a representative or representatives of the employes adjudged by the board to have been selected in accordance with Section 7-A or has otherwise violated or is refusing to comply with said Section 7-A, the board, in its discretion, may report such findings and make appropriate recommendations to the attorney general or to the compliance division of the national recovery administration. The compliance division shall not review the findings of the board, but it shall have power to take appropriate action based thereon."

Senator Wagner said:

"This order means that the board can act directly, promptly and effectively in case of violation of Section 7-A. Today the board acted immediately under this order and will continue so to act. At the same time, the president has appointed three additional industrial members and two vice-chairmen, thus enabling us to carry out a panel system to expedite consideration of cases. Altogether the National Labor Board system is now in position to deal expeditiously with that small minority of employers who violate the self-organization and collective bargaining rights of labor."

Budd Plant Vote Proposed By NRA Compliance Board

If Company Refuses Settlement Plan, It Faces Loss of Blue Eagle and Navy Department Contracts.

Washington, March 8.—The NRA national compliance board had proposed a plan for settlement of the dispute which culminated last Nov. 14 in a strike of employes of the Edgard G. Budd company, makers of automobile parts, Philadelphia. The dispute is one of the most important labor cases before the NRA.

The compliance board proposes that it supervise a ballot to determine whether the employes wish any form of self-government; that the company take back the remainder of the men who took part in the strike as increase in employment makes this possible, and that any dispute arising in the course of the settlement be referred to the board for adjustment.

If the company fails to accept the recommendations, the board will then recommend that the Blue Eagle insignia be removed and that all government contracts with the company be canceled and the case referred to the attorney-general.

The company has contracts with the navy department for heavy cruiser and destroyer equipment.

Following the strike the case was taken up by the Philadelphia labor board, which decided on Nov. 23 that the strike be called off immediately, that the strikers be reinstated "as fast as work is available without discrimination," and that an election be held within ninety days for the purpose of designating representatives for collective bargaining.

The Budd company declined to accept the recommendation, which the workers accepted. The case then went to the national labor board, which upheld the regional board. Later the national board sent the case to the national compliance board.

PURCHASE OF HOME-MADE GOODS URGED BY LABOR

Danville, Ill.—The Danville Trades and Labor council organized an intenseive campaign to promote the purchase of home-made goods. The slogan is: "Buy now! Buy American! Buy at home!"

The campaign is being conducted through the sale of seals or stamps bearing this slogan. The seals are sold in sheets of 100 at $1 a sheet and are affixed to letters, statements and other correspondence.

Memphis Unions Boycott All NRA Code Chiselers

German-Made Goods Also Placed on Organized Labor's Blacklist as Protest Against Treatment of Unionists and Jews.

Memphis, Tenn., March 8.—A thorough boycott of merchandise made or sold by evaders and chiselers of President Roosevelt's recovery program was pledged by the unanimous vote of the Memphis Trades and Labor council. This action was followed by an equally firm resolution to boycott all German-made goods as a protest against the merciless treatment meted out by Chancellor Hitler's fascist government to trade unionists and Jews in Germany.

The council declared its determination to make a list of Memphis' business concerns which do not comply with the NRA and to urge all workers and other patriotic persons to withhold patronage from them. In its campaign against German products the council urges everyone to inspect each piece of merchandise to see if it bears a "made in Germany" stamp. If that stamp is found, the would-be purchaser should flatly refuse to buy the articles.

WARNING!

TO LABORING MEN

Judge Cummings made a speech in the Labor Hall last Tuesday night in which he appealed to the laboring people for their support.

He stated in his speech, that he had always favored organized labor, which was untrue. And as an evidence of that fact I want to submit a record which will convince any union man of the falseness of the statement, after repeated complaints by members of different crafts and as a result of their efforts.

Squire Kelso Rice at the July term of the County Court, 1933, passed a resolution which provided for working conditions and a wage scale according to the prevailing price of each craft, for any kind of labor employed by the county.

This resolution also provided that all contracts let by the county should have a provision, which would protect the laboring people. If Judge Cummings' statement was true, why was it necessary for Squire Kelso Rice to pass this resolution in the County Court, to protect labor? Various contracts have been let by the county, on school houses and other work, with no provision made in the contract to protect labor.

Judge Cummings has served as County Judge almost sixteen years, and there has been hundreds of thousands of dollars spent by the county and no attempt on the part of Judge Cummings to protect labor.

Lest the labor man forgets, last July, 1933, the State Labor Department made an investigation of the textile mills in Chattanooga, and uncovered some of the most astounding cruel and heartless conditions imaginable, practiced by the McAlister Hosiery Mills in Alton Park. The picture displayed in the Chattanooga News—showing a poor woman, making stockings with two or three children around her feet, working twelve to fifteen hours per day; and whose pay ranged from $2.00 to $5.00 per week, and was compelled to spend part of that in the mill commissary, whose prices for groceries ranged from 10 to 25 per cent higher than at other stores. This was the condition revealed toward the poor, unfortunate women who had to work or starve along with their little ones.

Such inhuman treatment of the unfortunate woman should be resented by every woman and red-blooded man who has a spark of manhood. The manager of this mill was arraigned before Squire Rice and admitted his guilt of violating the state laws and was fined $25.00 by Squire Rice. Judge Cummings was President of this mill and Judge Cummings can't plead ignorance of these conditions.

Then how could Judge Cummings stand up before the laboring people and make a false statement in the face of these facts? He must think the laboring organizations are very ignorant and unintelligent to swallow this statement in the face of these facts.

WILL F. CHAMLEE

Candidate for

COUNTY JUDGE

The main planks of my platform are:

First—to balance fixed charges against the county with the revenue it receives.

Second—To forego issuance of more bonds until the county's finances are "in better shape."

Third—To co-operate with the federal government in providing work for the unemployed.

Fourth—To see that all county funds are spent in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Fifth—Repeal of the act creating the post of chairman of the county school board, insure a nine-month school term, remove "politics from the schools" and see that teachers are paid a decent-living salary.

Sixth—To use my influence for the consolidation of city and county departments which are doing duplicate duties—the school and health departments.

Seventh—Creation of a county commission form of government.

Eighth—Abolition of the delinquent tax collector's office, the work to be performed by the county trustee.

Ninth—Abolition of the county back tax attorney, placing the duties of this official upon the county attorney.

Tenth—Employment of a disinterested auditor to audit the books of the County Judge as well as other offices.

Eleventh—Enactment of legislation to abolish the iniquitous fee system under which justices of the peace operate.

A few matters of particular interest to Organized Labor which I am unqualifiedly for:

First—Old-Age Pension. In keeping with the Rooseveltian emphasis upon human value, I will use my influence in support of this progressive legislation.

Second—Employment Insurance. In my opinion, the employment situation can never be satisfactorily adjusted without employment insurance, and I favor and will support suitable legislation to this end.

Third—Federal Child Labor Amendment. I favor and will support a bill ratifying the Federal Amendment by the State of Tennessee. The place for the children of this country is in the schoolroom and out in God's given sunshine, and not in the mills and factories.

Fourth—Cooper-Hawes Bill. I favor and will use my influence in support of the ratification of the Cooper-Hawes bill, which will prevent the shipment of convict-made goods into this state.

Fifth—Free Textbook Law. I heartily approve of a law of this sort, and think it should apply to Hamilton county, as well as to the entire State of Tennessee.

Sixth—Federal Injunction Bill. I will favor and support legislation ratifying the Federal Injunction Bill, because I believe injunctions in labor disputes have retarded and persecuted men who were striking in order to better the living conditions of the people of the community.

Seventh—National Recovery Act. I am behind the program of President Roosevelt with all my heart and soul, and I believe the State of Tennessee should ratify the National Recovery Act in order to control industries and businesses that only do a business within the State.

I served in the Legislature of 1912-13, and my vote and influence was given to all legislation suggested by David Hanly, Legislative Chairman of the Tennessee Federation of Labor.

Harriman Mill Barons Again Defy Labor Board

Held Violator of Recovery Act, Case of Notorious Tennessee Hosiery Firm Is Referred to Justice Department.

The national labor board has ruled that the Harriman Hosiery Mills company, of Harriman, Tenn., violated Section 7-A of the recovery act in dealing with its employes.

"Entering negotiations in bad faith with the definite intention not to make any agreement," is the summary of the board's findings of fact in the case.

The Harriman case has been before the Atlanta regional labor board and the national labor board several times. The company has refused to adopt any recommendation to settle the strike at its mills. At the latest hearing before the national labor board, the company told the board that it would not recognize a union, that it would not enter into any contract, whether with individuals or representatives of a group of its employes, and that it would not submit to arbitration any question on which it could not agree with its employes.

The national labor board will send the case to the department of justice or to the national compliance board for action.

Following the board's decision, the Harriman strikers wrote to the president, and asked this question:

"Suppose the national labor board does send this case to the compliance board, where they sent Budd's case long ago, or to the department of justice, where they sent Weir's case on Dec. 18, and then again two weeks ago. We understand that it may take anywhere from six months to a year before the supreme court would get through with such cases. What are strikers who really believe in your administration's laws and acts on collective bargaining, like us, to do?"

Public Aid Given To One-fifth Of N. Y. Population

More Than 600,000 Family Groups, Totaling 2,500,000 Persons. Helped since Nov. 1, 1931, Report Shows.

Albany, N. Y., March 15.—One-fifth of the population of New York state, 2,500,000, and one-third of the children under 16, or 1,000,000, have received help from public relief funds at some time since Nov. 1, 1931, the temporary emergency relief administration reports.

Public relief expenditures for the twenty-seven months from Nov. 1, 1931, when the state began to pay part of the cost of municipal relief, until February, 1934, amounted to approximately $217,000,000.

This total does not include $41,000,000 spent by the civil works administration in the last three months of the period, nor $3,000,000 allotted to New York families by members of the civilian conservation corps, which would raise the total to $261,000,000. Nor does it take into account the millions advanced by the federal government for public works projects, the millions given for private relief nor the increased expenditures of localities and the state for normal hospital and welfare activities.

More than 600,000 family groups were receiving relief at some time during the period, totaling 2,500,000 persons. The report shows that last April a high mark was reached of 397,077 families on work or home relief at the same time.

SNOW SHOVELERS UNDER 30 BARRED BY NEW YORK CITY

New York.—It will be hard times for men under 30 so far as snow shoveling is concerned, according to an order made by the New York city sanitation department, which barred men of this age as emergency snow removal workers. Commissioner E. P. Goodrich pointed out that older unemployed men are much more conscientious workers than the younger members of the jobless army.

Another change in policy, Mr. Goodrich announced, will abolish the practice of having men wait in line, sometimes all night. The garages will be kept open at night during a snowstorm and men presenting the proper registration credentials will be put to work as soon as they arrive.

LAGUARDIA LEADS FIGHT ON ENDING CWA; URGES PERMANENT IDLE RELIEF SYSTEM

New York City, March 15.—Fighting Mayor LaGuardia, of New York City, is taking the lead in a nation-wide protest of municipalities against termination of the civil works administration and in advocating an unemployment insurance system to provide for unemployment relief in the future.

Mayor LaGuardia protested emphatically against ending of the CWA activities and transferring of the burden of caring for 160,000 SWA employes to the city and announced his intention of protesting personally to President Roosevelt. In a telegram to Harry L. Hopkins, federal CWA administrator, the mayor declared that the number of unemployed was not "noticeably decreasing."

In a letter to the United States conference of mayors, LaGuardia asked support of the conference for a permanent unemployment relief plan. The plan, as outlined in the letter, contemplates the institution of a nation-wide unemployment insurance system, funds of which would be built up through the taxing of "every employer without restriction" and by placing "a small tax of a few cents weekly" on all employes. Although the federal government would supervise the system, the mayor suggested that existing municipal agencies administer it in their respective communities, thus preventing the necessity of enlisting "a large army of federal employes."

In addition to administering the insurance plan, the communities, according to Mayor LaGuardia's scheme, would be called upon to "set up a system of unemployment offices in order to retain complete control of the unemployed and to direct all employment to be obtained from such source." That the CWA idea might be carried out under this system, he suggested that recipients of insurance payments might be required "to render services of civil works, to the extent of the insurance benefits they receive."

LaGuardia's telegram of protest to Administrator Hopkins, of the CWA, said:

"I must respectfully but most emphatically object to the present plan of terminating present civil works administration on April 1. Time will not permit the forming of organization necessary to take over work, and in addition municipal and state funds are so limited as to make carrying out of proposed plan impossible.

"While I agree that we must do something now to plan for coming winter, we still have the nine intervening months to care for unemployed, the number of whom are not noticeably decreasing. Responsibility too great to dismiss this matter with a circular order. Suggest conference earliest possible moment. Believe said conference should take place in New York, if possible, where we can have state officials sit in with us. However, will meet your convenience and we can all come to Washington if necessary.

"The federal administration had the vision, stepped in and prevented a collapse several months ago. Surely all of this good work should not be destroyed by abruptly ending federal relief before preparation and provision for a substitute system and thus precipitating a real crisis.

"F. H. LaGUARDIA,
"Mayor of the City of New York."

Barbers to Hold Special Meeting

George W. Perry, president of Local 415, Journeymen Barbers, announced Friday morning that a special called meeting of that organization will be held at Roosevelt Hall Monday night, beginning at 7 o'clock sharp.

President Perry asked The Labor World to stress the importance of matters to be discussed, and urged every member of the local to be present on time.

Hospital authorities have not yet sent out an order for his apprehension, so Roy thinks he will take a trip to Florida for a few more weeks' rest. Here's hoping he gets back in harness soon.

Inclosed find remittance for the bread you sent and thank you very much.

I visited the trades council and several of the locals and showed the bread and I think it has done wonders in boosting the label, as I heard this morning that one of our bakery managers said his bakers had to get right. But I don't believe everything I hear so I am going to see the manager myself.

Starting this week the Spectator, a weekly newspaper, will run an organized labor page and I have the label column and believe me I mean to boost the labels.

We get The Labor World and you can use my letter if you like. Maybe it will help line the Colonial bakery up as lots of their bread is sold here.

BALES BACKS JOB SECURITY FOR TEACHERS

Says Tenure Blocks Political Attacks.

WOULD STABILIZE TEACHING STAFFS

Legislative Chairman Local 246 Cites Facts About School System.

(By J. D. Bales, Chairman Legislative Committee American Federation of Teachers, Local No. 246.)

Indefinite tenure for teachers means that a teacher may continue in service during good behavior and efficiency.

The importance and the value of teacher tenure have been under consideration in this county since 1887. Since that time forty-nine cities in twenty-three states, fourteen states and the District of Columbia have secured tenure legislation for teachers.

In nine European countries teacher tenure is the rule rather than the exception. In these countries the teacher holds office for life, or during good behavior and efficiency. In all of these countries, Germany, Denmark, Switzerland, The Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Scotland, England and Wales and France, the percentage of illiteracy is lower than that of the United States.

An adequate tenure law benefits the children for whom the schools are operated. This is accomplished through the raising of standards, securing better teachers, and the elimination of the inefficient, or poor type of teacher.

Good tenure laws make better teaching, better schools and a better nation. It is important that teachers' minds be free for the problems of teaching. If they are worried by insecurity or by an ever threatening possibility of dismissal at the whim of the school board, or some official in authority that likes to use teaching positions for political patronage or personal favor, they cannot concentrate upon the needs of the children.

Permanency of tenure during successful teaching is a spiritual as well as an economic necessity to good teaching. Without a reasonable degree of security, teachers will inevitably be liable to cowardice, which will wreck personality and make impossible a wholesome influence with the children. If a teacher may be dismissed because she belongs to the wrong church, or inadvertently offends the wife of a school board member, or guesses wrong in an election, she takes on a lack of personality as a protective coloring. Private opinions and feelings must be buried deep—so deep in fact, that their very life is smothered out. Without tenure, teachers' standards are determined by those who control their jobs, and both teachers and teaching lack dignity.

A real hindrance to good teaching is the large turnover among teachers. Not only does this turnover keep the schools in an unsettled and disorganized condition (it is not uncommon for the smaller schools to have a complete new corps of teachers), but the parents and students are dealing with teachers who are unfamiliar with local conditions, and new policies are frequently substituted for the old, creating a lack of stability and permanency.

The schools cannot build up a unified educational system in a community where the personnel of teachers and principals is constantly changing any more than a physician can build up a steady practice by changing his location every two years.

Teachers have the right to freedom in extra-mural utterance and action on the basis of their right as citizens of a democratic country; they have the right of freedom of inquiry and research and to freedom in teaching on account of their obligations to youth. Such conditions produce good teaching, which results in intelligent citizens and a strong nation.

"During a depression, tenure laws protect the nation as well as the teachers, for they make a sturdy front line defense against the economic hysteria which demands that the higher salaried, experienced teachers be replaced by cheap beginners."—(Florence C. Hanson.)

From recent studies it has been found that tenure legislation has been supported in the belief that both the teacher and the pupil would be benefited thereby. The arguments in support of indefinite tenure legislation for teachers may be summarized as follows:

1. Tenure protects the teacher from petty political and social attacks.
2. The teacher is relieved of anxiety over the possibility of failure to secure re-election.
3. The teaching staff will be stabilized and teacher turnover decreased.
4. A higher quality of teaching personnel will be secured because of greater care in selection.
5. Teachers will be encouraged to maintain high standards of service and professional growth in order to secure the protection afforded by tenure.

Hosiery Workers Gain New Members

Branch 53, American Federation of Full-Fashioned Hosiery Workers, gained several new members at the special meeting held by that local at Roosevelt Hall last Saturday afternoon. Spokesmen for the organization stated the gains have been steady during the past few weeks, and that members are greatly encouraged.

Another meeting will be held at Roosevelt Hall Saturday afternoon, March 17, and it is expected that other additions will be made at that time.

Mrs. Althea Terrell, recording secretary of Branch 53, is recovering from an illness which has kept her confined to her home on East Main street.

Girls Receiving $4 to $8 Weekly Advised to Save

Don't Spend It All, Toronto Young Women Getting from $2.21 to $3.29 Are Urged, Professor Testifies.

Ottawa, March 15.—Girls receiving $4 to $8 for fifty hours work were paid in envelopes bearing the legend: "Your pay envelope and one of our savings accounts make a strong team that can help you to financial independence."

This was in the testimony before the committee investigating business practices, given by Dr. H. M. Cassidy, professor of social science at the University of Toronto, who made an investigation into wage conditions in Toronto and Montreal recently.

Some of the girls in Toronto enjoined to achieve financial dependence by saving got as low as $2.21 and $3.29 a week. In a Toronto clothing factory employing fifty-one women, twenty-one received from $4 to $6 a week and thirty from $6 to $8.

In Montreal, Prof. Cassidy found married women working in clothing factories for $6 for a week of fifty-six hours, and girls for $2 a week.

Manufacturers, taking rush orders, work their employes seventy-two hours a week in some cases.

Law Is Demanded To Stop Payment Of "Coolie Wage"

New York State Industrial Commissioner Urges Passage of Bill to Protect Home Workers from Vicious Exploitation.

Albany, N. Y., March 15.—Industrial homework for as little as 10, 8, 5 and 2 cents an hour is the lowest paid labor in New York state, Industrial Commissioner Elmer F. Andrews said in submitting a memorandum in support of the industrial homework bill introduced by Assemblyman Irving D. Neustein.

"Passage of the bill is a necessary first step in the enforcement of the minimum wage law for the protection of more than 30,000 women and children employed in industrial homework in the state," Commissioner Andrews said. "Their weekly earnings, which averaged $6.19 in the prosperous year of 1928, have been cut to as little as 25 cents a day for fourteen hours work. Skilled embroidery workers are working long hours to earn from 50 to 75 cents a day.

"Under existing law, the department of labor has control over industrial homework only when it is performed in dwellings housing three or more families. Most of this work is done in one and two family houses, many of which are in small towns and villages. Terms are dictated by the employer, often by mail, without any sort of regulation as to pay, hours or working conditions.

"Industrial homework will be either abolished or humanized by the payment of decent wages in the near future. In addition to its shameful exploitation of isolated and unorganized women and child workers at coolie wages, it constitutes a direct menace to the wages of factory workers, to industries operating in factories, to those homework manufacturers and contractors who pay fair wages, and to the industrial equilibrium of the state.

"Homeworkers employed by contractors paying decent wages are threatened by the helpless cut-throat competition of other workers who, in many instances, are forced to apply for relief money to make up the difference between their pitiful earnings and the bare cost of food and shelter. The state is doing a grave though unintended injustice to the women and child home workers in one and two family dwellings by neglecting to extend to them any of the protective standards that it applies for the benefit to all other workers. Under the proposed amenmdent we would be empowered to se that they get the benefit of minimum wage rates, compensation for industrial injuries, occupational diseases and other protections of the labor law."

Quincy, Ill.—The Quincy Trades and Labor assembly elected Leroy Bates and J. S. Leindecker to represent labor on the local NRA compliance board. Mr. Leindecker, a molder by trade, is secretary of the assembly and Mr. Bates is a delegate of the Musicians' union to that organization.

UNION POSTAL WORKERS RAP ECONOMY PLAN

Assail Announced Program of Department.

INFLICTS BURDENS ON ALL EMPLOYES

Retrenchment Program Held to Be Against Public Policy.

Three postal workers' organizations have made vigorous protest to Postmaster-General Farley against further postal economies at the expense of the employes.

In a letter to Farley, the Railway Mail association, National Federation of Postoffice Clerks and National Association of Letter Carriers declares that an "economy" order issued by the Postmaster-general on March 2 "inflicts harsh and unwarranted burdens on postal employes."

The order, the letter continues, "has no justification on the score of postal or public welfare. We strongly urge that you give consideration to its early and complete revocation."

The letter pointed out that since July 1, 1932, incomes of postal employes had been sharply reduced by salary cuts, compulsory furloughs and suspension of promotions and of filling vacancies, with the result that $80,000,000 of the $100,000,000 savings for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, came out of postal wages.

Excessive Economy Charged.

Taking up the further saving of $9,000,000 ordered to be made in the current fiscal year by day-a-month furloughs, curtailment of substitutes, reduction of city deliveries and discontinuance of vacations, the letter contended that the retrenchment program has "gone too far" and that its continuance would "militate against the public interest and postal usefulness."

In support of this assertion the letter continued:

"Postal operating processes during the last twenty years and more have been the subject of constant refinements until the saturation point has been reached and passed.

"In the elimination of lost motion, duplication and waste, our postal establishment, in its operating end, is without a peer throughout all industry.

Further Savings Condemned.

"From a postal employment standpoint, further savings cannot be made save through lower wages, inferior service or both. Public usefulness and not a balanced budget is the sole test of public success.

"Even more, the savings reported are more apparent than real. During the last two years the postoffice has presented a closed door to new entrants and service promotions, and its personnel in numbers has been rapidly shrinking.

"Were this to be the continuing picture of all industry, remote indeed would be the prospects of national recovery."

The letter referred to President Roosevelt's appeal to the NRA code authorities to decrease hours and increase wages and suggested that the postoffice department, "the largest single employer of labor in the country, if not in the world," should be in the vanguard of accomplishment "instead of observing a policy out of harmony with the NRA program."

DAYTONA BEACH TYPOS WIN NEWS-JOURNAL FOR UNION

Daytona Beach, Fla.—After a controversy extending over nearly three years the Daytona Beach News-Journal again employs members of the International Typographical union. In May, 1932, the management of the newspaper locked out the composing room employes because they refused to sign individual contracts. Since the adoption of the national industrial recovery act the hostility of the News-Journal to union workers gradually decreased until at present every composing room employe is a member of the International Typographical union.

Daytona Beach now has two union newspapers, the Sun-Record having been fair to organized labor for a considerable period, with the union label at its masthead.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—What early trade union movement used a symbol instead of its name?

A.—The Knights of Labor, which started its movement in 1869 in strictest secrecy because of blacklisting and victimizing of leaders in previous efforts to organize workers. The symbol of the "Five Stars" was used in all the activities of the order. This policy was discontinued as the organization grew in power.

Q.—Who is W. E. Bryan?

A.—President of the United Leather Workers' International union.

What Next!

Preparations to extract fuel oil from domestic coal are now being made in Great Britain. Imperial Chemical Industries, Ltd., announces that production from its new coal-oil plant at Billingham-on-Tee is expected to begin in the spring of 1935. The new industry is expected to aid the British coal industry, which has long been in the dumps.

CODE VIOLATION SENT TO JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

Washington.—The Fine Arts Lace company, Hugh Mehler, president, 7000 State road, Tacony, Philadelphia, Pa., has been cited by the national compliance board of the NRA for alleged violation of the code for the lace manufacturing industry.

The company is charged specifically with violation of Article III of the code, governing the operation of plant machinery. The national compliance board found that this company had run its equipment 57 hours per week beyond the maximum prescribed, or 137 hours instead of the limit of 80 hours. The board found this practice "gave the respondent an unfair competitive advantage over those members of the lace manufacturing industry who are complying with this provision of the code."

The national compliance board voted unanimously to refer the whole case to the department of justice for possible legal action.

Union Auto Workers' Achievements

Recent achievements of American Federation of Labor unions in the automobile industry are striking illustrations of the advantages working men and women may secure by pooling their strength in bona fide trade unions, organized and functioning independently of those who own and control industry and exercising, as President Roosevelt tersely said in his address opening the national convention of code authorities in Washington, "free choice" of their representatives for collective bargaining.

The first outstanding victory was won in Toledo, Ohio, when United Automobile Workers Federal Union No. 18384, after a five days' strike, secured union agreements for wage increases running from five to fifteen per cent from the following four companies specializing in the manufacture of automobile parts and accessories: Spicer Manufacturing corporation, Electric Auto-Lite company, Logan Gear company, and Bingham Stamping and Tool company.

All of these agreements carry full union recognition, seniority rights, and no discrimination against strikers. The Spicer company contract stipulates a minimum weekly wage of $18 for men and $13.70 for women on the basis of a forty-hour week.

The second victory took place in Cleveland, Ohio, when Automobile Workers Federal Labor Union No. 18463, after a short strike, secured a union agreement from the White Motor company raising wages from 43 to 51 cents an hour for common labor, two classes of semi-skilled labor from 60 to 67 cents and 65 to 72 cents an hour, respectively, and wage rates in the higher brackets five cents an hour.

These two achievements in one week indicate that when automobile workers unite in genuine trade unions and present a solid front to employers wage increases and better working conditions resulting from union recognition are the logical results.

Union Rubber Workers Advance

The organization of the workers in the rubber industry in Federal Labor Unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor is gradually securing union recognition and consequently improving the economic conditions of the working men and women in that industry.

In Mogadore, Ohio, after negotiations carried on by United Rubber Workers Federal Labor Union No. 18319, the management of the India Tire and Rubber company recognized the union and won the privilege of having its many products described as union-made.

In Los Angeles, Calif., employes of the Firestone Tire and Rubber company and the Pacific Goodrich company voted overwhelmingly in favor of Tire and Rubber Workers Federal Labor Union No. 18304, affiilated with the American Federation of Labor, in the election for collective bargaining representatives held under the auspices of the Los Angeles Regional Labor Board. The vote was 209 for the union candidates and 71 against in the Goodrich plant and 595 for the union and 80 against in the Firestone plant. With such a large majority in their favor, the Los Angeles Tire and Rubber Workers Union is now in a favorable position to proceed with bona fide collective bargaining for trade union wages, hours and working conditions.

Standing on the solid support of genuine trade unionism, the future looks brighter for the workers who live on the wages paid them by those owning the tire and rubber industry.

"Coolie Wages" Must Go

Bills to regulate wages and other conditions in industrial homework are being drafted in a number of States. They should be passed without delay. It is estimated there are a million industrial homeworkers in the United States. Under existing conditions, they are a menace to factory wage standards in every part of the nation.

Almost unbelievable low wages are paid in homework. Elmer F. Andrews, New York State Industrial Commissioner, in urging passage of a bill to protect homeworkers in his state, showed that wages as low as 2 cents an hour are paid women and child homeworkers, who number 30,000 in New York State alone. Their weekly earnings, which averaged only $6.19 in the prosperous year 1928, have been cut to as little as 25 cents a day for 14 hours' work, he said.

Commissioner Andrews well branded these "coolie wages" as "shameful exploitation." Such exploitation must be stopped. It endangers the whole recovery program and is something that no civilized nation should tolerate.

Labor's Power Demonstrated

The power of organized labor, the force that all unscrupulous employers of labor know and fear, was demonstrated in Shamokin, Pa., recently when the labor movement there threatened a boycott on all merchants who were affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce. The action was taken as a result of the hostile anti-union attitude of the National Chamber of Commerce.

As a result of labor's stand, the local Chamber of Commerce severed its affiliation with the national body, and organized into the Community Service Association, to which all citizens and classes of organizations are eligible.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

There are many men who don't see why they should get excited over low wages paid women workers. They fail to see that lower wages paid women tend to keep men's wages down and deprive men of work. The situation was made plain by Elizabeth Christman of the National Women's Trade Union league, in protesting recently at a NRA hearing against sex wage differentials in codes.

"The sex differential," Miss Christman said, "simply lowers the whole wage scale. It makes the women's subminimum the actual minimum rate for the industry, and that cuts two ways. It keeps women at low wages, oftentimes so low that the employer is actually subsidized at the workers' expense. It keeps men's wages down, and it invites the employer to employ women instead of men.

"So if you argue that working women don't need as much to live on as men because they have fathers and husbands to support them—which is absurd, of course, for women who work nearly always contribute heavily to their family's support—then you must realize that you lessen the number of jobs for fathers and husbands and you reduce their wages, too. You simply cannot raise wages, you cannot even maintain a wage scale—and consuming power, don't forget!—if you have a double standard of wage rates.

"The double standard is an unfair trade practice, too. It hurts the good employer. If the employer of women is allowed to pay wages lower than the employer of men, he can undercut his competitor to the ultimate disadvantage of both. It is this kind of thing that produces sweatshops—which you have noticed are exploiters of women and children, rather than of men."

* * * *

In a report that leaves no doubt as to the responsibility of the big growers in the Imperial valley of California for the violence in the recent strike of agricultural workers, the commission appointed by the National Labor Board to investigate the strike, declares, "The extension of collective bargaining to the field workers, in our opinion, would give the best solution to a difficult situation."

The commission lays heavy emphasis on the violation of constitutional rights as a cause of trouble and speaks words that deserve the earnest attention of public authorities. Citing the bad economic conditions of the Imperial valley workers, the commission adds:

"But worse than these is the harsh suppression of that which we in the United States claim as our birthright, the freedom to express our lawful opinions and legally to organize to better our lot. . . . We are firmly of the opinion that the best way to remove agitation and radicalism is to eliminate those factors that give rise to dissatisfaction and complaint."

"SHARKS AND SHYSTERS" HELD ENDANGERING NRA PROGRAM

Same Employers Responsible for Sweatshops Sit Up Nights to Devise Means to Violate Codes, National Consumers' League Is Told—South Lags Behind Nation in Labor Protection, Is Charged.

New Orleans, March 15.—The same "sharks and shysters" who were responsible for the sweatshops before the NRA went into effect "are today sitting up nights figuring out ways to violate their codes" and laughing at the others "who are gentlemen enough to follow them. The great tragedy of our system is that it is at the mercy of these sharks, whether they be members of the steel trust or the chiseling sweatshop operators of Connecticut or New Orleans," was the statement made by Miss Lucy Randolph Mason, general secretary of the National Consumers' league, speaking before that body, supplemented by Mrs. F. W. Meier, employment agent of the local Y. W. C. A., who discussed "Conditions in the Garment Industry of New Orleans."

Mrs. Meier headed a committee appointed by the Consumers' league to investigate industrial conditions in New Orleans and this committee gathered information from employers and employes on twenty-seven garment manufacturing concerns here.

"A survey of various garment factories making the cheaper grades of suits, pants, shirts, workmen's garments and dresses during the winter and spring of the past year," Mrs. Meier said, "showed that $5 a week was fairly representative of the average wage of experienced operators working a full week. The better suit factories, apparently, maintained a higher wage level than $5 a week, but both the employer and his employes were uncommunicative on wages.

"From time to time," Mrs. Meier stated, "garment workers reported certain shabby practices of employers to keep down the wages actually paid. On a few occasions, garments were found to be unsatisfactory or in need of alterations, and deductions in wages were made on these grounds, though the garments were passed on to the market. Hope rose high with the appearance of the NRA, but in some cases much of the old help was laid off or employes were told that they must actually earn on piecework rates the pay required by the code."

"America is the most backward of all industrial nations as far as protection of its workers goes, and the south lags behind even the low standard of the rest of the country in regard to provisions for the welfare of the working men and women. Louisiana and all of the other southern states suffer from lack of adequate labor departments to uphold the cause of the workers in such matters as wages, hours and conditions of unemployment. There is scarcely a southern state that keeps any record of hours and wages of workers, and there isn't a single southern labor department that has civil service," Miss Mason declared.

Throughout the south there is need of labor commissioners and labor inspectors who are "not afraid of losing their jobs," she said. Such officials must be appointive, but should be so fitted for their work, perform their work so well and so have public opinion behind them that they need not fear the business interests who do not want inspection of their factories and industries, she said.

Federal Pension Aid for Aged Is Held Near

New York City.—Federal legislation for assistance to states paying old-age pensions has every chance of passage in the present session of congress, Social Security for February says. "Never before have the prospects for providing approximately 500,000 old persons with security in their old age been so bright," the publication, organ of the American Association for Social Security, declared.

Senator C. C. Dill, of Washington, and Representative William P. Connery, Jr., of Massachusetts, are sponsoring the measure. By providing an appropriation of $10,000,000 for apportionment among the states up to one-third of the pensions paid at 65 years to citizens, the bill "will not only stimulate new states to enact old age security legislation, but would help to liberlize existing statutes and reduce the age to 65." At present, twenty-seven states have old-age security acts, but the pensionable age is set at 70 years as the minimum of fourteen of them.

Social Security declared that "the overwhelming majority of members of congress can be expected to vote favorably. Four state legislatures, Washington, West Virginia, Kentucky and Mississippi, during the past few months have petitioned congress to enact old age pension legislation. The American Federation of Labor has placed the enactment of these bills among its leading legislative issues."

President Roosevelt was urged by the monthly to assume leadership in the effort to obtain this legislation. "The removal of several hundred thousand aged from the employment lines offers one of the most effective means of reducing the problem of unemployment," Social Security declared.

RAILS PROMISE EFFORT TO REACH PAY ACCORD

Washington.—Managers of the railroads have notified President Roosevelt they will give "due consideration" to his wishes in the matter of a settlement of the wage controversy with their employes and will "exert their best efforts" to achieve an accord with the workers as soon as possible.

This was in reply to the president's letter urging the railroad wage truce be continued another six months after June 30, in effect prolonging but not increasing the present 10 per cent reduction.

The letter confirmed a meeting in Washington March 15 with representatives of the Railway Labor Executives' association.

The average wife begins to sit up and take notice when other women say nice things about her husband.

Black-Draught
Clears Up Sluggish, Dull Feeling

"I have used Thedford's Black-Draught for constipation for a long time, and find it gives relief for this trouble," writes Mrs. Frank Champion, of Wynne, Ark. "I think it is good for spells caused from gas on the stomach. If I get up in the morning feeling dull and sluggish, a dose of Black-Draught taken three times a day will cause the feeling to pass away, and in a day or two I feel like a new person. After many years of use we would not exchange Black-Draught for any medicine."

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

WEIRTON STEEL CO. CASE TURNED OVER TO DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Labor Board Declares National Steel Corporation's Continued Violation of Section 7-A Warrants Prosecution in the Federal Courts.

Washington, March 8.—The National Labor Board brought its controversy with the Weirton Steel company, a subsidiary of the National Steel corporation, to an end by turning the case over to the department of justice for prosecution in the United States courts. The board submitted voluminous documentary evidence charging persistent violation by the Weirton company of Section 7-A of the national industrial recovery act, equally persistent refusal to admit the authority of the board to supersede the election of collective bargaining representatives by the corporation's employes, and complete defiance of President Roosevelt, who issued an executive order, by the authority of the recovery act, conferring on the board the express power which E. T. Weir, chairman of the company, refuses to recognize.

In a resolution requesting the department of justice to take immediate action on the case the board stated that after an exhaustive inquiry it had determined that a "substantial number of the employes of the Weirton Steel company, unable themselves to procure a fair election," on two occasions requested the board to conduct an election "to enable them to choose representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection."

This the board attempted to do, but the company "refused to co-operate in such election, refused to permit representatives of the board to hold or supervise such an election or to enter upon company premises to make arrangements for such election on the company premises or otherwise," and finally refused to furnish the board with identification lists of its employes to be used in such election.

In a statement making public the action of the National Labor Board, Senator Wagner, its chairman, said that after E. T. Weir, chairman of the company, had refused in December to permit representatives of the board to supervise an election for the choice of collective bargaining representatives, President Roosevelt in an executive order conferred on the board specific power to supervise elections when desired by a substantial number of employes. A petition signed by 4,600 employes of the Weirton company requested such an election, which the board undertook to hold.

But Mr. Weir, according to Senator Wagner, "not only refuses any co-operation, but made it plain to the board's representatives that he would not deal with any representatives if they should be selected at a new election under the board's supervision.

"The board has incurred criticism for its patient persistence in exploring every avenue to obtain the co-operation of the company in carrying out the president's mandate. The company has not budged an inch in its refusal and therefore the government has no other choice than that which the board has now recommended."

LABOR WARNS WEAKENING OF CODES IS DANGEROUS

Progress Already Made Under NRA Imperiled by Lengthening of Hours and Failure of Pay to Keep Pace With Increasing Productivity.

Washington, March 15.—Weakening of code labor provisions is dangerous in the present business situation, the American Federation of Labor warns in its current monthly survey of business.

The survey reviews benefits under the NRA, declaring we are now benefiting from the effort to restore economic balance in the first months of the recovery program.

"Experience has shown," the survey says, "that it is possible to shorten hours, raise wages and build up consuming power with great benefit to industry in general. We have made gains, but with 11,690,000 still without jobs in industry in January, and workers' total buying power from industrial work scarcely over half of 1929, our task of readjustment is still far from complete. Every effort must be made this spring to get the unemployed back to normal productive work, and to build up buying power as increasing industrial profits make this possible.

Dangerous Developments Seen.

"At present, certain developments are threatening to destroy the constructive functioning of NRA in carrying out this purpose. If buying power is to be maintained, labor standards must be kept high. In several cases recently, industries have asked and received special permission to lengthen hours of work. This was done at a time when there were unemployed workers available, when 4,600,000 were being supported by work financed from government funds and 2,550,000 families were on relief. If we are to get business back on a self-supporting basis, increasing production must give jobs to the unemployed, not longer hours to those already at work.

"The weakening of code labor provisions is dangerous in the present business situation. It shows a tendency to abandon the original purpose of NRA and to neglect labor's part in the program. If NRA is to succeed, we must have a strong consumer market now, and for the future, organization of labor that will maintain workers' consuming power and keep labor's return from industry advancing in proportion with that of other groups.

"Experience under codes has proved that it is futile to hope for adequate enforcement of labor provisions in any industry unless workers are strongly organized in a trade union. Organized workers have a very definite function in the NRA program: To maintain and raise labor standards. Unless this function is properly performed, we cannot hope for balanced progress.

Strikes May Be Forced.

"How is labor to play its part? Either workers' trade unions must be recognized and workers have a representative in the councils where industrial policies are formulated (code authorities); or labor will be forced into opposition, with no way to win its rights except by warfare and strikes.

WAY OPENED FOR NBL ACTION AGAINST TRICKY EMPLOYERS

Washington, March 15.—National labor board action against employers who meet with representatives of the workers but do not really intend to negotiate with them is forecast by decision of the board in the Harriman Hosiery company cases and others, Senator Robert F. Wagner, chairman of the board, pointed out at a conference with reporters. The board's decision was one of three important developments emphasized by Wagner.

First was the board's decision in the Denver tramway case, ruling that a majority of the employes shall bargain for all. Senator Wagner said: "I think that has cleared up a great deal of doubt."

Second, the presidential executive order of Feb. 23, modifying the order of Feb. 1, makes the board's decision final, insofar as finding of facts are concerned, for the use of any other administrative body.

Third, in citing the Harriman and other companies to show cause why action should not be taken against them by the department of justice and the NRA compliance director, the board has taken a definite position as to the scope of collective bargaining and has held that collective bargaining is something more than mere meeting and discussion, without intention of reaching a collective agreement.

"So many employers were thinking that they were technically complying with the law when they would meet a representative group, never intending really to negotiate with them. That is obviously bad faith in negotiation and the board has held that it is a violation of Section 7-A."

Senator Wagner added that the board had had a great many cases of this sort, but expected fewer from now on.

Asked concerning the Weirton case, Senator Wagner said that he had not heard anything from the department of justice except that "they are going to prosecute."

Hotel Workers Charter 115 Unions, Flore Says

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International union and Bartenders' Alliance has issued 115 charters to new unions during the past year, many of them being bartenders' unions, according to General President Edward Flore, who was in Minneapolis making arrangements for the international convention to be held here in August. The union now has organizations in 400 cities.

Mr. Flores said that Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, recovery administrator, worked strenuously to persuade the organized restaurant owners to agree to the maximum 48-hour week in the code for the industry instead of their demand for fifty-four hours. The restaurant owners, however, were adamant in their position for the longer work week and only yielded the 48-hour week to women employes.

E. E. M'DANIELS PAINTS PICTURE RIVER PROGRAM

Union Official Enthuses Over Development.

SAYS CHATTANOOGA IS LEFT "ON SPOT"

Describes Scenes of Feverish Activity at Norris Dam Site Near Knoxville.

River Booster

By R. E. McDANIELS
Business Manager Local 175, Electrical Workers.

I have been a very close observer of the Tennessee valley program because it has everything to do with the future of the south. Its social reforms, the vast erosion program, etc., all goes to make a prosperous Knoxville, Tenn., and Florence, Ala. Chattanooga, sitting in the center of all this activity, has been left "on the spot."

In the nine trips that I have made to Knoxville since the TVA was born, I have impressed me more each time in seeing with my own eyes from the time the office furniture was sitting in the halls of the TVA headquarters, being uncrated, dusted off, and then set up in the different offices; being introduced to the department heads that were to carry on this gigantic program.

Now things have cleared, the people of this valley have realized that something is to be done—electric power cheap compared to prices in the territory serviced by the power trust pay, the Tennessee Power company being a member of that select group.

The people of Knoxville are to be congratulated, at the same time being fortunate in having a mayor who has his hands clear. And did he take advantage of the opportunity to discuss power for the taxpayers? I did say he did. Mayor O'Connor has done something that will be appreciated by all classes. He can be assured that he has the support of all union men and women, as well as all the workers in the Tennessee valley. Hats off to the mayor of Knoxville, and we must not forget those that took a part and helped put this new deal over.

Come with me for a few minutes to the Norris dam site; stand upon the mountain peak, look down in the bottom of the Clinch river and see men busy blasting rock, hauling and carting away anything that is in the way, building monster steel towers that sit on tracks, one on each side of the dam; steel cables will stretch from tower to tower that will carry the dump concrete in the very bottom of the river, and slowly but surely there will rise a great concrete wall that will store away water. When the dam is complete, and the water backed, you will see some eight hundred miles of water front. I invite you to go see for yourself.

Now we will take a trip to the Norris townsite. Quarters have been built to house the men that will start on the huge undertaking; some will stay until the finishing touches are put on, others will pass on; so turns the wheels of prosperity. The mess hall where we all eat and talk, men are working, sleeping, happy, content. A town is rising from the very top of the mountain. Fifty houses are under construction, the plumbing is complete in thirty, now the electric wiring is being installed—no soot or smoke, electric water heaters, electric ranges, electric heaters that will heat the homes, and that fresh mountain air one can breathe without getting soot on your teeth. Trucks are dashing from one building to another; men, men everywhere; cars carrying men from Knoxville and Clinton to and from work. Prosperity has returned, and will return for Chattanooga if we the people demand of our local officials, the governor of our great state, that they pledge themselves to see that the people of Chattanooga and Hamilton county get an opportunity to cast their vote, then we will see men work, men happy, children playing contented because daddy will be working, mother and daughter can have a new dress, cook something besides white beans and potatoes. We will live, the wrinkles will disappear from our faces.

Let's demand TVA power!

(Note—Mr. McDaniels will conclude his description of the valley program next week.)

Nine Cities Sign For T. V. A. Power; Knoxville Leads

Tupelo, Miss., First to Sign, Now Being Served at Low Cost.

Contracts to serve cheap TVA electricity to nine cities with a population of approximately 200,000 have been signed by the Tennessee Valley Authority, David E. Lilienthal, TVA director in charge of power, said Thursday.

Heading the list is Knoxville, Tenn., which already has been granted a loan by the Public Works Administration to construct distributing lines. The city's offer to purchase the existing facilities having been turned down, officials are now negotiating with an engineering firm to draw plans for a new system.

Other cities with which contracts have been signed are Decatur, Florence, Sheffield, Tuscumbia, and Russellville, in Alabama; Pulaski, Tenn., and Amory, Miss. Tupelo, Miss., the first city to sign for TVA power, is now being served with low cost electricity from Muscle Shoals.

"As soon as these cities have acquired their distribution facilities the Electric Home and Farm Authority will begin an intensive campaign to make available low-cost high-grade electrical appliances to householders," Mr. Lilienthal said.

"The outlook at Tupelo already indicates that there will be a large expansion in the use of electricity under the low TVA rates. As a result, the contracts with the eight cities just signed provide for a large expansion in their electric consumption."

Knox Labor Places O. K. On George Dempster

Appointment to Construction Code Authority Pleases Workers.

Knoxville, March 22.—The organized labor movement of Knoxville and Tennessee is very much pleased with the appointment of George R. Dempster as the southern member of the code authority for the construction industry. Mr. Dempster, who was named for the position by General Hugh S. Johnson, National Recovery Administrator, was former city manager of Knoxville, a member of the Steam Shovel Operators' union, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and, with his brothers, operates the Dempster Equipment company, which does construction work in East Tennessee. It is stated that the slump in business since 1929 has not caused his company to reduce wages or ask for reductions.

Mr. Dempster's appointment was recommended solidly by the eighteen union crafts of Knoxville and by labor leaders wherever his firm has had business dealings during the last decade. His appointment was also recommended by George L. Berry, president of International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union of North America.

Deluge of Strikes Visioned Unless Company Unions Are Outlawed

Green Tells Senate Committee That Automobile and Steel Corporations Have Challenged the Government in Attempts to Nullify Labor Section of Recovery Act.

Washington, March 22.—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, warned the senate committee on education and labor of the imminent danger of a series of strikes that would imperil the entire recovery program unless the committee took prompt and favorable action on Senator Wagner's labor disputes bill to make the National Labor Board a permanent institution for adjudicating labor controversies and outlawing the notorious company unions, which he characterized as "pseudo labor organizations."

Corporations Challenge the Government.

In the Weirton and Budd cases Mr. Green declared that the corporation magnates who own and control the steel and automobile industries had challenged the government by their defiant refusal to obey the labor section of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

As a result of this refusal, he declared, millions of workers in every part of the country, held back by the government's promise to protect them in their rights to freely organize for collective bargaining, according to the letter and spirit of the act, were becoming more and more restless. They believe they are the victims of a lawless conspiracy on the part of these corporations to turn the recovery act labor provisions into a mere scrap of paper.

Automobile Workers on Verge of Strike.

He urged the government to meet the unpatriotic challenge of the steel and automobile barons by passing the bill outlawing company unions and setting up a permanent National Labor Board.

Referring specifically to the deep discontent among the thousands of automobile workers, Mr. Green emphatically declared that the company-union-dominated automobile industry "is on the verge of one of the greatest strikes in the history of the nation."

Employers Nullify Section 7-A.

Mr. Green said that the National Labor Board's effort to obtain compliance with Section 7-A by some large corporations had virtually broken down because of the direct refusal of these companies, or the long delays experienced by the board in having its decisions carried out.

Victimization by Company Unions.

Workers, once filled with hope that the Recovery Act would permit them to organize without interference by employers, found themselves "victimized in a ruthless campaign of discrimination" by the formation of 400 company unions since June, Mr. Green asserted. The unrest in the automobile business was engendered solely because of compulsion by employers directed at forcing their men into company unions, he contended.

Labor Board Lacks Power.

The proposed labor disputes act, he pointed out, was a frank recognition that the National Labor Board has not the requisite power and authority to enforce Section 7-A; that some employers were unwilling to support the recovery program, and that if collective bargaining is to be assured to the workers it would have to be forced on recalcitrant employers.

Weir Branded as "Public Enemy."

Referring specifically to the Weirton case, Mr. Green declared that the officials who dominate the steel industry "can never be expected to yield to moral suasion."

"It has demanded a showdown," he added. "The answer of the government to that demand must be the adoption of the bill we are discussing today."

Mr. Green said that if the pillory existed today, "Mr. Weir should be in it, branded as a public enemy for the misery he has caused many families."

He characterized the Carnegie Steel employe representation plan as a temporary organization, "hastily set up, conceived in the minds of shrewd business executives, to serve as a shadow without substance for the period of the Recovery Act and then to be terminated at their pleasure."

THE ISSUE IS FREEDOM; COMPROMISE IMPOSSIBLE

"We defy the American Federation of Labor," says the great automobile industry.

The automobile industry, some of whose leaders have made political capital out of a feigned progressiveness, falls back on its haunches and shouts that it defies labor.

Before these lines are read there may have been a settlement of the issue.

But this cannot change: The automobile industry does not merely defy labor in denying men the right to organize into unions. It defies the United States government, which has enacted a law giving men that right.

The government must support its law, which is a just law and which rights a great wrong that has stood for many years.

"We defy the government!" should be the cry of the auto industry.

That is what it amounts to.

Now, further: The automobile industry has seemed overly eager for a test of strength. It has seemed to court conflict, almost to rush into conflict. But, it is surprising how many men of labor, long driven under the lash of court injunctions and corporate oppression, are saying, "Well, if they want a show-down, let's have it all along the line; let's settle the question everywhere once and for all."

The militancy of labor in defense of a sacred principle is something these employers cannot understand. They know nothing about that.

All labor stands today as a unit, demanding the freedom guaranteed by the law. There can be no compromise.

Colonial Bakery Not Organized

Reports that the Colonial bakers have organized and been recognized by the management were vigorously denied this week by officials of Chattanooga Trades and Labor council.

"The Colonial bakers were among the first to seek organization," a Central Body spokesman said, "but for some more or less strange reason they changed their minds and all dropped out. The matter was taken up on several occasions with the management, but without any satisfaction, and there is now not a single union baker in the Colonial plant.

"Other large bakeries are well organized, and no opposition has been encountered from the management.

"The Dixie bakery and McMillan's, however, are the only 100 per cent union bakeries at the present time. The Colonial is the only large bakery which has no members."

Electrical Workers Name TVA Boosters

Paul Hagberg, E. E. McDaniels and E. E. Crosby have been named by Local 175, Electrical Workers, as a booster publicity committee in connection with the Tennessee river valley program. Duties of the committee, it was said, will be to keep the progress of the work before the public, and assist in developing sentiment for TVA power for Chattanooga.

Robert H. McKenzie has been named Labor World correspondent for the Electrical Workers.

COURT DECREE FIXES STATUS LABOR WORLD

"Legal and Sufficient" Medium for Advertising.

ATTACK ON PAPER FAILS TO IMPRESS

Chancellor Rules Against Complainants in Hard-Fought Case.

Status of The Labor World as a medium for legal advertising has been definitely fixed by a decree of the chancery court, handed down recently in a test case brought by one Sanford and others against the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance company.

The Labor World has, since its entry into the local publication field on April 29, 1916, continuously published various classes of legal advertising, and until the case described was brought no formal question had ever been raised as to the sufficiency of such notice when carried in these columns.

The case for the life insurance company was handled by Wilkerson & Wilkerson, local attorneys, who defended the legality of the publication and who were successful after a hectic legal "scrap," the court's opinion establishing the fact that the publication of the trustee's notice in The Labor World was adequate and legal.

Although the said Sanford had maintained an office in Chattanooga for many years, the bill declared complainants "did not know such paper existed." The Labor World has thus gained a somewhat broadened renown.

The history of the case is given in a letter to The Labor World this week from Judge W. E. Wilkerson, of the firm which won the court decree, as follows:

Labor World,
Chattanooga, Tenn.

Attention: Mr. R. M. Cooke, Editor,

Re: Sanford et al vs. Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company. No. 25330, in the Chancery Court at Chattanooga.

Dear Mr. Cooke:

The facts briefly in the above case were these:

The Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance company loaned to Sanford and wife a large amount of money which was secured by a deed of trust on a piece of property on the west side of Broad street between Sixth and Seventh streets. There was default in the payment of the note and the trustee advertised the property and sold it. Deed was made to the purchaser and put to record. Sanford and wife then filed a bill in the chancery court, as above shown, to have the trustee's deed declared null and void on the ground, among others that:

"The advertisement of said sale in The Labor World, in view of

Secure Pledge Of Prompt Action In Harriman Case

Strikers Lay Case Before President Roosevelt in Person.

Real speed in the prosecution of the Harriman hosiery company was promised the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, by spokesmen for President Roosevelt himself.

Harriman strikers carried their case directly to the White House last week after the hosiery company came before the National Labor Board and virtually dared the government to proceed against it.

The National Labor Board had cited the Harriman company to appear and show cause why it should not be prosecuted. The next day the case was sent to the department of justice by the National Labor Board following the visit of the strikers to the president.

Pointing out to the president that months had elapsed before announcement of actual proceedings against the Weirton steel baron after that case had gone to the department of justice, the hosiery strikers appealed for quick action so that they would not be starved into submission. The strikers' letter asked pertinent questions, going right to the heart of the whole situation of compliance with the NRA and the rights of workers under this law.

President Roosevelt, the strikers were informed, took the case under consideration and instructed that a full report be made to him on the matter. Following this, the strikers were told by a secretary to the president that prosecution of the Harriman company would be started within thirty-six hours.

The delegation that visited the White House was led by Fred Held, second vice-president of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, and included Roy Gossage and A. E. Whitson, strikers from Harriman.

Hosiery Workers Begin Campaign For Wagner Bill

Series of Public Meetings Being Arranged as Feature of Vigorous Nation-wide Drive to Pass Labor Measure.

Philadelphia, March 22.—A vigorous, concentrated and determined campaign to secure passage of Senator Wagner's bills revising Section 7-A of the national recovery act and enlarging the power of the national labor board is being undertaken by the American Federation of Hosiery Workers.

A series of public mass meetings are being arranged in various parts of the country as one feature of this drive.

"The bill proposed by Senator Wagner is an urgently needed legislative addition to the national industrial recovery act and is based on practical experience and enlightened conception of legal procedure and social justice," says Emil Rieve, president of the federation.

"There is no absolutely certain legal method of insuring workers their constitutional rights," Rieve declared, "but demonstrated defects in the law should be remedied as quickly as possible so that unions can enjoy some equality of opportunity in the effort to secure those rights the NRA says the workers should have.

"In the last analysis wage-earners and other workers must organize themselves so that they can force employers, courts and public officials to respect their rights. The Wagner bill is an intelligent and sensible legislative effort to remove handicaps which hostile employers and public agencies are able to place upon workers struggling to establish effective unions in fields, factories and workshops.

"The national labor board and its regional subsidiaries has become a most important tribunal for labor in this stage of American economic development. Hard-pressed workers should not be forced to strike or to engage in expensive and long drawn-out litigation in order to secure elementary rights the law is supposed to guarantee. The labor board under its present direction is ably aiding those workers who have the 'gumption' to help themselves."

OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS AT DOOR MILL WORKERS

NRA Offers Chance for Hosiery Workers.

EMPLOYERS SEEKING EVEN LOWER WAGES

Branch 53 Invites Fellow Workers to Join in Forward Movement.

By FRED G. HELD
Vice-President American Federation of Hosiery Workers.

Chattanooga is the largest producer of all kinds of hosiery in the south, according to statistics.

There are approximately eleven seamless and four fashioned plants in this vicinity, if we include the Richmond Hosiery mills, employing several thousand workers.

These workers were of the group that were affected very much by the depression as to low wages and loss of time due to an overdevelopment of the industry. During the worst part of the depression these workers were forced to work from ten to fourteen hours per day when orders were to be had and could do nothing about it for no other reason than that they were unorganized.

This was one of the things that brought chaos into the hosiery industry. Each manufacturer was trying to undersell the other on the market, and to do so increased the task of the worker and decreased his or her pay.

This same procedure, of course, happened in other industries, but I don't think that any industry was affected as much or for a longer period of time than the hosiery industry.

It was for such reasons that the NIRA was enacted by congress. The thought was in the minds of congress that if industry would get together they could eliminate such practices by organizing and drawing up codes of fair competition. But they also realized that if only one part of industry was organized, that is, the employer, it would not and could not have the effect desired. Therefore Section 7-A was to be inserted in each code to give the worker the same opportunity to organize and protect his or her interests.

What has been the result since these codes of fair competition have been drawn up and approved?

Where the workers have taken advantage of the opportunity to organize they have reaped the benefits of the new deal, but where they have not they are getting just what their employer desires to give them. Especially is this true in the south. Take the northern area. The workers in about 75 to 80 per cent of the productive capacity of that fashioned industry are receiving a uniform wage rate, which ranges from 30 to 50 per cent higher than the southern section.

The hosiery workers in the south are entitled to the same consideration as the northern workers, and only by organizing will they get what rightly belongs to them.

But this is not the only thing to consider. If the southern workers do not organize and increase their wages the same conditions again will face the industry as prevailed before the hosiery code was drawn up and approved. Those manufacturers who are paying the higher rate of pay will be unable to compete with those who have the lower labor cost and will either be forced to close down their mills or insist upon a lower wage rate and the same vicious wage cutting will start all over again.

Then again, wages are not the only thing to gain by being organized, but a worker can keep his self-respect and not be looked upon as just another cog in the wheel and tossed aside whenever the straw boss feels inclined that way.

The hosiery workers throughout the country are responding to this opportunity and we hope that workers in this big hosiery center are not going to lag behind until it is too late.

The hosiery manufacturers of the south have organized a southern section of the industry for the sole purpose of further widening the differential between northern and southern workers and other advantages. They are ever on the alert to strengthen

Q.—Are employers under the NRA required to post the labor provisions of codes?

A.—Yes. An executive order of the president directs employers operating under approved codes to post the labor provisions conspicuously in their establishments.

Q.—Is the National Federation of Postal Clerks conducting a special membership campaign?

A.—The annual "Bring-a-Brother" campaign of the organization is now on. It continues until May 15.

Q.—Was the American Federation of Labor ever a secret organization?

A.—No. The A. F. of L. never adopted the policy of secrecy and from its establishment in 1881 took the position that the right of labor to organize is absolute.

What Next!

A new shunting machine or engine, developed in Germany, is operated by one man and shifts freight cars quickly and easily. It is a small motor-driven contrivance, under the direction of the operator, who walks besides the tracks. It burns gasoline mixtures, develops 6-horsepower and gets its traction on the rails with a rubber tire.

Labor Board Orders Company To Reinstate Union Employes

New Orleans, La.—The New Orleans regional labor board ordered the Caicasieu Paper company at Elizabeth, La., to reinstate a number of workers whom it was charged the management of the company had discriminated against because they belonged to the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers of the United States and Canada. The order, which requires that the men be paid for time lost, was issued by Father Wynhoven, chairman of the board, which also decided to investigate the charge that officials of the company were promoting a company union.

America Lags in Rehousing

Recurrence of slum fires in American cities is a ghastly reminder of the tragedies in the "warrens of the poor." In New York's most disgraceful district five children and three adults were recently trapped and perished miserably. How many victims this form of man's inhumanity to man claims each year would make an appalling total.

Fire prevention is possible in all cities. Only the greed of landlords and the indifference of the public makes it difficult to bring about better conditions. According to New York's tenement house commissioner, Langdon Post, there has not been a fatal fire in any of Manhattan's new-law tenements.

What is needed to bring home to American cities their failure in meeting the housing needs of workingmen's families? Cities and states alone can undertake the task of razing slums and rehousing the six million or more families in need of decent homes. But the Federal government stands ready to help with loans and grants.

So far only five states have passed proper laws authorizing co-operation in housing projects with the Public Works Administration at Washington. Only Milwaukee and Los Angeles among the large cities have charters permitting them to go ahead without special state legislation. The states are holding up the Government's rehousing program.

Since the war, England has rehoused one-eighth of her population in 2,000,000 houses, many of the cottage type with garden space. Germany, France and Belgium have made marked progress in rehousing their people.

The United States, richest nation in the world and urgently in need of a great rehousing movement, has hardly begun.

Enforcing Minimum Wage Rates

New York is trying an interesting experiment in invoking public opinion in the enforcement of minimum wage rates. The new minimum wage law provides that for the first nine months of any wage order the industry affected shall have time to set its house in order and that no one may be sent to jail for failing to pay the rates. But public opinion can be used to bring immediate compliance, by publication of the names of employers who do not pay the rates.

The plan is now being tested in the case of the laundry industry, the names of forty-one Brooklyn laundries who refused to pay the minimum rates having been published as legal advertising in the Brooklyn newspapers by the State Department of Labor.

The mere prospect of publication brought many laundry owners in line. Others defied the Department of Labor until the last moment and then agreed to comply. It is evident that the plan is getting results but it seems certain that in every industry there will be a small minority of employers who will not comply until forced to by legal action.

An Encouraging Sign

"The intervention of President Roosevelt in the proposed wage reduction by railroad corporations is an encouraging sign of the times," the Typographical Journal remarks. It adds: "Cutting wages will never restore prosperity."

Those Big Surpluses

Recent exposure by a senate committee of the huge sums loaned by big corporations for Wall Street gambling in 1929, and the even greater sums paid favored corporation executives in 1929 and succeeding years, have made a good many people see a light.

Of course trade unionists have been pointing out for years the viciousness of big corporation policy in the "boom" years—how the piling up of big surpluses contributed to the unbalance between production and consumption and made the depression inevitable—but it remained for the senate revelations to bring pointed comment from even conservative sources. Such was the comment of the conservative Evening Star of Washington, D. C., which said:

"The country would have been far better off if these huge surpluses had not been permitted to roll up and then to be used to stimulate the gambling fever of the people. The very fact that such surpluses were developed shows that there was a failure to distribute profits made in the industries to labor and the capital which made these industries possible. . . .

"These huge sums should have been distributed either in wages or in dividends, or in both, rather than merely amassed and used in Wall Street or to pay huge bonuses to certain individuals."

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

What a royal joke there is in this 10 per cent wage-raise and 10 per cent hours-reduction. Maybe nobody figured it out in advance; maybe it was just a snap judgment thing. But it gives the workers the worst of it and thus operates as a work-sharing proposal.

Take the man working forty hours at 40 cents. He gets $16 a week. If he is cut to thirty hours and raised to 50 cents he gets $15 a week, a wage cut of $1 per week. Isn't that nice? Ah yes, Cicero, it's nice—a regular piece of big business trickery.

And when workers get stuck that way the only thing they can do is go out and build themselves a union and then go back and sock the outfit with the solidarity and purpose of organization.

Bill Collins, veteran of scores of labor battles, stood up in Washington before Senator Wagner and told him plenty about the auto industry.

When you read the glowing auto ads, read also what Bill Collins had to say about the oppressive policies of the big outfits. Those guys think automobiles are just steel and bookkeeping. Collins, chief A. F. of L. organizer in Detroit, could testify that there are forty-two unions of auto makers in Michigan and as many more in other states.

That's a piece of big news, that is. You don't have to be gray haired to remember back to where there wasn't even one such union. Now there are eighty of them. Time races on!

Less than six months ago it was proposed to the representative of a big auto company that the company unionize and beat the gun with a union-made automobile. Well, the big company couldn't see it then.

But it won't be long now before we have union-made automobiles.

And do you know there are certain business machines, including typewriters, that are almost wholly union made? That's an achievement of the last few months. Think it over.

Labor is moving ahead. Again there are men in the field with the fervor of evangelical effort in their souls, the light of battle in their eye. They see the full meaning of unionism.

That band of big business men who stood up in the code conference in Washington and marked out the line of today as their Marne may have meant to stop labor in its tracks, with no further progress. But what a guess they have coming!

Another piece of news is that metal trades unions are gaining back ground they haven't had for years.

Labor is going places, but it'll be the employers who see things. Nightmares to them, until they get used to it and find the benefits. Then they'll find the new way is the best way, by a million miles.

The company union is out. Employers haven't given up yet—but they might as well. That's one big bad wolf that scares nobody any more.

Many places unions don't even bother to disband the company unions. They just elect the officers and use the old forms to serve their purpose. They work out well, too. If employers try too hard to keep their old pretense, congress will make a law and the law will probably cut so hard an employer won't even dare to look at a worker without permission.

The day has come when a man can stand up and call his soul his own. And that's what millions are doing for the first time in their lives.

Typical of the problems now arising out of the relationship created by Section 7 (a) of the national industrial recovery act is that presented at a hearing before the national board on the alleged contract which the Milwaukee Electric Railway and Light company made with itself through a company mutual benefit association on whose board of directors sat company representatives, and half of the membership in which was held by the company, because it matched, "dollar for dollar," every contribution of the men to the benefit funds. The company also gave 1 per cent of its gross receipts to a pension fund—so long as the labor contract made with its employes through the mutual benefit association held.

Query now: What sort of "free choice of representatives" is this? And what kind of collective bargaining can such an organization have with the company, whose representatives sit on its board of directors? And, since such a contract is not a contract at all, but simply a statement of the policy of the company, since the company is a party to it on both sides, what is the status of the funds thus created and set aside, which have been charged by the company to operating expenses in its accounting to the state commission regulating public utilities?

The money has been paid in by the public; is held by a trust company in trust for its supposed purposes; but the whole thing falls to the ground if and when the purpose of NRA is carried out in some real collective bargaining.

The welfare of working women in Bulgaria is well guarded by labor legislation. These Bulgarian women—largely employed in the tobacco and textile industries—are assured an eight-hour day, and in addition are protected from night work between 8 p. m. and 6 a. m. and from dangerous work of any kind. There is a maternity law for working mothers, allowing a woman to leave her work six months before confinement and prohibiting employment for six weeks after. Such protective legislation in Bulgaria has not resulted in men and boys taking the place of women. On the contrary, the women's bureau of the United States department of labor reports, women's opportunities for work are growing.

Musicians' Convention Meets In Cleveland on June 18

Newark, N. J.—William Kerngood, secretary of the American Federation of Musicians, announced that the annual convention of the federation scheduled to be held at Cleveland on June 11 has been postponed until June 18. The change, he stated, was made for the reason that satisfactory hotel accommodations could not be obtained during the week of June 11.

JOHN WEAVER SHERMAN DEAD.

Boston.—John Weaver Sherman, 68 years old, of the Boston Globe staff and a former legislative agent of the state federation of labor, died on March 11 at his home here. He was a native of Johnston, R. I. Sherman was an active socialist and had been his party's candidate for mayor of Boston.

STUDY OPPORTUNITY OPEN TO TRADE UNIONS THROUGH GOVERNMENT RELIEF AGENCY

Washington, March 22.—Federal emergency relief funds have been allocated to the states for the employment of unemployed professionals (teachers, lawyers, engineers, economists) in a program of workers' study classes.

Under this arrangement any union or union members wishing to study a problem affecting their interest may apply to Civil Works Service (CWS) for an instructor qualified to give them expert assistance.

Unions in a number of cities are already taking advantage of this opportunity. In Bangor, Pa., the County Emergency council has passed a project for study groups and three instructors were appointed; the advisory council responsible for the studies is to include all organized labor in Bangor.

Unions in Connecticut are asking for teachers to travel from town to town and hold classes in history of the labor movement, parliamentary procedure, public speaking and English. In Camden, N. J., several unions have held classes for eight weeks in trade union organization and are seeking help from CWS to carry on their classes. Chicago asks classes for union members and others to study the cause of their present problems and how to better their conditions.

Many Opportunities Open.

The CWS program opens many other opportunities. Trade union executives are confronted today by such questions as these: 1. How to secure information for wage conferences on dividends paid, profits, financial condition of the firms employing their members; how to keep and compile records of earnings of their members, employment and hours worked, for use in negotiations. An unemployed engineer or economist can be engaged under CWS to direct special studies in any industry. 2. How to report code violations, to secure and present legal evidence on discriminations against union members in violation of Section 7-A of NRA; how code provisions may be reopened. An unemployed lawyer could help. 3. Union members want to know and understand the code provisions under which they work. An instructor could help them.

Funds for Other Studies.

Also, the CWS funds are available for such other studies as problems under NRA, current events, economics, English, science, art, and for recreation programs.

Any union or union members interested should write to Miss Hilda W. Smith, National Director, with CWS emergency relief, Eighteenth and New York avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C. In your letter state the matter you wish to study. If you know anyone who is unemployed and would be particularly qualified to assist you in this study, give his name with your request.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

Workers Must Organize 100 Per Cent To Secure Their Rights Under Codes

Washington, March 22.—The persistent fight for low wages and long hours under codes of fair competition made before the national recovery administration here by the selfish groups which own and control our agencies used in the production of food, clothing, shelter and the other necessities and conveniences of life continually demonstrates the importance of working men and women in all industries organizing compactly in unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The every day experiences of the officials of the A. F. of L. and its affiliates indubitably show that only by united organization in bona fide trade unions can the workers effectively oppose the antilabor policies of the unpatriotic groups of employers working together in associations of capitalists for the sole purpose of grafting on NRA codes industrial policies formulated in the interests of those who own and control the instrumentalities of production and distribution instead of in the interest of those who do the necessary work.

This paramount necessity of all inclusive organization of the workers in trade unions to give them determining power in shaping the underlying policies of our economic system was trenchantly expressed in the report which the executive council of the American Federation of Labor made to the 1933 convention of that organization. The council said:

"It is obvious that the highly intricate interdependent relationship which has grown out of industrial and scientific developments has completely outgrown the simple procedure of final control in the hands of those owning the capital investments.

Control for Profit-Wrecked Industry.

"Great moral wrongs and industrial maladjustments have resulted from control directed in the interests of profits on capital investments alone.

"Only balanced control, proportionately guided by the interests of all functional groups, can assure a balanced progress that will avoid the frequent and disastrous industrial breakdowns of the past."

New Era of Social Control.

Pointing out that the national recovery act marks a new industrial era in which problems connected with industrial progress must be dealt with through controlling agencies, and that the principles and instrumentalities of associated activity must be developed adequately to function under these agencies, the council declared that "the national recovery administration presents a purpose and a method of developing moral and economic standards in the kind of industrial relationships which technical progress in production requires."

Function of Trade Unions.

On the relationship of working men and women and the place of trade unions in the economic set-up of social control under the national recovery act, the council said:

"To function in their own interests and in the interests of society, wage-earners must be able and ready for effectiveness as a group organized for associated action.

"Organization of wage-earners in unions is the first step for labor's participation in national planning and economic control, as it has ever been the first step in labor's progress.

"Unions can provide representative authority and responsibility. With adequate and competent representation, labor can do its share in carrying out the purposes of the NAA and in directing developments so that accomplishments may constitute a foundation for future progress."

Every hearing on every code held by the national recovery administration and the enforcement of the codes when they are given statutory form by President Roosevelt and National Recovery Administrator Johnson, present abundant evidence of the accuracy of the executive council's admonition that complete organization in unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor is the only effective instrument of protection which the workers have.

OHIO OLD-AGE PENSION LAW GOES INTO EFFECT

Columbus, O.—Old-age pensions for the eligible needy citizens of Ohio went into effect here when Gov. White signed the appropriation bill enacted by the recent special session of the state legislature appropriating $3,000,000 to pay the pensions during the last half of 1934. The measure also provides funds to administer the law through a new division set up in the department of welfare.

The amount paid to any person is limited to $25 per month, with a burial fund not in excess of $100.

To be entitled to a pension persons must be 65 years of age or over, citizens of the United States and Ohio for five years, and residents of the county in which they make application for at least one year. If single, they must not have property in excess of $3,000, nor more than $4,000 if husband and wife. They must be unable to support themselves, have no one who legally could and should support them, and have no income in excess of $300 annually. Inmates of penal institutions are barred from pensions, but residents in charitable, fraternal or benevolent institutions, hospitals and homes, public or private, are eligible if they meet the requirements of the law.

Jackson Organized Labor Enlarges Union Strength

Jackson, Mich.—Organized labor here is greatly elated over the increased membership which the trade unions have recently secured.

The building trades founded a Building Trades council which will have charge of all business connected with these trades.

Jackson metal polishers and buffers organized a new union, to be known as Local No. 81 of the Metal Polishers' International union.

Then the Jackson Journeymen Bakers got busy and organized into a local of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers of America.

Detroit Pharmacists Win Union Pact From Liggett

Large Bakery Signs Union Agreement; Stiff Fight Waged Against Nonunion Bakeries.

Detroit, Mich.—The Detroit Registered Pharmacists' association secured an important agreement from the Liggett company which operates a number of drug stores here. L. P. Meagher, president of the association, said the agreement recognizes the union and reduces the hours of work to the 56-hour weekly minimum demanded by the union without slashing wages.

Another important union victory is the agreement which the Bakery Wagon Drivers' Local Union No. 51, recently organized, secured from the Grennan Bakeries, Inc., which provides a minimum weekly wage of $25 for route salesmen plus 5 per cent over net sales of $150 and establishes a quitting time of 5:30 p.m. for grocery route men and 11:30 p.m. for restaurant route men. When routes are cut wages equal to those previously earned for three months are to be paid after the cut is made. Extra salesmen get $25 a week, all wages must be paid weekly, six holidays with pay per year are provided, and the company will pay 5 per cent interest annually on cash deposits required of its employes.

Protesting against the so-called "percentage" basis of pay, which resulted in wages that precluded decent living conditions, employes of the Tuller hotel here walked out. The strike included cooks, waiters, bell hops, elevator operators and all other branches of service employes.

DANVILLE LABOR OFFICIAL ASKS SEAT IN LEGISLATURE

Danville, Ill.—A. H. Solberg, a prominent labor official, filed his petition as a candidate for representative in the Illinois general assembly from this district.

Mr. Solberg has been active in the labor movement since coming to Danville in 1921. He is a member of the executive council of the Danville Typographical union and a delegate from that organization to the Danville Trades and Labor Council. His father was a union coal miner in Streator, Ill., until the mines were dug out and abandoned.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

How Cardui Helps Women

"Mal-nutrition" means that your body is not getting enough to keep it up, so that what it has to do is not done well. You may not be eating enough to keep up the work of the body, or there may be something wrong that keeps you from getting full value from the food you eat.

Because of mal-nutrition, some women have aches and pains every month. Such pains should not be neglected.

Take Cardui to give you a better appetite, to give you more strength from the food you eat — to build up and increase your feeling of well-being. Aches and pains go away as you build up with the help of Cardui.

"I'm Glad you're here"

"Friend Telephone, I'm glad you're here now," says Mrs. Housewife. "You are a common contrivance in most every home and office, so common that people don't notice you until they want something quickly; but we have tried to do without you—and it just won't work.

"You run so many errands, save so much time, bring us closer to our friends, cost so little, that we have asked you to come back. And, friend Telephone, everyone in the house is glad."

Probably Mrs. Housewife wouldn't say those exact words, more likely she would just call her friends to tell them the telephone was back in place.

The telephone is like that—rendering a friendly service that carries your voice, and your wishes to almost anyone, anywhere.

REAL SILK MILLS MAINTAIN SPY SYSTEM, NLB IS TOLD

Washington, March 22.—At a hearing before the national labor board, John B. Edelman, of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, charged the Real Silk Hosiery company, of Indianapolis, "with encouraging, maintaining and paying for an espionage system unequaled by any corporation its size in the country, as brought out in federal court proceedings in Indianapolis in 1928."

Edelman asked company officials if it were not true that for many years the "yellow dog" contract prevailed in the Real Silk mills. The officials refused to answer, calling the answer "irrelevant."

The hearing before the board was on a dispute between the Real Silk company management and American Federation of Hosiery Workers over the discharge of two union members, Nellie W. Savage and Estel Taylor.

B. Foster, organizer for the federation, declared that the two workers were discharged because of their union activities. He said that for thirteen years the company considered Mrs. Savage, member of the employes sales department, a valuable worker and the company personnel manager had given her an exemplary letter of recommendation. She was also a member of the Employe Mutual Benefit association's executive board, which had given her a public testimonial for valuable services. Foster said that it was very peculiar that it was suddenly discovered by the company that she was no longer a valuable employe at the same time she joined the outside union.

In the case of Taylor, Foster said he had been dismissed for distributing union literature, although the reason given by the company was for leaving his dyeing machine untended.

Foster said that J. A. Goodman, president of the company, had told his employes he would close the factory rather than permit an A. F. of L. union in the plant.

The case was taken under advisement by the labor board.

MORE ABOUT COURT DECREE

the nature and value of the property involved, was wholly inadequate and insufficient, and does not comply with the purpose and spirit of the provisions of the deed of trust and of the requirements of our statutes as to giving publicity to the sale of real estate."

The bill charged that the reason the sale was void, because advertisement of sale was made in The Labor World, was due to the fact that there were two daily papers published in Chattanooga, both of large circulation, that The Labor World had a limited circulation, and that complainants did not know that such a paper existed, they not seeing the advertisement as published in The Labor World. Defendants answered saying that the publication made in The Labor World was legal, adequate and sufficient.

Much evidence was taken in the case, and a considerable portion of this evidence was directed to the charge in the bill that the publication in The Labor World was illegal and insufficient, as above stated. Your editor, Mr. R. M. Cooke, testified setting out all the facts with reference to when the paper was established, its continuous publication since establishment, and its general circulation. The answer set out, and the evidence showed, that the Title Guaranty and Trust company acting as trustee, and other companies, as well as banks and individual trustees, had used The Labor World for publishing notices of trustee's sales.

A final decree has just gone down in the above case establishing the fact that publication in The Labor World of the trustee's notice of sale was adequate and legal. In preparation of trial brief, we, as attorneys for the insurance company and the trustee, relied upon the statute, same being Sec. 7800 of the 1932 Tennessee Code, which relates to the question of advertising of sales of real estate under mortgages, deeds of trust, etc. This section of the code, which is in Chapter 12 of the 1932 code, provides:

> "Should the officer or other person (that is trustee in deed of trust on real estate or court officer acting under decree of court) making the sale, proceed to sell without pursuing the provisions of this chapter, the sale shall not, on that account, be either void or voidable."

The decree in the foregoing cause, and the law relating to such matters, therefore, establishes the fact that beyond question The Labor World is eligible to make publications of sales by trustees and other persons acting in similar capacities, and such notices of sale made in The Labor World are legal and sufficient.

Yours very truly,

BEER AND ICE AGAIN SUBJECT FOR DISCUSSION

Central Body Considers Atlantic-Southeastern.

NEW PUBLICITY COMMITTEE NAMED

Annual Election of Officers Scheduled for Monday, April 9th.

Price of ice, present and prospective, was the subject for considerable comment at Central Body meeting Monday night, and the situation with reference to the local "big shots" in that business, together with their subsidiaries, was discussed at length by various delegates present.

It will be remembered that some time ago the price of the necessity was suddenly cut 50 per cent., which retail price held until very recently, when it was doubled. And consumers are wondering just how many more times the toll will be boosted before the hot weather sets in.

It was reported that the Southeastern Brewing company, subsidiary of the Atlantic Ice and Coal corporation, would shortly begin the manufacture of beer in their local plant, building of which with the use of non-union labor caused the concern to be declared "unfair to organized labor." It was brought out that while little or none of the non-union product is sold in the Chattanooga territory, workers throughout the field covered by the corporation have not been sufficiently notified of the situation here between the concern and Chattanooga workers, and plans were laid to urge affiliated labor groups in other states and communities to use their influence to have the corporation change its attitude toward working people.

With the advent of warmer weather, sales of ice and beer will greatly increase, and a special committee was named to have charge of the publicity campaign during the next few months.

NEXT MEETING IS "ELECTION NIGHT."

Indications that some of the offices in Central Body will be sought several aspirants were seen in the unusually large number of nominees placed in the various races, to be voted on at next regular meeting, when officers will be elected and installed. When nominations were closed "for the night," however, it was found that no prospective opponents had yet been suggested for many of the executive board, although practically all other places to be filled indicated a rush for the honors.

The constitution provides that nominations may be made at any time before balloting begins, and it is possible other names may be placed in the running before the final vote is taken.

Officers to be elected include three delegates to the convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, and already some seven or eight have been "announced" for that honor.

All of which means that the session on Monday, April 9, will be unusually interesting, and that a capacity crowd will likely be on hand to cast their preference.

McDaniels Again Asks Quick Action On Power Matter

Says Failure to Take Advantage T. V. A. Would Be Ruinous.

By E. E. McDANIELS
Business Manager, Local 175, Electrical Workers.

Well, folks, here we are to try and finish the description of Norris dam, the Norris town site. It's impossible for me or anyone else to draw a perfect picture, but the main thing is to get the laboring people of this city and county to thinking.

Men will be working at Norris dam for the next four years, then the main object of this monster dam will have been realized. Electricity will flow in every direction, at a price so reasonable that the farmer can have electric lights, motors to pump water into his house, electric milking machine; the old flat iron will soon pass out of existence, then the faithful farmer's wife will have time to plant flowers, and have all the modern conveniences that the housewife of the city enjoys; then with TVA power available you won't be embarrassed with a representative of a power syndicate calling at your home checking the number of lights and appliances, as if the meter was not sufficient to determine the number of K. W. H. consumed.

Norris City, up Knoxville way, will be the garden spot of the world, five hundred beautiful homes with all modern conveniences, all the lawns will be uniform, a crew of men will be employed to cut the grass, keep the grounds policed; it is something new and will be visited by thousands of people from all parts of the United States.

Since reading the Chattanooga News and the morning Times, I am forced to change my description of Norris City; let us go out to Chickamauga dam or Hiwassee dam and take a look at our own Chattanooga, men working building a monster concrete wall that will be equal to Norris dam, then in a short span of time we will be using electricity generated just up the river; let's name this dam after the man that made it possible, "Franklin D. Roosevelt"—the name alone stands for a new deal—and what that would mean to Chattanooga, more than anything I can think of, but we have plenty of supposed to be he men that have better plans for the dear people, so they say.

With TVA power available our factories will be humming, and it will also be an inducement for new and larger factories to locate in this city, they would realize a saving that would pay a large per cent of their taxes. This would also apply to the smaller consumer and taxpayer.

If we fail to take advantage of the opportunity, then we will see our factories leave and locate where cheaper power is available, Hamilton county will lose thousands of its loyal citizens as they will be forced to seek employment in other cities, or we will have to ask for more CWA funds.

Our hands are tied, so says one of the power company officials; he also states we should wait a few years, then what? Some one has said that this should not be made a political issue. If it takes politics to bring this relief to our city, then I'm in favor of politics.

I have read with much interest the statements appearing in the press made by our public-spirited officials and leading citizens, we are on the road that will lead to prosperity, let us lay aside our personal opinions of each other, political or otherwise, and march on to victory. We can untie the knot that is supposed to have our hands bound.

We, the people, insist that our public officials take a definite stand, so we may know just what to expect of them.

IS CHATTANOOGA ASLEEP?

Editor The Labor World:

It may be a bit unfair to Chattanooga as a whole in asserting we are asleep, but I am compelled to acknowledge we lack a whole lot being as wideawake as our smaller neighboring towns. Now I am sure every one with a reasonable amount of gray matter can really assume in their own mind just what I am referring to when I make the above statement.

There is no absolute reason why we shouldn't exercise every effort possible to demand the benefits that are and can be acquired through the

President Green Declares Auto Industry Agreement Protects Right to Organize

Holds Settlement "Represents the Application of Common-Sense Principles Which Should Apply to Human Relations in All Industry"—Machinery of Peace Set Up.

Washington, March 29.—Following five days of negotiation in Washington, the threatened automobile strike was averted by a plan of settlement proposed by President Roosevelt and accepted by workers and employers.

The settlement was hailed by President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, as guaranteeing the right of the automobile workers to organize and as insuring strict observance of Section 7-A of the national industrial recovery act.

"The settlement," President Green further said, "represents the application of common sense principles which should apply in human relations in all industry. . . . Let us hope that it means . . . recognition on the part of the automobile manufacturers that the old order is passing and a new deal which provides for the proper recognition of the rights of labor is here."

Section 7-A Interpreted.

The president issued a statement covering the settlement and indicating his understanding and interpretation of Section 7-A. He said, reduced to plain language, this section means:

(a) Employes have the right to organize into a group or groups.

(b) When such group or groups are organized they can choose representatives by free choice and such representatives must be received collectively and thereby seek to straighten out disputes and improve conditions of employment.

(c) Discrimination against employes because of their labor affiliations, or for any other unfair or unjust reason is barred.

Terms of Settlement.

The president announced the following as the mode of settlement:

1. Employers agree to bargain collectively with the freely chosen representatives of groups and not to discriminate in any way against any employee on the ground of his union labor affiliations.

2. If there be more than one group each bargaining committee shall have total membership pro rata to the number of men each member represents.

A board of three members, representing industrialists, labor and the third a neutral, is to be selected to pass on all questions of representation, discharge and discrimination.

Freedom of Choice Stressed.

Disclosure of outside union membership lists to employers is covered in the following statement of the president: "Such a board (of three members) to have access to all payrolls and to all lists of claimed employe representation. . . . In cases where no lists of employes claiming to be represented have been disclosed to the employer, there shall be no basis for a claim of discrimination. No such disclosure in a particular case shall be made without specific direction of the president."

The president said the government makes clear it favors no particular union or particular form of employe organization or representation. He said "the government's only duty is to secure absolute and uninfluenced freedom of choice without coercion, restraint or intimidation from any source." In increases of working forces, married men with families shall come first, and then seniority, individual skill and efficient service.

Principal Point Gained.

In a statement on the settlement, Mr. Green said:

"The terms of the settlement of the threatened automobile strike recommended by the president and accepted by the automobile manufacturers and the workers, guarantees the workers the right to organize, to bargain collectively and to be represented by men of their own choosing.

"This means that while the workers gained the principal point for which they were contending—strict observance of Section 7-A of the national recovery act, the automobile manufacturers have simply given assurance of their full compliance with the labor section of their own industrial code of fair practice, their willingness to obey the law.

Machinery of Peace Set Up.

"Under the stipulations provided for in the settlement, the automobile manufacturers and their workers may proceed to adjust and settle their differences in an orderly and business-like way. The scene of the conflict has been transferred from the strike field to the council room. If fair and just dealing is practiced by both sides and good faith is shown by the representatives of the automobile manufacturers and their workers, a fair and just settlement of all grievances which have arisen between the two contending forces will be brought about.

"The machinery for collective bargaining has now been set up. It depends upon those who will operate this machinery as to whether it will operate successfully or fail utterly. The public interest calls for the utilization of this machinery to the fullest extent, for the settlement of disputes which threaten the peace of the industry and the well-being of those associated with it, and for the settlement of just grievances presented by the employes in a prompt and equitable way.

"Peace Without Victory."

"There is no basis for a claim on the part of either side of the controversy, employers or employes, that either has gained a victory over the other."

The settlement ended five tense days of conferences between the president and automobile employers and the president and a group of leaders of automobile workers unions headed by William Collins, American Federation of Labor organizer in the Detroit area. Gen. Johnson, recovery administrator, was active in the negotiations, as was also Mr. Green.

The workers asked the right to vote for representatives of their own choosing and for reinstatement of workers discharged for union activity. These demands were strenuously opposed by the automobile magnates. The threatened strike would have involved many thousands of workers in Detroit, Cleveland, Flint and other big automobile centers. Ultimately, it might have spread to accessory and steel plants.

GREEN DENOUNCES COMPANY UNION AS EMPLOYERS' PLAN TO CONTROL ECONOMIC LIFE OF THE WORKERS

Charges Wholesale Violation of Labor Section of Recovery Act by Corporations Which Have Forced Employes Into Company Unions and Victimized Thousands for Joining Trade Unions.

Washington, March 29.—Company unions are "creatures of corporations" and the "means by which industrial management exercises control over the economic life of the workers," declared William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in a radio address here urging nationwide support of the Wagner industrial disputes bill on which hearings are being held by the senate committee on education and labor.

They are "set up, established, financed, fostered and maintained by the company," he added, and "are worse than no unions at all."

In describing the recent broad development of company unions and the necessity for the prompt enactment of the Wagner bill which definitely outlaws them, Mr. Green said:

Labor Guarantee in Recovery Act.

"There is incorporated in every industrial code of fair practive approved by the president a section which provides: 'That employes shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection; that no employe and no one seeking employment shall be required as a condition of employment to join any company union or to refrain from joining, organizing, or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing; and that employers shall comply with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and other conditions of employment, approved or prescribed by the president.'

Corporations Nullify Right to Organize.

"This is a clear, simple definition of labor's right to organize in its own way into its own selected union. But, corporations say to their employes, 'Thou shalt not: true, the law says you may join a union of your own choosing but we say you shall not.' Instead, we will form your union for you, draft its by-laws, pay your union representatives for their services and bear the expense incurred in running your union. We will supply you with a ready-made company union of our own choosing (not yours) and we expect each and all of our employes to be members of it.

"How savage and greedy some large corporations are! These big fellows, big business, not only exercise price-fixing monopolistic control, crushing out small competitors, under protection of industrial codes, but they also seek to extend their monopolistic control over the economic power of their workers. How long will the people of the nation permit big business, greedy corporations, to exercise such arrogant, despotic control over the economic and industrial

Seamless Hosiery Workers Planning Get-Together Meet

Open Session to Be Staged Saturday in Alton Park Town Hall.

Members of Local 1744, Seamless Hosiery Workers, announce a special open session for that group, to be held at the town hall in Alton Park Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

Speakers will be present to discuss general conditions and explain labor's status under the NRA, it was said, and a capacity crowd is expected to fill the hall, which is located over the fire hall in that community.

All workers of this trade are cordially invited to be present.

Organization of textile and hosiery workers in the Chattanooga district has taken on new life during the recent past, and according to spokesmen for the mill workers there has been an awakening which indicates a solid movement for united action in future.

An officer of Local 53, Full Fashioned Workers, discussing the present situation with a representative of The Labor World this week, said:

"The hosiery workers of Chattanooga are waking up to the needs of the hour. They have slept along in some of the most deplorable conditions in the United States. This condition should not exist in a united country. The capitalists are united and should be, and the working class should be given the right to unite and be protected from interference. Our constitution of the United States calls for equal rights in all of the forty-eight states.

"The Civil war set the south back so much in every respect that if she was given 10 per cent over the north in wages instead of under, it would take fifty years more to gain an equal footing and wipe out the untold poverty.

"Frances Perkins said that people of the south didn't have shoes because they didn't have the money to buy them. That is the truth and I can show you any number that are forced to go barefooted all summer, so that they can have something to wear in the dead of winter. These people live mostly on little farms, although you will find some cases in the cities where grown people are forced to go barefooted. The people in the cities and towns are not paid enough to buy the necessities of life, and cannot pay the farmers what their produce is worth. Therefore the farmer cannot buy his necessities. If the manufacturer would take a smaller profit and pay better wages the circle would roll in perfect harmony.

"People want to organize, some few may not. Those that do not are misinformed and should be forced to organize, with capital organizing like it is. If the workers do not organize we will be back in the same old rut as before."

DECATUR TRADE UNIONS INCREASE MEMBERSHIP

Decatur, Ill.—The organized labor movement in Decatur is meeting with marked success in a campaign for increased membership.

The Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen's union initiated twenty new members and announced a vigorous campaign to unionize the National Tea, the Atlantic and Pacific and Kroger chain stores, which have hitherto fought all attempts of the unions to secure decent hours and wages for the employes of these concerns.

Federal Labor Union No. 14481, affiliated with the A. F. of L., also initiated a number of new members and is carrying on with unremitting energy its campaign for no reduction of wages of CWA employes and other workers here.

An unique situation has developed in connection with the Perfect Cleaners. The concern charged the prices fixed by the code for the cleaning industry until certain judges challenged its constitutionality. Then they lowered their prices to 50 cents per garment on the claim if they continued charging the code prices they would be forced out of business. A short time ago they wanted to raise the minimum wage from 27 cents to 40 cents per hour, but it was reported that the Cleaners and Launderers' association stopped them.

AYMON POINTS TO IMPORTANCE OF CONVENTION

Urges Local Unions to Send Delegates.

MEMPHIS MEET TO SET FUTURE COURSE

President Asks Sacrifice If Necessary to Insure Representation.

The Tennessee Valley Authority will be given "considerable attention" at the annual convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, Paul Aymon, president, predicted in a statement issued from Memphis this week.

"The TVA, given the proper support, will help in making our state one of the greatest industrial states in the nation," Mr. Aymon said.

Sends Statement.

In a statement sent out from Memphis to the labor press of the state, Mr. Aymon asked that his message be passed on to local unions. It follows:

"I do hereby call it to your attention that it is very essential for every local in the state to be represented by its most capable men at the Tennessee Federation of Labor convention, which will be held at the Gayoso hotel, Memphis, Tenn., May 7, 8 and 9.

"I know that many treasuries of local unions have been depleted, and this also applies to central bodies, but even if you have to make sacrifices to send delegates to the convention, don't fail to make these sacrifices.

"This is going to be one of the most important conventions the federation has ever had. Many important matters will come up for discussion. Among these are: Tennessee adopting the national recovery act, the ratification of the child labor amendment, the ratification of the federal injunction law, the old-age pension, the unemployment insurance, and ratification of the Cooper-Hawes bill. The latter bill prohibits the shipment of convict-made goods.

"The free textbook law will be discussed. It's the duty of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and its delegates to offer opposition in the rural as well as the urban centers against members of any legislative body that is opposed to these legislative steps.

"Furthermore, there must be considerable attention given to the Tennessee Valley Authority in this state. I believe that under the proper consideration and with the proper support of the labor movement, the TVA will make Tennessee one of the greatest industrial states in the Union. It will certainly give the labor movement a broader field for greater and better membership.

"I request that all these matters be considered and that each local union and central body in the state pledge its co-operation in reaching our objectives."

Stove Mounters To Hold Open Meeting

An open meeting for all "Stove Mounters, Assemblers, Gas Range Mounters, Riveters, Welders, Cutters, Punchers, Breakers and men in all branches" of the trade is called for Saturday night at 7:30, in the lodge hall at 208½ West Main street.

The session is to be under auspices of Local 101, International Union of Stove Mounters, and several well-known local trades unionists are scheduled to make short talks.

It is announced that refreshments will be served, including beer, and a capacity crowd is expected.

Union-Made Cigars On Mail-Order Plan

Circular letter from "The Vanguard, National Producers' and Consumers' league," at Tampa, Fla., read Monday night at Central Body, offers high-grade hand-made cigars with the union label in any quantity. The letter declares "we do not use the label to hide inferior products." Special terms are offered in quantities for agents.

Address of the cigar concern is P. O. Box 5085, Tampa, Florida.

QUITS LABOR BOARD.

Washington.—Senator Robert F. Wagner announced March 19 that he had accepted with deep regret the resignation of George Creel as chairman of the San Francisco regional labor board. At the same time Senator Wagner announced the appointment of Dr. Francis Grady, dean of the School of Economics, of the University of California, as the new impartial chairman of the San Francisco board, and of Robert J. Calkins, assistant professor of economics of the University of California, as impartial vice-chairman. Creel found that his duties as state director of compliance made it impossible for him to carry as well the chairmanship of the regional board.

Automobile Industry Buncombe

Automobile workers organized under the banner of the American Federation of Labor are seeking to "run" the automobile industry, the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce says in full page advertisements in the daily press.

This assertion is only one of many misleading statements in the advertisement, which is patently intended to prejudice the public against the automobile workers. There is of course no truth in the assertion. The organized automobile workers are not trying to "run" the industry. They are asking only the right to organize and have a voice in the determination of the wages they receive and the conditions under which they work.

The feudal-minded automobile magnates are fighting the right of the workers to organize without interference. As President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, says:

"The issue raised between the workers and their employers in the automobile industry is clear and cannot be confused. The question is: Do the automobile manufacturers intend to observe the law? Will they permit automobile workers to enjoy the rights guaranteed them by the labor provisions of the automobile industrial code of fair practice? Shall the workers be permitted to organize their own union, bargain collectively, be represented by men of their own choosing, and do this free from intimidation or coercion of their employers?"

That is the only issue involved in the industrial conflict between the automobile manufacturers and their employes.

Setback for Cheap Labor

Under the hours, wages and fair practice provisions of NRA industrial codes, the old Chamber of Commerce ballyhoo intended to lure new industries to cities in the South is losing some of its force, for the offer of cheap labor can no longer be made to stand up.

Chambers of Commerce are now making a strenuous effort to maintain the cheap labor guarantee by applying for exemptions from the minimum wage provisions in coded industries. Fortunately, the applications are meeting difficulties because of the NRA requirement of proof.

Recently, in the application for exemption from the cotton garment code, a manufacturer of work trousers in Culpepper, Va., who was supported by the commercial organizations of his town, submitted a list of costs as evidence he could not pay the minimum weekly wage of $12. But the costs were questioned at a public hearing. The workmanship on the trousers exhibited was held to be better than that of ordinary work trousers. As a result, the cause of cheap labor seems to have suffered another setback.

Here is common sense from the report of the special commission appointed by the National Labor Board to investigate the strike of agricultural workers in Southern California: "We are firmly of the opinion that the best way to remove agitation and radicalism is to eliminate those factors that give rise to dissatisfaction and complaint."

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

The National Federation of Postoffice Clerks is calling upon its local organizations to inaugurate campaigns for emergency employment of postal substitutes.

These local organizations are being asked to acquaint welfare and other agencies interested in the rehabilitation of the unemployed to interest themselves in the situation confronting the 26,000 substitutes in the postal service, who are, by the recent furlough order, to all and intents and purposes debarred from employment. Employment ads in newspapers are also urged.

This is after several years of the most meager earnings which in many cases averaged less than $5 a week and in some instances has been as low as 50 cents for a two weeks' period.

These substitutes have been unable to seek outside employment, inasmuch as they are required to report for duty and to remain available for call at all times. Even when in dire want, many of them have been refused CWA and other emergency employment because "they had a government job."

Some have eked out a starvation existence for as long as ten years. Now the entire 26,000 are out completely during the life of the furlough order or until July 1. They need help and need it quickly.

Some city dwellers who have never seen a horse may think that horseshoes are no longer made. They are mistaken. An NRA code for the horseshoe and allied industries has recently been approved and the administrator's report to the president shows that horseshoe manufacturing is still a substantial though rapidly declining industry.

Horseshoe manufacturing and horseshoeing are ancient industries and are likely to survive for many years, despite the automobile, airplane and other modern inventions. Horseshoers still have a union, which was one of the first in the United States. The union was formed in 1874 as the Journeymen Horseshoers' National Union of the United States of America. With extension of jurisdiction to Canada, this name was changed in 1893 to the International Union of Horseshoers of the United States and Canada.

The "Sozialdemokrat' of Czechoslovakia publishes an appeal for the intensification of the boycotting of Hitler-Germany. The appeal is equally applicable internationally. It is as follows:

"The boycott of goods from Hitler-Germany decided on by the International Federation of Trade Unions and the Labor and Socialist International must be intensified. Although the foreign trade of Germany in 1933 showed a further substantial decline, yet if all the labor organizations and all really democratic forces were to display the utmost energy, the fascist dictatorship would suffer still more.

"Germany is now beginning to make new and very determined efforts to develop her commercial relations with all states. It is not impossible that she will have a certain amount of success in these efforts. These endeavors of hers should be frustrated by the most resolute boycotting by the working class and by friends of democracy in all countries. Every trade unionist should do his or her very best to prevent the purchase of German goods."

Heavier Penalty Asked for Wage Law Violators

Montreal, Canada.—Organized labor in the province of Quebec favors amending the provincial minimum wage law so that adequate fines may be imposed on employers who become persistent offenders against the policy of the government in banning starvation wages for women and children.

In a recent case before Judge Marin the Mayflower Dress company was found guilty of underpaying sixteen women employes by $3.97 weekly and the Royal Silk mills had been convicted of failing to furnish information regarding wages paid twelve girl employes to the minimum wage board. Both concerns were fined the maximum, $50 and costs, at present allowed by the law.

In imposing the fines Judge Marin expressed the belief that there should be statutory power granted for heavier fines so as to make the low wage rates at least more costly for the employers who repeatedly flout the law.

Lucien Rodier, attorney for the minimum wage board, who brought the action against the two concerns, joined with Judge Marin in urigng larger penalties for persistent violators of the minimum wage act. He said that at present many employers who are underpaying women workers several hundred dollars yearly do not mind appearing before the court once or twice a year and paying a $50 fine.

"What we are trying to do," Mr. Rodier told the court, "is to increase the fine to that of the Ontario board. If this were done, first offenders would be liable to a fine from $200 to $500 plus costs and if they appeared before the court a second time they would be liable to both a $200 to $500 fine as well as a two-month jail sentence."

WALLACE BACKS AMENDMENT.

Washington.—Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has indorsed the child labor amendment to the constitution, in a letter to Miss Mary Dewson, long an advocate of the legislation. Wallace said the argument that the amendment would keep farm boys and girls from doing chores was nonsense.

44 Hours' Pay for 40-Hour Week Won By San Francisco Molders' Union

San Francisco, Cal.—The decision of the arbitration board, appointed by George Creel, of the San Francisco regional labor board, increasing the wages of the molders in all foundries in San Francisco, Oakland and the bay district from 80 cents to 88 cents per hour is a justification of the American Federation of Labor's position that the shortening of hours under the recovery program should not result in decreased weekly earnings.

The case arose through the reduction of hours from forty-four to forty per week under the president's reemployment agreement. The Molders' union contended that an increase from 80 cents to 88 cents an hour was necessary to maintain the same weekly income for the shorter work-week. The employers held that a readjustment upward in the hourly wage rate to maintain the income received prior to the reduction of hours applied only to low-paid groups and requested that action be deferred until it was soon how the code worked out.

Officials of the Molders' union pointed out that Section 7 of the president's agreement provides that the signer agrees "not to reduce the compensation for employment now in excess of the minimum wages hereby agreed to." The decision of the board held that the employers must live up to this agreement.

Officials of the union also declared that the Molders were faced with rising prices, the cost of living during the past year having increased over 8 per cent, with wholesale prices 20 per cent and retail food prices 12 per cent higher.

The increase in wages is retroactive to Jan. 2, 1934.

The board of arbitration consisted of Rev. Thomas F. Burke, of Old St. Mary's, chairman; Henry F. Grady, dean of the School of Business Administration, University of California, and R. E. Fisher, an executive of the Pacific Gas and Electric company.

The Molders' union was represented by Frank Brown, A. T. Wynn and James Doyle.

Hillman Aids Wagner Labor Disputes Bill

Says Recovery Act Will Collapse Unless Government Enforces Labor Section.

Washington, March 22.—Prompt and effective enforcement of the labor section of the national recovery act to insure real collective bargaining by bona fide trade unions was urged by Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and a member of the NRA labor advisory board, in urging the senate committee on education and labor to make an immediate favorable report on Senator Wagner's bill to give the national labor board effective authority in adjusting labor controversies and outlawing the subversive company union, which is used by antilabor employers to kill the labor section of the recovery act.

Mr. Hillman said the Wagner bill was necessary in order to give Section 7-A reality. After saying that during the depression wages had dropped to as low as 2 and 5 cents an hour, Mr. Hillman spoke of the effect Section 7-A, if backed up by the government, would have on an increase in purchasing power. No longer, he said, would employes be compelled to accept whatever wages the employer imposed on them.

If Section 7-A were not properly supported by the government, Mr. Hillman was fearful that "it will degenerate into a cover for monopolistic organizations protecting themselves against unfair competition, while the labor provisions of the recovery act would collapse because of lack of enforcement."

Those who opposed Section 7-A, according to Mr. Hillman, were the same interests who opposed collective bargaining in the past. To support his statement he said that there had been a strike in a single men's clothing plant out of the 70 to 80 per cent of the industry which had contracts with its unionized employes prior to enactment of the recovery act.

Effort to Put Over Company Union Fails

Kenosha, Wis., March 8.—An ill-judged effort made by the Allen-A concern to put over a company union plan on the hosiery workers here will probably be the turning point in the drive to unionize the mill.

Last August the Allen-A first trotted out its so-called employe representation plan, but permitted it to remain dormant since that time. Recently the workers were suddenly presented with several pages of printed matter apiece with a ballot attached. The papers turned out to be a plan for a company union—a nice sounding but very typical effort to deceive the workers. Apparently the plan had been carefully worked out by one of the "experts" in company union organization.

The ballots were supposed to be voted the day following distribution. The company foreman collected the ballot boxes and counted the ballots, but despite this advantage it is evident the company union plan was decisively defeated. The fact that the management did not announce the result of the vote proves this to the satisfaction of the workers. Within forty-eight hours after the company union trick was attempted, over a hundred new workers were admitted to Kenosha Branch 6 of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, and since then men and girls have been steadily coming into the organization. It is felt that the union now has the majority of the plant unionized.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

Government Sues Weir as Violator Of Recovery Act

Injunction Is Sought Restraining Steel Company from Interfering With Employes' Right to Organize.

Washington, March 29.—With the filing of suit for an injunction against the Weirton Steel company, the government has begun its first attempt to enforce collective bargaining provisions, by court action, of the national industrial recovery act.

The suit was filed in the United States district court in Delaware and asked that the Weirton company be restrained from violating the iron and steel code and the recovery act.

The suit came at the end of months of controversy with E. T. Weir, head of the Weirton Steel company, who, labor charges, has denied to his employes the right of free representation. Weir has defied the NRA and national labor board and the board finally referred the charges against him to the department of justice for action.

"The bill plays for an injunction restraining the company from violating Section 7-A of the recovery act, from discharging, laying off or changing the conditions of employment of any of its employes on account of union affiliations, and from interfering in any way in an election conducted by the employes or by any agency designated by them," Atty.-Gen. Cummings said.

As news of the suit was given out a committee of union workers from the Weirton Steel company, led by William J. Long, called at the White House and left a letter to the president saying that the injunction proceedings in the Weirton case "was not enough."

"Even if this proceeding wins it does not force Weir to deal with our union," the letter stated.

"We wish to point out secondly that this court proceeding may last a year until the NRA is over. You are not helping starving men a bit by this.

"We wish to point out thirdly that all your rulings and orders have been disregarded completely and that the government has allowed months of stalling by the Weirton Steel company."

The union committee said that 600 men were being discriminated against by the company for union activity and asked what these men were to do while waiting for court action.

The letter was referred to the department of justice.

If you have done an injury to a fellfailing to demand union goods or service, there is no better time than the present to atone for the damage done.

Begin Taking Cardui Today If You Suffer Like This Lady Did

"WHEN I was a girl, I began taking Cardui," writes Mrs. Maggie Stanfield, of Crandall, Ga. "I was very irregular for twelve months. Nothing did me very much good until my mother began to give me this medicine. Then I got all right, stout and well.

"After I was married, I was in bad health. I began taking Cardui again. I was troubled with my back a lot. Was awfully restless. I could not sleep well. I just weighed 90 pounds when I began taking Cardui. I improved rapidly. Before long I weighed 126 pounds. I felt fine. I was able to do a good day's work."

Cardui is sold by druggists here.

Washington, March 29.—A summary of results of industrial elections, for the purpose of selecting representatives for collective bargaingaining, supervised by the national labor board, shows good sized majorities for independent trade unions, usually affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Since last August 240 elections have been supervised, seventy-six by regional labor boards. Detailed election results (with a few final figures missing) are available for the 162 supervised by the national labor board. (The 162 include "blocks" of balloting such as the 45 Reading hosiery mills, the 29 "captive mines," etc.)

In twenty elections the choice was between two trade unions, generally a union affiliated with the A. F. of L., and one not affiliated.

In the remaining 142—where the choice was whether or not workers wished to be represented by trade unions—in 100 establishments the majority favored trade unions; in 42 the majority was against.

The popular vote in these 142 elections was: For union, 29,066; against, 14,429.

These results meant that 33,837 workers were in establishments which voted "union" and 11,363 in establishments which had voted against the union.

In forty-five of these establishments the choice was clear cut between trade unions ("outside unions") and some "inside" organization (employe representation plan, benefit association, works council, company union). Here the results were: 29 establishments voted for the "outside union," 16 for the "inside union." The popular vote was: "Outside union," 17,036; "inside union," 9,596.

UNION HEAD WARNS SENATORS OF TEXTILE STRIKE DANGER

Washington, March 29.—Supporting the Wagner bill to strengthen the collective bargaining provisions of the national industrial recovery act, Francis J. Gorman, vice-president of the United Textile Workers of America, warned the senate labor committee of the danger of a general strike in the textile industry.

Gorman declared unless the measure were enacted his organization would be forced to sanction a strike. He told of receiving another walkout petition just prior to appearing before the committee. He denounced southern textile mills for their low wage scales.

The witness explained the NRA code raised the minimum textile wage in the south from $8 to $12 a week. He insisted, however, there was little or no benefit for workers as a class because skilled employes were reduced to the minimum.

"Seventy-five per cent of the employers in the south," he added, "accepted the NRA with their fingers crossed. They told their workers to 'join the union if you will, but you won't work here.'"

Collective bargaining clauses of the measure, Gorman reported, would protect skilled workers. As matters stand, he testified, the employes in higher brackets "are up against a stone wall."

The textile union, Gorman said, has used its influence to defeat a communistic element that has been "preaching insidious propaganda" into the minds of workers. Before Russian recognition, he declared, the union received definite information that communist activities were subsidized by the soviet.

A. E. Suffern, New York university economics lecturer, urged passage of the bill as a means of preventing employers from exercising "an uncontrolled monopoly over jobs."

MILLINERY WORKERS WIN WAGE INCREASE STRIKE

Los Angeles, Cal.—One of the shortest strikes in the city's history ended here within a few hours of its inception when 2,000 millinery workers signed a new agreement with employers. The NRA labor board conducted the negotiations.

Workers were granted wage increases of 10 per cent and reduction of the working week from 40 to 37½ hours. All employes were granted two holidays with pay.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

"United we stand, Divided we fall."

facilities of the Tennessee Valley Authority, since our government has been responsible for this particular thing to be in existence and has offered it to all who are willing to put forth an effort and show them they really want the TVA

Now a person can always get what they want if they want it bad enough, unless they want something else worse. Unfortunately the erection of a dam at Chickamauga has been more or less placed in the dark, largely on account of insufficient support by our local leaders and lack of interest on the part of our citizens who haven't had the proper encouragement and don't realize the unlimited value of this dam.

Now I am suggesting on behalf of our local union, of which I am a member and representative, that we get behind the gun with both barrels loaded and create a demand for the TVA current and don't stop until we get it, "TVA or Bust," and within a limited time we will be traveling at full speed without a break.

Personally I feel it a duty rather than a privilege to ask for the TVA, since we are living in an age when every fellow has to look out for himself or he won't get anything at all, but will have to tuck his head and say, Well, if I had it to do over I would act differently. You can live but one life and if you don't do your best now you can't do it at all, so let us not be the kind who want the impossible chance of doing it over again.

Chattanooga is all right. All you gotta do is put a little "fireworks" in a few spots and she'll bloom out like a lily. Let's light a fuse and get started now!

Wholesale Victimization of Trade Unionists.

"The law-enforcing agencies of the government know that when employers of labor prevent their employes from exercising their right to organize into a union of their own choosing they violate the law. I charge the management of numerous corporations with law violations in that they have discharged and discriminated against thousands of workers because they joined unions and in that they formulated and executed company union plans which were designed to require their employes to become members of these company unions as a condition of employment.

"And what are company unions? You may want to know what they are; how they originate and what if any virtue they possess.

"Well, company unions are creatures of corporations. They are set up, established, financed, fostered and maintained by the company. The company unions are worse than no unions at all. They are the means through which industrial management exercises control over the economic life of the workers.

"The constitutions of these company unions are drafted by the corporations and the workers are told that it is the company's desire that they accept it and conform to their rules and regulations. Typical plans of these company unions provide that all expenses will be paid by the company, that the alleged representatives of the workers shall be paid their salary and expenses, that a secretary will be provided at the expense of the company and that the by-laws can only be amended by unanimous vote of the accredited representatives of the company union and the plant management.

Does Not Represent the Workers.

"These facts are related in order to show that the company union cannot represent the workers because it is controlled by the employers and that it deprives the worker of real representation and makes their economic condition, under the national recovery act, worse than it had ever been before.

"Workers who are compelled to join a company union are denied the right to engage in collective bargaining. In no instance, not even one, so far as I have been able to learn, has an agreement governing wages, hours and conditions of employment been negotiated, signed and sealed by the representatives of a company union and their employers. Workers who suffer from injustice or oppression and who have real grievances have no chance of redress when they are compelled to submit complaints and grievances for fair adjudication to those who are the paid representatives of the company.

Outlawed by Wagner Bill.

"The Wagner industrial disputes act is designed to make real and vital the provisions of Section 7-A of the national recovery act, which confers upon working men and women the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. It practically outlaws company unions because it provides that corporations cannot finance, control, organize and administer company unions. If enacted into law the workers will be made economically and industrially free. Every fairminded person is in accord with this purpose and this principle."

OLD AGE PENSION LAW URGED.

New Orleans.—A resolution urging passage by congress of an old-age pension bill was adopted by the local Building Trades council. Copies of the resolution were sent to the president, Louisiana representatives and senators, and William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

Six Hundred Movie Theaters Violate NRA Code Hours

Work Employes Sixty to Eighty Hours Per Week and Discriminate Against Unions.

New York, March 29.—Charles C. Levey, secretary of the Theater and Amusement Employes Union Local 119, of the American Federation of Labor, filed a complaint with the regional labor board here charging that more than 600 second and third run motion-picture houses in New York were working their employes from sixty to eighty hours a week, though the code provides for a 40-hour week, and that trade unionists were being victimized. As a result the representatives of Loew's theater circuit were summoned to appear before the board and answer the charges.

The complaint was made in the course of an investigation made by Ben Golden, executive secretary of the board, regarding the dismissal of two employes of the Manhattan Playhouse circuit, and the dismissal of a third man, employed by an outside company to do janitorial and cleaning work in one of the circuit's theaters. Mr. Golden held that the two men employed as ushers had been discharged for union activities and he ordered their immediate reinstatement. The third man, a janitor who was discharged March 15, Mr. Golden found had worked seven days a week and that on two or three days a week he worked from 6 a.m. to 11 p.m., receiving $60 a month. The management of the circuit disclaimed responsibility, Mr. Golden said, on the plea that an outside company provided janitors and cleaners.

"To my mind," Mr. Golden said, "this is merely a subterfuge for the purpose of working the men more than the forty hours a week prescribed by the code."

Wagner Bill Is Urged to Avert Industrial War

New York, March 29.—The Wagner labor disputes bill, designed to clarify Article 7-A of the national industrial recovery act and to establish a national labor board with definite authority, is a reasonable and humane alternative to industrial war, State Industrial Commissioner Elmer F. Andrews believes.

"The Wagner labor disputes bill is the most important piece of legislation to insure industrial peace that has been submitted in many years," said Commissioner Andrews. "As industrial commissioner of New York, I feel it is my duty to ask for the support of this bill. It would drastically reduce the industrial welfare of strikes and lockouts by providing effective machinery for the adjustment of labor disputes. Unless some such machinery is provided, we may expect an increase in labor troubles as re-employment rises.

"Experience during the past year in assisting the national labor board in adjusting strikes in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Alabama and New York has convinced me that if machinery is provided for the discussion and arbitration of disputes between employers and employes a large majority of strikes and lockouts can be avoided.

"In many sections of the country the worker has realized for the first time that he has some human rights and that he should have the privilege of discussing his troubles with his employer. The refusal of the old-fashioned employer to give the worker or his representative the courtesy of a conference on working conditions, and the arbitrary and insulting manner in which these refusals have been made, have been one of the primary causes of violent labor disputes during the past year.

"When the worker feels that, if he cannot in a friendly way adjust his difficulties with his employer, he can appeal to a local board for a review, and then, if the difficulties cannot be solved by this body he can appeal for a final and definite adjustment by the national labor board—whose decision would be binding on both employer and employe—there is no cause for hasty walkouts.

"The worker has real confidence that he can get a square deal from the federal government. This also seems to be the belief of the more progressive employers.

"The time has passed when an employer could take the attitude that an employe must accept the pay and working conditions offered or get out. Public opinion and government officials charged with restoring the country to economic health condemn this attitude as against public welfare."

Last summer Commissioner Andrews investigated labor conditions in the coal fields of Pennsylvania, Kentucky and Alabama and mediated certain strikes in New York state as a representative of the national labor board. In Kentucky he found that, although he was working with the full authority of the federal government, the miners were so terrorized that they were afraid to meet him except after dark, in open fields and in the strictest secrecy.

VETO OF WAGE RESTORATION IS EXPLAINED

President Declares Increase Hits Budget.

ASKS AUTHORITY TO FIX SALARIES

Wants Cost-of-Living Basis Adjustment for Federal Workers.

Washington, April 5.—In vetoeing the independent offices appropriation bill because it restored 10 per cent of the unjust 15 per cent salary cut imposed on government employes by the last congress and increased the benefits to veterans, President Roosevelt requested one constructive piece of legislation. He asked congress to authorize him "to improve the methods of restoring federal pay so that in actual practice the pay will keep ahead of the cost of living increase instead of lagging." This is an admission of a serious defect in the present method of determining wages by the cost of living, which practice the American Federation of Labor has emphatically opposed ever since congress adopted it at the request of the president.

The congress was fully justified in passing the independent offices bill over the president's veto. It is interesting, however, to note the chief executive's reasons for opposing such a just provision as the salary restoration. He said:

Relief Funds Decreased.

"* * * To the extent that the amount of money appropriated by the congress is in excess of my budget estimates, and in the absence of provision for additional revenues, there must be a decrease in the funds available for essential relief work.

"This bill increases the compensation for employes of the United States government $125,000,000 over my budget estimates for this purpose. I have great sympathy for the employes, but I cannot forget that millions of American citizens are today still without employment, and reductions in the compensation of federal employes has been and still is in the average less than the reduction in compensation that has been patiently endured by those citizens not in the employ of the United States government.

Opposes Retroactive Pay.

"Let me be specific. This bill makes a portion of the restored compensation retroactive to Feb. 1, 1934. I believe it unwise to establish this precedent, and I cannot overlook the serious administrative difficulties involved in paying back pay to individuals, many of whom are no longer in the employ of the government.

"The bill also contains several discriminatory provisions, such as paying employes in some departments of the government forty-eight hours' pay for forty hours' work.

Cost-of-Living Adjustment.

"In submitting the budget estimates last December, I recommended compensation restoration of 5 per cent for the next fiscal year. The cost of living seems to be rising slowly. The present authority is not responsive enough to changing conditions. I therefore shall be glad to confer with the congress on improving the methods of restoring pay so that in actual practice the pay will keep ahead of the cost of living increase instead of lagging behind. Adjustments can well be made immediately on the passage of appropriate legislation followed by more frequent adjustments in the future."

New Orleans—The Life Underwriters' Protective association has filed its charter in the office of the recorder of deeds and mortgages in New Orleans showing a charter list of thirty-seven members. The new body is for the purpose of organizing all the life underwriters in Louisiana for mutual protection, such as collective bargaining and better commissions. A note in the charter gives the privilege of affiliating with any other body it chooses, and names particularly the American Federation of Labor.

Shoe Repairers Ask Employers to Sign New Working Pact

All But Four Downtown Shops Agree to Contract Presented by Local 620.

All the larger shoe repair shops in the city, with the exception of four downtown places, have signed the new working agreement of Local 620, Shoe Repairers, it was announced Friday morning. The four who have not as yet been persuaded to agree to the pact, it was said, are Kenton's, on East Eighth street; Model, East Eighth; Belcher's, Sixth, and Uneeda, Fifth. The latter two are under the same ownership, it was explained.

Officers of the union said it was thought the four who are holding out will eventually agree to the terms.

Installation of the newly-elected officers of Local 620, scheduled for Thursday night, was postponed until next Thursday night. At the meeting last week Clyde Lee was named president; Luke Pollard, vice-president; H. U. Garvin, financial secretary and treasurer, and Lee Pollard, recording secretary.

Spokesmen for the local told The Labor World Friday morning affairs of the union are in splendid condition, and a substantial, permanent organization of the shoe workers has been perfected.

Central Body To Name Officers At Meet Monday Night

Delegates to Central Body will name officers for the next year at the regular meeting Monday night, and indications are that some contests will be the order.

A president, vice-president, secretary-treasurer, recorder, sergeant-at-arms and other officers will be named, as well as three delegates to the convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, which meets at Memphis May 7, 8 and 9.

Numerous nominations for the various official places were made at last regular meeting, and these may be added to at any time before the actual balloting begins.

It is expected that a large attendance will be present.

'Home-Coming Day' At The Labor World

Friday was "old-timers" day at the office of The Labor World, among the visitors being J. J. "Spike" Hennessey, who recently returned from an extended stay at St. Petersburg, Fla. Mr. Hennessey is the only living charter member of Chattanooga Typographical union, and his presence at regular meeting of No. 89 was a feature of Sunday's regular meeting of that organization. S. L. Gamble, for many years foreman of the Times job room, dropped in to say "Howdy," and straightway came Arch Faidley, another one of the printer pioneers, followed closely by T. A. "Kid" Rogers, who graduated from the composing room to the editorial staff of the Times many years ago.

Then, to cap the climax, breezed in T. J. "Brush" Smith, former president of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, who is said to have put the coal in the East Tennessee mountains.

Then the editor went out and got a drink.

Public Service Corporation Employes Get Wage Increase

Newark, N. J.—All employes of the operating companies of the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey will receive an increase in wages equivalent to 5 per cent of what their pay was prior to July 1, 1932, it was announced by Thomas N. McCarter, president. The increase becomes effective April 1.

Mr. McCarter declared that on July 1, 1932, the cut was made because of economic conditions. Another cut was made in April last year, the two aggregating 15 per cent of the payroll and affecting all workers except the three ranking officers who took a cut of 25 per cent each.

Labor Is Urged to Mobilize Its Influence in Favor of Passage Wagner-Lewis Insurance Bill

Green Declares That Nationwide Activity of Opponents of the Legislation Makes It Necessary for the Workers to Ask Their Members of Congress to Enact the Measures at This Session of Congress.

Washington, April 5.—A ringing appeal to officers and members of organized labor throughout the United States to mobilize the influence of the labor movement in the interest of the prompt enactment by congress of the Wagner-Lewis unemployment insurance bill was issued by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, from the A. F. of L. headquarters here.

Although the measure has the emphatic approval of President Roosevelt, the antilabor bourbons who oppose any protection for the army of jobless and their families are mobilizing subversive interests in all parts of the country in opposition to the measure. This opposition, Mr. Green points out, makes it imperatively necessary for the millions of organized workers to inform their members of congress at once that it is their sincere desire to have the bill promptly enacted into law.

Important to Workers.

"The Wagner-Lewis bill, designed to advance the enactment of unemployment insurance legislation in the different states, is of great importance to the working people of the nation," Mr. Green said. "The bill provides for the imposition of a 5 per centum excise tax by the federal government, upon employers' pay rolls; said tax to be refunded to employers where under the operation and administration of a state unemployment insurance law the employer has made contributions toward the creation of unemployment reserves or to a state unemployment insurance fund.

"The American Federation of Labor has indorsed this measure and is giving it whole-hearted and enthusiastic support. This proposed legislation marks a very direct and definite step forward in the enactment of unemployment insurance legislation. It is hoped and believed that following the enactment of this law, unemployment insurance legislation will be introduced and passed by a large number of state legislatures within a reasonably short period of time.

Workess' Needs Demand Insurance.

"The working people of the country stand in great need of the enactment of unemployment insurance laws. The benefits of such legislation will be reflected in the establishment and maintenance of purchasing power during periods of idleness and in the relief from human distress and human suffering which the payment of unemployment insurance benefits will provide.

"Not only will the unemployed worker and his family be aided, but in addition, the whole community will share indirectly in the economic and social benefits which will flow from the application of just, equitable and fair unemployment insurance legislation.

"The opponents of this legislation are active, doing all they can to prevent the Wagner-Lewis bill from becoming a law at this session of congress. That means that the friends of this bill must give it their immediate support and call upon others to join with them in appealing to the members of congress to vote for the Wagner-Lewis unemployment insurance bill.

Write to Congressmen.

"I respectfully request that the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor communicate with the members of congress from their respective districts and the two senators from their respective states, urging them to vote for this measure. In addition, call upon your friends everywhere to join with you; adopt resolutions representative of your local organizations, and forward them to your members of the house of representatives and the two senators from your state; write personal letters and send telegrams.

"This activity is necessary in order that the members of congress may know of the widespread interest among working people and their friends in the Wagner-Lewis unemployment bill, and of their sincere desire to have this bill enacted into law.

"Please act promptly and immediately.

"The fight for the passage of the Wagner-Lewis bill is your fight because, after all, its benefits will apply to the working people and their families."

Typos Plan Renewed About 'Home Stores' Publicity Campaign

Renewed publicity campaign with respect to the attitude of the so-called "Home Stores" toward Chattanooga workers is planned by Chattanooga Typographical union, and at Sunday's regular meeting the situation was a matter for considerable discussion.

A special committee to handle the matter was named by President Peyer, as follows: W. A. Baker, Phil Mandre, Arch Underwood, C. R. Camp and W. S. Miller.

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

Haverhill Mayor Seeks to End Strike of 6,000 Shoe Workers

Haverhill, Mass.—Mayor George E. Dalrymple offered to act as arbiter in the strike of 6,000 Haverhill shoe workers. This was the first attempt at intercession by a member of the city government since the strike began, March 5.

FIVE—LABOR WORLD .... H.... GET WAGE INCREASE.

Memphis, Tenn.—Union employes of the Memphis Street Railway company went on a higher wage scale April 1. Minus the aid of a board of arbitration—the first in fourteen years—the company and employes agreed to a three-year contract, representing an annual pay increase of approximately $800,00 for 360 men.

Bluff City Unions Check Scheme of Fake Solicitors

Labor Review Urges Merchants to Assist in Curbing High-Pressure Activities.

Memphis trades unionists, according to last week's issue of The Labor Review, have uncovered another high-pressure fake advertising scheme in that city, and the Central Body in the Bluff City has appealed to merchants there to assist the unionists in preventing mulcting of business people in the name of labor.

Chattanooga workers will be in position to appreciate the situation, having themselves been victimized in the past by these smooth artists. The Labor Review's story follows:

A plea for the support of Memphians in curbing the raids made on business men's pocketbooks by fake advertising solicitors was made today by officers of the Memphis Trades and Labor council.

The request for the public's co-operation in preventing any future rampages of fake solicitors was made by the council following the arrest of the two alleged racketeers by city police.

The men are W. B. Bass, 46, and H. J. Fengler, 40, of Louisville, Ky., who represented themselves as local railroad brotherhood officers in fleecing Memphians out of $358.

The scheme used by the racketeers is an old one. They installed telephones in a downtown hotel and started solicitations "for a Labor day convention program for the Four Transportation Brotherhoods."

The railroad brotherhoods do not have a meeting scheduled here on Labor day.

"The Memphis Trades and Labor council is anxious that another outrage of this kind will not occur," a statement issued by officers said.

"We believe such fake schemes can be 'nipped in the bud' in the future if the business men here will co-operate with our request.

"The council asks business men to require solicitors to show credentials signed by the council president and secretary before contracting for space in any publication in the future.

"If there are any advertising men soliciting business for a bona fide publication, their names will be kept on file at The Labor Review business office, 879 Shrine building.

"We respectfully ask that business men telephone the paper at 8-1567 and determine if the solicitor is authorized to take advertising."

Death Angel Calls E. L. Barringer, Pioneer Citizen

Well-Known Member Chattanooga Typos Passes at Mission Ridge Home.

The Angel of Death Friday morning entered the home of E. L. Barringer, pioneer citizen and member of Chattanooga Typographical union, No. 89, and removed therefrom the head of the household, aged 79.

Mr. Barringer had been employed on the local daily papers since 1887, when he came to Chattanooga, and at the time of his passing had been a member of the Times composing-room force for approximately a quarter century.

He was born at Bellfontaine, Ohio, on April 12, 1855, at which place he learned the printer's trade which he followed until he was taken ill a few weeks ago.

He is survived by his wife and four children, Robert, Louise, Mrs. W. C. Letner and Mrs. R. W. Turner, all of this city.

Funeral services will be held at the home on Mission ridge Sunday afternoon, with the Rev. W. R. Curtis, pastor of the Ridgedale M. E. church, officiating.

The Labor World joins scores of friends in extending to the surviving relatives of Brother Barringer heartfelt condolences in their bereavement.

Central Body Backs Stand of Miners

Chattanooga Trades and Labor council is standing squarely behind the coal miners of District 19 in their efforts to prevent a restoration of the wage differential formerly agreed on for the district as compared with other fields, but recently restored by the national coal administration.

T. R. Cuthbert, secretary of Central Body, Friday morning sent the following wire indicating the attitude of the local labor movement in the controversy:

Kenneth Simpson, Deputy Coal Administrator,
Commerce Building, Washing-D. C.

We indorse stand taken by miners' union to eliminate wage differentials, because this will stabilize coal industry and check unfair practices.

It is understood that a final hearing will be held on the matter at Washington on Monday.

Hosiery Workers To Hold Open Meeting

An open meeting for seamless hosiery workers, the second within the past week, will be held Saturday morning, 10:30, at the Alton Park town hall, which is over the fire hall in Alton Park.

A similar meeting held last Saturday morning, under auspices of Local 1744, Unitied Textile Workers, was declared to have been very successful in the matter of enlisting sympathetic interest of workers in the movement for collective action under the NRA, and it is expected that the gathering Saturday morning will fill the assembly room of the town hall.

A circular issued by Local 1744 states that "We hope to have John Peel here." Mr. Peel is a representative of the United Textile Workers, and made many friends during a several weeks' stay here recently. He was scheduled to arrive in Chattanooga this week, and it is believed will be present at the session Saturday morning.

SUGGESTS UNITED STATES ORGANIZE UNIONS

Washington.—Twenty-four million unaffiliated American workers should be organized into unions by the United States labor department, Louis B. Ward, Detroit biographer of Father Charles E. Coughlin, radio crusader, told a senate committee. Ward suggested amendment of the Wagner labor disputes bill in conformity with his proposal to unionize common laborers, as distinguished from skilled workers already members of the American Federation of Labor and similar groups.

NEW FIGURES ON UNEMPLOYMENT SET BY GREEN

More Than 11,000,000 Still Jobless.

920,000 DISCHARGED FROM CWA PROJECTS

Government Increases Lists While Heavy Industries Show Improvement.

Washington, April 5.—Industrial employers hired only 350,000 idle workers during February and the federal government dismissed 920,000 from civil works administration projects, leaving 11,374,000 in the army of the totally unemployed, declared William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in his review of the unemployment situation based on reports to the federation by the affiliated unions. As to trade union members, 22.6 per cent of them were unemployed in January, 22 per cent in February, and 21.4 per cent in the first part of March.

Government Increases Unemployed.

"These figures are significant in two ways: First, they show that industrial employment has not increased rapidly enough to absorb those laid off from CWA. During February, 920,000 were dropped from CWA and industrial employment increased by 350,000.

"Secondly, the employment figures show the first gain in the month of February since depression began. Each previous February, since 1929, unemployment has increased. This year the gain was almost entirely in manufacturing industries, where 360,000 went back to work. There were slight gains also in wholesale trade (10,000) and hotels (10,000) and in some other industries, but 50,000 were laid off in building.

Gains in Heavy Industries.

"In manufacturing, the 'heavy' or producers-goods industries showed considerable employment gains. The fact that men are going back to work in these industries where unemployment has been particularly serious, is significant—iron and steel, machinery, lumber, building materials, automobiles, railroad car shops. Consumer-goods industries also reported substantial employment gains—cotton goods, clothing, shoes, rubber tires, cigars and cigarettes.

"Trade union unemployment figures show that these gains are continuing in March, both in 'heavy' and consumer industries; employment of union members increased in the heavy industries—building and metal trades, on the railroads and in building materials industries—clothing and textiles."

DULUTH MILK DRIVERS ENROLL 200 MEMBERS

Duluth, Minn.—Six months ago six forward-looking, up-and-coming men started something here and today they have contracts with six dairies under which the more than 200 coworkers who since have united to form Local No. 32 of the Milk Drivers' and Dairy Employes' union now go to work at 6 o'clock in the morning, instead of getting up in the middle of the night and starting off at 3 a.m. as they had been compelled to do when unorganized.

And this tells only a part of the story. Three other creameries are on the string, with the managers of two won to the ideal of unionizing their men, and the third declaring himself neutral, and that at least he will not oppose if his drivers join the union.

Besides looking so well after its own immediate affairs, Local No. 32 has affiliated both with the Minnesota State Federation of Labor and with the Duluth Federated Trades assembly, in which it has been very active. Only recently this new union showed its fine co-operative spirit by donating funds to help the labor council's fight against an open-shop organization here.

A new furnace burns coal in sticks loaded into a revolving magazine which feeds the sticks down into the combustion chamber. The magazine holds six sticks of compressed low grade coal, enough to last twenty-four hours in zero weather. The furnace is said to promise radical economies in home heating, due to its low fuel costs and high efficiency. The coal costs $7 to $8 a ton in cartridge form.

Firefighters' Union Case

An important case concerning the right of municipal firefighters to join an organization of their own choosing is being considered by Circuit Judge Allan Hanckel, of Norfolk, Va.

Recently the firefighters of Norfolk organized a local of the International Association of Firefighters, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. The union was opposed by the city manager, the director of public safety, and the fire chief. In an attempt to kill the union the director of public safety issued an order prohibiting firefighters from membership in the organization, with suspension as the penalty for violation of the rule.

Officers of the local union, supported by the International Association, contested the authority of the director of public safety to issue such an order, and petitioned Judge Hanckel for an injunction restraining the director from enforcing it. The court granted a temporary injunction, which held in abeyance for a number of weeks the subversive proposals of the municipal authorities.

In the hearing on the injunction the union was represented by former Judge O. L. Shackleford, who argued that under the Norfolk charter the civil service commission is the only body with power to pass on the qualifications of firefighters, and that therefore the director of public safety did not have legal authority to issue the order prohibiting firefighters from joining the union. Stressing this point, Judge Shackleford said:

> "The Civil Service commission has the sole authority to pass on the fitness of applicants for the fire department. Neither the city manager, the director of public safety, or the fire chief can add any condition to the application. The regulation against membership in a labor union is, in fact, the imposition of such condition. The authority of the administrative head to dismiss is for failure to perform duty. It cannot rest upon the belief of the director of public safety that men with union affiliations are in general unfit. The director of public safety is attempting, therefore, to accomplish by indirection what is expressly prohibited by the civil service provisions of the city charter. If the director has the legal right to require a fireman to be a nonunion man, by the same token some other director may require a fireman to be a union man. No such discretion is conceivable under civil service."

While admitting that a municipality as an employer may legally discharge an employe with or without cause, Judge Shackleford told the Court that "where said employe is a Civil Service employe, his tenure is such that he may not be discharged except for the causes enumerated in the Civil Service provisions under which he attained his position." He added:

> "We have found no case in which it has been held that a Civil Service employe may be legally discharged on the sole ground that he is a member of a labor union."

Organized labor and progressive citizens generally are looking forward with interest to the decision of Judge Hanckel on a question involving the right of city authorities to victimize city employes for joining a labor organization of their own free choice.

Why Not the 30-Hour Week?

William Taylor, executive vice-president of the Valley Camp Coal company and a group of related companies, recently gave the coal industry something to think about.

Appearing before the National Bituminous Coal Industrial board, Mr. Taylor caused a stir by advocating reduction in working hours in soft coal mines from 40 to 30, with a compensating increase in wages. He pointed out that a reduction in hours would not necessarily mean a reduction in production. His company's experience, when the "clean up" system prevailed, under which the men worked 10 to 14 hours a day, indicated that as much coal could be produced in the 8-hour day as in the longer day. He said his company was producing a greater tonnage under the shorter week than when the longer week was in operation.

A few days after Mr. Taylor made his suggestion, bituminous coal operators of the Appalachian region agreed to reduce the work week to 35 hours. That marks distinct progress, but the week must be cut even more, to cope successfully with the appalling unemployment in the coal industry. Mr. Taylor pointed the way to the solution. Sooner or later the coal industry must adopt the 30-hour week. Why not in the near future?

Victory for U. S. Workers

Passing of the independent offices appropriation bill by congress over the president's veto gives a large measure of victory to organized labor in its fight for restoration of government workers' pay.

The federal workers get five per cent return now, from February 1, and another five per cent on July 1. The president is authorized to restore the remaining five per cent within six months after July 1 if living costs equal or exceed the 1928 level. This means there is an excellent chance the 15 per cent wage cut, made in the name of "economy," will be abolished early next year.

The cut was ill-advised in the first place and contributed nothing to industrial recovery. In fact, by reducing the purchasing power of hundreds of thousands of government employes, it tended to retard business gain. With restoration of former pay there will be no basis for charging that the government preaches one thing and practices another, by striving to raise wages in private employment while at the same time slashing the pay of its own employes.

French Democracy Threatened

News from Paris indicates that revolutionary outbreaks may be brewing in France. Extremists of the Right and Left are plotting, and if they unite, as they did in the Paris riots of February 6 and 7, they might overthrow the republic. French labor, unless all signs are misleading, will do its best to defend democracy. It served notice on French fascism after the Paris riots, by the great general strike of Feb. 12, that it would fight dictatorship and fascism to the limit. The strike, a wonderful demonstration of labor discipline, showed that in the labor movement, French democracy has a powerful and aggressive defender.

St. Louis Movie Union Wins 10 Per Cent Wage Boost; $14,575 Back Pay

St. Louis, Mo.—The organized labor movement here won an outstanding victory for the validity of union labor agreements in the arbitration award made by Dr. William G. Patton, superintendent of the St. Louis County hospital, giving the motion picture machine operators employed in thirty-two independent theaters in the city of St. Louis and St. Louis county a 10 per cent wage increase retroactive to September, with $14,575.27 in back pay distributed to about 200 employes.

According to the findings of Dr. Patton, an agreement was entered into on April 16, 1933, between the Moving Picture and Projecting Machine Operators' union, Local No. 143, and the Motion Picture Theater Exhibitors providing for a temporary 10 per cent reduction in the wage scale until Aug. 19, at which time the scale that obtained prior to April 16 was to prevail.

The theater owners paid the agreed scale for two weeks after Aug. 19, when twenty-nine of them reverted to the lower scale paid during the period of temporary reduction. The union claimed that these twenty-nine theater owners violated Section 6 of the national recovery administration code pertaining to theaters.

Dr. Patton upheld this claim and decided that the wage scale in effect on April 16 was the legal scale at the end of the temporary reduction period. He ruled that the moving picture machine operators were entitled to the difference between the amount of money they actually received after Aug. 19 and the prevailing wage that was in effect on April 16 and ordered that the April 16 scale be established as the prevailing minimum scale of wages for employes affiliated with the Motion Picture and Projection Machine Operators' union.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

The American people are just beginning to understand fully how tight and sweeping has been the grip of the immensely wealthy minority on the masses of the people.

It isn't good news. It shows what fools the people have been. They have been easy marks, trudging and drudging along, pouring the golden profits into such coffers as those of Morgan, Mellon and Rockefeller.

Morgan is rated a man of dignity. Rockefeller is just a nice old gent trying to live to be a hundred. Mellon is a shy, retiring and studious looking elderly gentleman.

True enough, personally they are that way. But as forces in the financial and economic world they have been wolves, ferocious, rapacious. Men by the millions have been robbed of the fruits of their labor and of their liberties.

What, in the larger sense, has life meant to a coal miner in Pennsylvania? Much of the time it has been an actual battle against starvation. What, in the larger sense, has life meant to the average factory worker? Just the same thing—struggle against starvation.

When workers have sought to unite to secure some measure of justice the courts have come with their injunctions. The courts have much to answer for and chief of these things is stupidity.

Judges would say it was contempt of court to say judges have been stupid. But a lot of courts have been contemptible and some have been, as we know, venal. They built a frame of precedent, which is the same as law in effect, around the injunction, until literally millions of workers were under restraint by injunction. That made looting continuously easy.

So, in 1929 the hideous thing went smash. Even then the boneheads couldn't see it.

Wealth doesn't necessarily bring intelligence into thick heads. The powers of Wall Street couldn't see that the jig was up.

Then came the deluge that swept Franklin Roosevelt into office.

Then came NRA and a lot of other things. The masses began to see, but Wall Street remained blind. Even now the masses but begin to behold the full range of the vision. But they do begin and their eyes will behold more, month by month.

Of course those who have been privileged hate to give up their privileges. It is but repeating what many have said, that the privileges are never given up voluntarily; they always have to be pushed out.

The House of Morgan is going to abandon selling securities. That is a tiny step. It is going to be just a certain kind of bank. It is just a tiny sign of change. There are other signs and perhaps bigger ones. But it is something, surely, that the House of Morgan backs up for the first time in its long career of using other people's money.

Big business is fighting every progressive move. It is a last ditch fight, let us hope.

But let us not hope more than we can accomplish. There probably are many hurdles to jump yet, before industrial injustice and robbery pass out.

Meanwhile let us get into our minds as firmly as we can the kind of change we want, the kind of road we think will serve us best, the proper way for this nation to go. We must remember that the people, too, can make mistakes.

Meanwhile let us hope privileged wealth is kept moving backward, with one privilege after another nipped away.

Big returns have come to taxpayers through the efforts of the federal trade commission during the past four years. While the five millions expended by that body for investigation of utilities ordered by the senate seems a large sum, the benefits derived by consumers far exceeds it. How far the benefits outweigh the expenses is readily if not completely shown. During those four years consumers of electric utilities have been saved $118,747,654 by reduced rates.

The percentage of profit to ratepayers on this investment is as staggering as the percentages of holding company profits disclosed by the commission.

The trade commission punctiliously reports that not all the reductions can be directly traced to its investigation. It finds that $66,454,240 has been saved customers through reductions by companies investigated by the commission. It does not point out what should be an obvious reduction—that the investigation stimulated rate regulatory bodies to act to bring about further reduction, and that companies which have not yet felt the searching light of investigation have hurried to clean their hands.

A special committee of eminent citizens appointed last June by Secretary of Labor Perkins to study immigration and naturalization problems makes a number of good points in its report, just issued. Among them is a plea for an attitude of friendly understanding and fair play toward the immigrant.

"Tolerance and equal opportunity must be the foundations of genuine assimilation and national unity," the committee points out. On the question of discrimination against immigrants in employment the committee presents a view that merits general attention. It says in part:

"Many people feel very naturally that where there are two applicants and only one job, preference should be given to the citizen. The difficulty is that there are other factors which need to be considered. Quite aside from the question of competency the citizen may be a single man; the alien may have a wife and children dependent on him. His children, further, may be native born. In discriminating against their father, we are thus discriminating against American citizens, and those least able to protect themselves.

"The committee believes that in all such questions, difficult though they are, human need as well as citizenship should be taken into account. It believes further that it is unfair to dismiss an alien who is performing a job satisfactorily, who quite possibly came in the years when we needed labor, simply because he is an alien and in order to make place for a citizen. Make our immigration laws as severe as conditions require, but once having admitted the immigrant, treat him as the prospective partner that he is. This attitude alone will elicit the best the newcomer has to give."

Issuance by the Alabama supreme court of an injunction against the United Mine Workers of America reminds us that the day of the labor injunction is not past, despite the Norris anti-injunction act and similar state legislation. Unfortunately, many states still lack such legislation. Until all states have anti-injunction laws, the injunction will continue to plague labor.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

URAL SCHOOL TEACHERS ORGANIZE IN ARKANSAS

Little Rock, Ark.—Forty-two teach-s in the rural schools of Pulaski unty met here and organized as a cal of the American Federation of Teachers, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Paul H. Harrison was elected temporary president and Miss Jane Mayo temporary secretary.

Establishment of the union was participated in by H. M. Thackerey, secretary of the State Federation of Labor; Ben D. Brickhouse, former member of the county board of education; D. T. Henderson, superintendent of rural schools, and Herbert Latkin, editor of the Union Labor Bulletin.

This is the first A. F. of L. rural teachers organization in Arkansas, but the union officials predict that other locals will be formed in the state within the next few months.

Organized labor in Greater Little Rock is co-operating enthusiastically with the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor in a nation-wide campaign during the month of April to extend the sale of goods carrying the union label. Labor officials urge every member to demand the label on all products in the interest not only of putting many idle unionists to work, but also in encouraging fair employers to continue the employment of members of organized labor.

WORK CONDITIONS FOR WOMEN SHOWN BAD IN COTTON MILLS

Washington, March 22.—The NRA has definitely raised work standards of women in cotton mills, according to a bulletin just issued by the women's bureau, U. S. department of labor. This is held as being particularly significant since more women are at work in cotton mills than in any other manufacturing industry except the making of clothing. That long hours, low wages and irregular employment have marked the lives of these women prior to the NRA is shown in this study made in the spring of 1932.

The ten years between 1920 and 1930 saw a decided trend in the cotton industry toward shifting from the north to the south, the chief cause of which has been attributed to the lower manufacturing costs in the south—lower taxes, lower wages and longer hours. The findings of this survey—covering two-thirds of the women cotton mill workers in Maine, South Carolina and Texas—show a marked difference between the northern state and the two southern states in wages paid. From the records of actual week's earnings received by all the women regardless of time worked, the highest median was found in Maine—$11.10. In South Carolina and Texas, the medians were $7.70 and $7.60—exceedingly lower when it is remembered that half the women earned less than this amount.

Higher than these amounts were the median earnings of the women who worked full time—$13 in Maine, $11.10 in Texas and $9.65 in South Carolina. But even these figures emphasize the fact that the minimum wage set under the NRA cotton textile code below which no full-time operative an be paid—$13 in the North and $12 in the south—low as it may be, represents a real gain to many women cotton mill workers.

In Maine the scheduled hours were a little shorter than in either of the two southern states. Ten of the fourteen mills included in Maine were on a day schedule of 9¾ hours, while a 10-hour day schedule was reported by all but one mill of the 128 in South Carolina and in eleven of the thirteen in Texas. Weekly scheduled hours were also slightly shorter in Maine, being fifty-four in all mills as compared to fifty-five, the prevailing schedule in South Carolina and Texas. Under the NRA these excessively long hours have been cut down to a maximum of forty hours a week.

In Maine no women were found at work on the night shifts, but 11 per cent of the women in South Carolina and 9 per cent of those in Texas were night workers, many for exceedingly long hours. An 11-hour shift five nights a week was the schedule of nine-tenths of the women who worked at night in South Carolina.

To obtain some idea of the regularity of employment in 1931 the number of men and women on the payroll for one week in each month were counted. Texas reported the greatest employment. In 1931, three of ten mills supplying figures were shut down one or more months and five other mills ran short hours or days or irregularity for a month or more. Of ten Maine mills, seven reported a shortened daily or weekly schedule for a month or more, and of ninety South Carolina mills forty-six either ran short time or operated irregularly for a month or longer.

Strikes Are Not Necessary Under Wagner Measure

Senate Committee Told Bill Would Have Averted Crisis in Auto Industry—Does Not Give Monopoly.

Washington, March 29.—The false charge made by antiunion employers that the Wagner labor disputes bill would give the American Federation of Labor a monopoly of labor organizations was positively denied by Otto S. Beyer, attached to the office of the co-ordinator of transportation, in a statement in favor of the measure before the senate committee on education and labor. He said that nothing in the bill prevented employes from choosing any labor organization they wished for collective bargaining.

The prompt enactment of the measure into law was urged by Dr. Paul F. Brissenden, professor of economics at Columbia university, who said the history of the past eight months conclusively demonstrated the necessity for clarifying the labor section of the national recovery act in order to protect the rights of working men and women to organize in bona fide trade unions and use real collective bargaining in negotiating agreemtns with employers on wages, hours and working conditions. These rights, he claimed, had been largely reduced to mere paper declarations by the militant determination of many employers to prevent effective labor organization. He expressed the conviction that if the Wagner bill had been adopted before the controversy which resulted in the strike situation in the automobile industry the case would have been handled promptly under the law and settled.

W. J. Long, head of the Weirton, West, Va., lodge of the Amalgamated Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, accompanied by a committee of six other employes, told the senate committee they favored the bill and predicted that if it failed of passage there would be a strike of the steel workers.

St. Paul Judge Rules Against Pay Chiseler

Declares It Was Illegal for Company to Withhold Part of Wage Specified in Municipal Ordinance.

St. Paul, Minn.—Employers cannot legally evade wage rates set forth in specifications for municipal work by persuading employes to waive their right to such rates and accept lower pay.

This was the substance of an important decision here by Judge Clayton Parks in the case of Charles W. Lundahl, a laborer, against the Van Duyne-Moran Fixtures company, which tried to chisel Lundahl out of a portion of his wage by such an agreement.

According to Judge Parks' findings the company entered into a contract on Jan. 30, 1932, with the city of St. Paul and another contractor in which it agreed to furnish and install all the cabinet work in the city hall and courthouse for $237,406. The specifications for the work provided that common laborers were to be paid 45 cents an hour and skilled workers 55 cents.

The company employed Lundahl for 137 hours as a skilled worker and paid him only 35 cents per hour. The company claimed he accepted the job on this basis and that his acceptance constituted a waiver of further claims on the concern.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

SOUTH BEND UNION WINS PAY BOOST FROM BENDIX

South Bend.—The officers of Federal Labor Union No. 18347, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, negotiated a 10 per cent increase in wages with the management of the Bendix corporation here. The general increase becomes effective in two installments of 5 per cent each, one effective on March 4 and the other on June 1. The pay boost will amount to $300,000 in the aggregate to workers here.

Federal Labor Union No. 19086 decided that wage rates enforced by the Oliver Equipment company here are much too low. The union contends that wages of 35 cents an hour for laborers, 40 cents an hour for molders' helpers and 45 cents an hour for molders, which it is alleged the concern pays, are very much below the amount required to purchase a living according to decent standards.

The union also protests against what is claimed to be a bar to promotion in the Oliver plant. It is pointed out that if an employe sees what he believes to be an improvement in working conditions he is not permitted to suggest it unless his foreman gets the credit. This ban on suggestions, it is declared, is the policy of the company to prevent the advancement of the employes.

CHIEF HOPE OF IDLE FOR JOBS HELD IN PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT

New York City, March 29.—Approximately 700,000 unemployed men and women are now registered with the state employment service and the national re-employment service, and are classified by occupation and experience, Industrial Commissioner Elmer F. Andrews said in a statement addressed to private employers urging them to make use of the state employment service in re-employing workers in all lines.

Declaring that the problem of unemployment remains, Andrews said:

"Our employment service figures show that since Aug. 1 private industry has re-employed twice as many workers as have been employed on public works administration projects. The employment services placed 19,860 workers with PWA between Aug. 1 and March 1; in the same period, 42,250 were placed with private employers. It should be borne in mind that this does not represent a net decrease in unemployment, since some of the placements were for temporary work.

"It is obvious that, in the absence of large scale public projects such as CWA, the chief hope of an increase in genuine employment, as distinguished from 'made work,' lies in private industry and business."

Company Union Meat Packer Intimidates Employes in Poll for Representatives

Phoenix, Ariz.—George Hobart, international representative of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters' and Butcher Workmen of America, charged officials of the Tovrea Packing company here with wholesale intimidation of their employes at the election held under the auspices of the regional labor board to determine whether the Butcher Workers' local or the company should represent the employes in collective bargaining.

He said the company brought into action methods similar to those used by the Arizona labor haters during the infamous Bisbee deportations of workers. People familiar with that atrocity stated that some of the Bisbee gunmen were in evidence at the election. Under these circumstances of terrorism, the inevitable happened—the vote was 170 to 119 in favor of the company union. Protesting against the intimidation used by the company, the 150 members of the Butcher Workers local decided to appeal the election to the national labor board.

Mr. Hobart told the union that the Butcher Workers' organization and the labor movement generally are now making rapid strides throughout the United States and that it will not be long until the workers establish a new wage structure which will give every wage-earner a greater share of the earnings of industry.

Job Gain Fails To Absorb Labor Laid Off by CWA

But February Work Increases Are Held Significant, Though Workers' Total Effective Buying Power Falls.

Washington, March 29.—Employment in industry gained in February, but not fast enough to absorb workers laid off by the civil works administration, while workers' total effective buying power declined, the monthly unemployment report of the American Federation of Labor shows.

"More than 350,000 men and women went back to work in industry in February, according to the federation estimate, and trade union reports show that in the first half of March employment was still gainingat about the same rate as in February," President William Green, of the federation, said in making public the report.

"In January," he continued, "our revised estimate shows 11,688,000 without work in industry; February, 11,374,000. Trade unions weighted figures show 22.6 per cent of the membership unemployed in January, 22 per cent in February, 21.4 per cent in the first part of March.

Figures Significant.

"These figures are significant in two ways: First, they show that industrial employment has not increased rapidly enough to absorb those laid off from CWA. During February, 920,000 were dropped from CWA and industrial employment increased by 350,000.

"Secondly, the employment figures show the first gain in the month of February since depression began. Each previous February since 1929 unemployment has increased. This year the gain was almost entirely in manufacturing industries, where 360,000 went back to work. There were slight gains also in wholesale trade (10,000) and hotels (10,000) and in some other industries, but 50,000 were laid off in building. In manufacturing the 'heavy' or producers-goods industries showed considerable employment gains. The fact that men are going back to work in these industries, where unemployment has been particularly serious, is significant.

Gains Are Continuing.

"Trade union unemployment figures show that these gains are continuing in March, both in 'heavy' and consumer industries; employment of union members increased in the heavy industries—building and metal trades, on the railroads and in building materials industries, and also in the consumer industries—clothing and textiles.

"These gains indicate that accumulated buying power is taking effect. The record of workers' income gains for February, however, is not so bright. Payrolls in industry as a whole increased by approximately $100,000,000, but this gain was almost entirely offset by a decline of $80,000,000 in CWA payrolls during the month.

"The total gain in workers' buying power in dollars was only 1 per cent, and since cost of living increased 3 per cent during the month, workers' total effective buying power actually declined.

"Workers' individual wage increased slightly, due probably to an increase in full-time work, but here, too, the gain was offset by the rise in living costs; weekly income gained 2 per cent, living costs 3 per cent."

Same Pay Rates Under NRA Asked For Both Sexes

Women's Organizations Declare Lower Code Wage Rates for Female Workers Threaten Success of Recovery Program.

Washington, March 8.—The disastrous effect of setting a lower minimum rate of wages for women than for men in the codes of the NRA was illustrated by the representatives of ten national women's organizations at a public hearing held previous to the national conference of code authorities in Washington.

"If the NRA permits women, who form 37 per cent of all employes in industry, to be 'cheap' labor and compete on this basis with men whose wages are higher," said Miss Elisabeth Christman of the National Women's Trade Union League, "the purpose of the NRA will be defeated."

Mrs. William J. Carson, Jr., of the National League of Women Voters agreed with Miss Christman and stated that her organization felt that continuation of wage differentials by sex, which have already been incorporated in more than one-fourth of the codes, will seriously retard national recovery.

The menace of unfair competition between men and women was emphasized by Miss Christman, who cited cases of complaints from men who had been replaced by women at lower wages for the same work. "Reducing rates with the introduction of women workers," said Miss Christman after quoting many instances where women had taken men's places at the same jobs but for much lower wages, "cuts the earnings of labor and destroys the government's program of increasing purchasing power.

"There is no justification for paying women less than men just because they are women. It is the purpose of the NRA to raise standards, not to lower them. If this is to be done women must be accepted in industry as free competitors with men."

The extremely low wages paid women, even under the codes, were described by Miss Elizabeth Eastman of the national board of the Y. W. C. A., who said that in many cases women's wages were still unbelievably low in relation to the cost of living. The experience of a girl sewing machine operator on dresses, who was working under the code a thirty-five-hour week but earning only $2 a week, and of a saleslady whose hours under the code had been reduced to forty-eight a week but who earned only $4, were cited by Miss Eastman, who said that she believed the fact that in so many of the codes there was a lower minimum rate permitted for women than for men was a strong psychological factor in depressing all women's wages.

The organiaztions, which included the National Women's Trade Union League, American Federation of Teachers, American Nurses' association, General Federation of Women's Clubs, national board of the Y. W. C. A., National Consumers' league, National Education association, National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, united in asking that the codes already approved which contain differentials in any form by sex shall be so amended that men and women unskilled workers are paid at the same rate, and that herefater the minimum set for unskilled workers shall be an unqualified minimum for all employes.

ewis Flays Owners—Sunshine Company Signs Union Scale.

Amazing arrogance displayed y representatives of southern al operators in their efforts to orce a wide wage differential to uit their particular convenience as been a topic for wonder and iscussion among all classes of itizenship locally during the past w days.

The coal operators have openly efied the rulings of the NRA, ssociated Press dispatches quotg one Fordney Johnston, speakng for the Alabama operators at e Washington hearing, as dearing:

As between civil war in the dustry and subjection of the inustry to three pro-consuls workg through a military ringmaser, we prefer civil war. * * * So r as we are concerned, we have efinitely and finally determined at we will not conform any rther to any one-man determiation of policy and dictation in epudiation of essential basis and ovenant of the code.

John L. Lewis, international esident of the United Mine orkers, took some of the wind t of the sails of the garrolous entlemen, however, the same spatch quoting the fighting exutive as replying as follows:

There is no reasonable man ho does not recognize that tatement as being bombast, ecause the Alabama operators e not quite ready yet to deare war on the United States. they are, however, the United ine Workers are ready within teen days to furnish the presint with twenty army divisions men to help force the Alabama al operators to comply with the w of the United States.

A local story in Thursday's isue of the Chattanooga News oted Carl McFarlin, one of the erators' delegation to Washgton, discussing the spat beeen Johnston and Lewis, as ying "Lewis was just like a ulldog, apparently being ready grab anyone by the calf of e leg and shake him if a word e said he didn't like." The opators' spokesman continued th a pettish tirade against the ners' chief and the conduct of e hearing, indicating that Lewis favored in the discussions those in charge of the hearg.

Local trades unionists, while loring the fact that the south- coal operators had joined tain other employers in defie of the United States govnment representatives exssed no surprise that some optors should take this position, ause, it was held, many of m have ruled their workers h an iron hand for so long it impossible for them to conve of the government or anye else having the temerity to erfere with what they con- their God-given right to dic- wages and working condins to the unfortunates who are ed by necessity to eke out a ger existence in the coal nes.

SHINE COAL CO. S UNION SCALE.

A refreshing rift in the indusl clouds came when it was nounced that the Sunshine Coal pany, a fair-sized mine in Daisy district, had refused to implicated in the scheme to e down the government-set es and had signed a union eement with the United Mine rkers. While other mines are ed, the Sunshine company is to be operating at capacity, h all employes working at top ed to increase the output and care of unfilled orders.

Memphis Street Railway Men Win Wage Increase

New Scale Adds from $17.64 to $20.80 Per Month to Pay Envelopes of Bluff City Workers.

Memphis, April 12.—Officials of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electrical Railway Employes, Division No. 713, won a new agreement with the Memphis Street Railway company carrying wage increases ranging from $17.64 to $20.80 per month. The agreement covers 300 union employes. Following is the new scale for operators, conductors and motormen:

One man cars: First year of employment, 50 cents per hour; second year, 55 cents; third year, 60 cents.

Two man cars: First year of employment, 45 cents per hour; second year, 50 cents; third year, 55 cents. The old scale paid operators of one-man cars was: First year, 44.15 cents per year; second year, 48.20 cents, and third year, 52.25 cents. The old scale for conductors and motormen on two-man cars was: First year, 36.69 cents per hour; second year, 43.74 cents, and third year, 47.79 cents.

The operator who at present is receiving $118.86 for working eight hours and 45 minutes and for 26 days in a month will receive $136.50 under the new contract. This represents an increase of $17.64.

A signal victory was obtained by the union for the barn and shop repair men. At present, these shop men are receiving the same rate of pay that employes on two-man cars receive. Under the new agreement, shop men are boosted to the same rating and wage rate the operators of one-man cars receive. About forty or fifty shop men will receive a monthly salary increase amounting to about $20.80.

The union also won an appreciable reduction in hours. The old contract provided they should work not less than eight nor more than eleven hours per day. The new contract says they shall work not less than eight nor more than ten and one-half hours. Formerly a nine-hour day was the rule. The new agreement provides that the work day shall constitute eight hours and forty-five minutes whenever possible.

35-HOUR WEEK GIVEN MINERS UNDER NRA

Johnson Amends Bituminous Coal Code for 5-Day Week and $5 Wage Base.

Washington, April 12.—Confronted with the inability of the bituminous coal operators and the United Mine Workers of America to reach a new agreement for the industry to take the place of the one which expired on April 1, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, recovery administrator, acting under the power delegated to him by President Roosevelt under an executive order, approved an amendment to the bituminous coal code imposing the seven-hour day and five-day week, with appropriate wage scales, figured on a $5.00 base with differentials, on the entire bituminous coal industry. The amendment was made subject to a hearing.

Lewis Approves Johnson's Order.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, immediately issued a statement praising the action of the administrator and promising the co-operation of the union. This was regarded here as a guarantee of the abandonment of the strike plans of the union should the NRA refuse to enforce application of the Appalachian agreement reached the other day to the entire bituminous coal industry.

At the same time, the most authoritative sources here were agreed that the mine operators would accept the amendment, at least until after the hearing, and that the threat of a strike outside of those covered by the Appalachian agreement had been avoided.

Mr. Lewis' statement was as follows:

"I am assuming that the order will be made immediately effective in every mining region to which it refers. The action on the part of the administration is justifiable and commendable in the face of the emergency which confronted the industry. The United Mine Workers of America will give complete co-operation in making it effective."

Conference on Accident Prevention.

The Industrial Accident Prevention association will meet in Toronto April 26-27.

Local Unions to Seek Changes In Laws of State Labor Body; Want Poll Tax Rule Altered

Tennessee Federation of Labor, at the annual convention to open in Memphis May 7, will be asked to renew its fight in the coming legislature for abolishment of the poll tax as a requisite for voting.

A resolution originating in the Typographical union was unanimously passed by Central Body Monday night, pointing out that the poll tax requirement in effect disfranchises any citizen who is financially unable to meet the requirement, but who nevertheless may be a good citizen, and "who above all people should be enabled to cast his or her vote."

Elimination of the poll tax as a requisite for voting has long been on the program of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, but it is pointed out that in recent years there has been little in the nature of a concerted effort to enact legislation which would remedy the matter.

The resolution follows:

Whereas, one of the qualifications for exercising our American right to vote in the state of Tennessee is that a poll tax of two dollars per year be paid; and,

Whereas, since such qualification prevents the exercise of this right and disfranchises that citizen who is financially unable to meet such qualification, but who is a good citizen nevertheless and who above all people should be the one to vote; and,

Whereas, this financial barrier tends to make easier the building of strong and unscrupulous political machines; therefore, be it

Resolved, by Chattanooga Typographical Union No. 89, That we hereby present to the Tennessee Federation of Labor, in convention in Memphis, Tenn., May 7, 1934, a request that its legislative efforts be redoubled looking to the elimination of this qualification on the inalienable right of franchise; and, be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council with request for similar action.

REGULATES ACTIVITIES OF UNION OFFICIALS.

Another resolution, also originating in the Tpyos, was passed Monday night, which seeks to prevent officials of organized labor accepting political appointments while serving the workers in an official capacity. The Tennessee Federation is requested to amend its by-laws to provide that any official or member of a nonpartisan committee be required to resign such position before accepting political appointment. This resolution follows:

Whereas, the policies of the Tennessee Federation of Labor and of the Chattanooga Trades and Labor council have been of a nonpartisan nature, believing that labor should at all times be free to attack or support such parties or principles labor's welfare may dictate; and,

Whereas, such policies must as of necessity be carried into execution by the officers of these two bodies, who therefore should remain free from any embarrassing indorsements for political preferment while actually holding official leadership in the labor movement; therefore, be it

Resolved, by Chattanooga Typographical Union No. 89, in regular session, That Chattanooga Trades and Labor council and the Tennessee Federation of Labor be petitioned to so amend their constitutions and by-laws as to prevent any official or member of a nonpartisan political committee in either body from receiving indorsement for appointment to any political office within three months' time from the resignation from office by such candidate for said indorsement; and be it further

Resolved, That this shall not be construed to mean that any officer or member may not be indorsed as a candidate for elective office.

Hosiery Workers Plan Open Session

Branch 63, American Federation of Hosiery Workers, announces another open meeting for Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, at Roosevelt hall, Seventh and Market streets.

The Hosiery Workers have sponsored two such gatherings during the past two weeks, and splendid results have been obtained through enlisting new members. The local union is growing by leaps and bounds, it is reported, and the members are working toward a goal of 100 per cent within the next few weeks.

Officers of Branch 63 announced Friday that the meeting will be open to all workers of this craft, and an overflow crowd is expected at the big labor hall.

The first session at the new hour of 7 p.m. will be held tomorrow, Saturday, April 14, and all members are requested to be present.

Spencer Miller On Valley Institute Of University

Secretary of Labor Also Scheduled for Address on Program of Local School.

Prof. Spencer Miller, nationally known economist, and who is well and favorably known to Chattanooga trades unionists, is among outstanding citizens scheduled for a part in the Tennessee Valley Institute to be conducted under auspices of the University of Chattanooga April 19 to 28. Prof. Miller will conduct a round-table discussion of unemployment insurance at the University chapel on Friday, April 27, at 9:45 a.m. and Saturday, April 28, at 8:30 a.m., the discussions will be continued. As secretary of the Workers' Education bureau, Prof. Miller has become widely known among the nation's workers, and some months ago delivered an address at the courthouse sponsored by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council.

The entire program of the Valley Institute, which succeeds the annual Institute of Justice at the university, bids fair to be one of the most valuable and entertaining series since the organization of the institute several years ago. Among other speakers of particular interest to the workers will be Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, who will deliver an address at 11 a.m., on the subject "New Challenge to Industry."

Former Gov. Phil La Follette, of Wisconsin, is also on the program for an address Tuesday, April 24, on "Where Do We Go From Here?"

Dr. H. A. Morgan, David E. Lilienthal, Gov. McAlister and others of similar prominence are included on the program.

There is no admission charge, and the public is cordially invited. However, seats may be reserved for all the evening addresses at a total cost of $5 for the series.

Union-labeled flour, a novelty on the local market, has been stocked by T. E. Sims, grocer, at 4501 Thirteenth avenue, and "White Dove," a product which has been 100 per cent union for many years, is now available. It is said that the union-made product is guaranteed to please, and retails for a price well in line with other flour.

Johnson Orders Legal Drive on Code Violators

Moves to Speed Prosecution by Having Cases Taken Direct to United States District Attorneys for Action.

Washington, April 12.—New policies designed to assure speedy prosecution of code violators and to end "uncertainty as to enforcement by legal proceedings" have been announced by National Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson.

Orders issued by the administrator so simplify procedure that state compliance directors will transmit evidence of code violations direct to federal district attorneys without the necessity of reference to Washington. Code authorities or their adjustment agencies will similarly refer cases to district attorneys through the state directors.

Uncertainty Must End.

". . . The time has come when uncertainty as to enforcement by legal proceedings must end," declared the administrator in a letter to the state directors. "There is much less justification for the arguments that 'this is a new law,' and 'most employers do not understand the obligations of the codes,' than there was six months ago.

"We must now proceed on the basis that one who is violating code and is not ready and anxious to comply and make restitution when informed of his noncompliance, must be brought swiftly and surely before the enforcement agencies of government."

"This uncertainty must stop," he reiterated in a letter to the code authorities, pointing out that while some of the uncertainty and doubt as to the government's support of code authorities may be the result of undue leniency or unduly extended adjustment efforts, only "a relatively few cases of non-compliance supported by facts warranting court action have been brought to our attention."

Time for Leniency Past.

"This new procedure and this request for cases," the general emphasized in the letter to the code authorities, "does not mean that alleged violators are to be thrown into court on mere unsupported allegations; or that indutry should cease its efforts to clean up its own compliance problems without resort to government. It does mean, however, that the time has passed to be lenient with the wilful violator and that where industry's attempts at adjustment have failed, the non-complier must be brought quickly and surely to justice through the proper channels. Government is ready, able and willing to back up industry in accomplishing this end."

Heretofore, the general explained in the letters, it has been necessary, in order to co-ordinate the administration's litigation and to avoid the institution of weak or unfounded cases, to have all cases referred to Washington for recommendations before proceedings were started. Now, however, the field agencies of NRA and of the code authorities have had sufficient actual experience to justify simplification of the procedure.

Coors Brewing Company Goes Union After Long Fight

Golden, Colo.—After eighteen years of militant opposition to union wages, hours and relations, the Coors Brewing company here, when confronted with serious losses to business during the last few months, accepted the inevitable and reached an agreement with the International Union of the the United Brewery, Flour, Cereal and Soft Drink Workers of America recognizing the union.

When the Volstead act was repealed the international union solicited the labor organizations throughout the entire country, asking them to boycott the beer manufactured by this concern and to use their influence with distributors to discontinue handling it. The result of this campaign ended with the officials of the brewing company toeing the mark and signing the union agreement.

PORT WORKERS LOSE JOBS.

New Orleans.—The board of port commissioners of New Orleans has dismissed approximately 800 of its employes in line with the statement recently of Seymour Weiss, president of the board, that the dismissals were necessary because of bad business conditions.

OLD OFFICERS CENTRAL BODY ARE APPROVED

But One Change Made in Board.

McDANIELS ONLY NEW EXECUTIVE

Kamin, Cuthbert, Eckenrod Chosen Delegates to State Convention.

Delegates to Chattanooga Trades and Labor council were evidently well satisfied with the stewardship of their executive officers, for at the annual election held last Monday night the entire executive board, with one exception, was renominated and elected without opposition. The one exception was the position of sergeant-at-arms, held for the past two years by E. E. Crosby, Electricians, and although he was renominated with the others Mr. Crosby "did not choose to run," and E. E. McDaniels, a fellow-member of Local 175, was named to replace him.

A. C. Kamin, president, Moving Picture Operators, therefore begins his third term as chief executive; Z. B. Bender, Carpenters, vice-president, his second term; T. R. Cuthbert, Printers, his third term, and Miss Lassie Munsey, School Teachers, her second year in that office. Mr. McDaniels, while new to the executive board this year, has served on that board before as well as in many other capacities for Central Body.

For doorkeepers Roy Nations, Textile Workers, and Paul Garber, Plasterers, were named.

Three trustees were elected as follows: W. E. Eckenrod, Cigarmakers; W. F. Lange, Machinists, and Paul Sanders, Painters, while two members of The Labor World board were re-elected: V. W. Hallmark, Elevator Constructors, and F. H. Trotter, School Teachers.

When the time came to elect three delegates to the convention of the Tennessee Federation of Labor, however, it was found that some seven or eight nominees aspired to this honor, and for a time the "fur flew." When the smoke of battle had cleared away it was found that Messrs. Cuthbert, Kamin and Eckenrod had received a majority of the votes, and these three will represent Central Body in the annual gathering.

George Forbes, now assistant postmaster, who retired from active connection with the labor movement upon his appointment to that post, was unanimously voted an honorary life membership, and the "old-timer" expressed his appreciation in a few "well-chosen words."

Other business of importance transacted at Monday night's meeting was of such nature as to preclude publicity at the present time.

Washington Building Trades Adopt Thirty-Hour Week

Seattle, Wash.—A rousing building trades conference here, consisting of 150 delegates from all parts of the state and a number from Portland, Oreg., assembled for the purpose of drafting uniform wages, hours and conditions for individual and collective crafts, declared in favor of the six-hour day and five-day week for all building trades workers and set a minimum scale of $1.50 per hour for mechanics and $1 per hour for laborers. The work day, the conference said, should be between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m., with noon hour of one-half or one hour as desired.

The conference also adopted a number of rules relative to shifts and other work conditions and set up the building trades section of the state federation of labor as the clearing house and governing body to give effect to the resolutions adopted.

LABOR QUERIES

Q.—Have diamond workers a union?

A.—Yes. It is the Diamond Workers' Protective Union of America.

Q.—What was the first barbers' union?

A.—A union of barbers was formed in 1878, known as the Barbers' Protective union, with headquarters in Philadelphia. It was short-lived but was succeeded by a number of local unions, some of which were under the Knights of Labor. These local unions in 1887 formed the present Journeyman Barbers' International Union of North America.

What Next!

Labor Man on Hat Code.

Washington. — Appointment of Michael Greene, president of the United Hatters, Cap and Millinery Workers' International union, as labor representative, without vote, on the code authority for the hat manufacturing company, has been announced by Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson. Greene was recommended by Dr. Leo Wolman, chairman of the labor advisory board. He is to serve at the pleasure of the administrator.

I keep it all the time now. I consider it a fine medicine. I take a pinch of Black-Draught after meals when I need it. It helps to prevent sick headache and to keep the system in good order."

A Sinister Injunction

Probably one of the most sinister injunctions ever granted in a labor dispute is the order issued by Judge Frank C. Collier of the Supreme Court of California in Los Angeles, restraining officials of the Central Labor Council and of Waiters' Local Union No. 17 from picketing the Brown Derby Cafe in the Hollywood district of Los Angeles.

The basis of the petition for the injunction is the allegation that it would be illegal under the labor section of the National Industrial Recovery Act and of the NRA code for the Restaurant Industry for the management of the cafe to enter into an agreement with the officials of the Waiters' Union to employ exclusively members of that organization. This is the ordinary closed shop agreement, which is the underlying principle of the trade union movement.

It was the intention of the sponsors of Section 7-A of the Recovery Act, and of the Congress of the United States, which made it the law of the land, to remove by this section some of the barriers to effective trade union organization. But the main paragraph in the petition for the temporary injunction, granted by Judge Collier, states that if the management of the Brown Derby Cafe signed the proposed agreement with the Waiters' Union "it would be contrary to the provisions" of both the National Industrial Recovery Act and the code for the Restaurant Industry and "would be in effect prohibiting an employe the free right to join or not to join a labor organization as such employe might see fit. It would be an agreement upon the part of the employer that would compel said employe to join the labor union."

If the temporary injunction granted by Judge Collier were an ordinary injunction banning certain forms of picketing, it would be just one more of the usual acts of an anti-labor judiciary. It would temporarily handicap union work in a particular craft and constitute an annoyance in the day-to-day struggle for union wages and hours.

But the temporary restraining order goes much farther and sets up the monstrous claim that the closed union shop, which is an integral part of organized labor, violates Section 7-A of the National Industrial Recovery Act. Sustaining this claim would turn Section 7-A into a weapon to destroy the very institution it was intended to protect.

Because of this sinister purpose of the temporary injunction the Los Angeles Central Labor Council is using every effort to have it set aside. In this work the Council will have the united approval of the entire labor movement.

Criminal Slaughter of the Workers

The criminal slaughter and mutilation of working men and women in industry is a profound indictment of the reprehensible refusal of individual and corporation employers to install and apply the maximum of safety devices, methods and policies necessary to protect employes from death and injury.

The magnitude of the industrial accident crime committed against the workers by those who own and control industry is poignantly illustrated in the statistics published by the Division of Safety and Hygiene of the Industrial Commission of Ohio regarding the accident record in that State for 1933. During the year, 906 workers were killed, six were permanently and totally disabled, and 1,180 lost some member or members of their bodies.

Analyzing these gruesome figures, it is revealed that in 1933 Ohio workers engaged in the production of wealth for the owners of industry lost 112 eyes, 22 arms, 7 hands, 19 legs, 6 feet, 800 whole fingers, 501 parts of fingers, and 81 toes.

These statistics do not include railroad accidents. They are the blood-stained fatalities and mutilations gleaned from 130,316 injury and occupational disease claims filed with the Industrial Commission during the year.

T. P. Kearns, Superintendent of the Division of Safety and Hygiene, declares that many of these deaths and mutilations were caused by employers putting new men on unaccustomed jobs and re-employing idle workers who had lost much of their skill during long periods of unemployment forced on them when they were thrown into the jobless army numbering millions.

The shameless industrial accident record of Ohio employers is duplicated in every other State.

Practically all of these industrial murders and mutilations would be stopped if employers were compelled to apply well-known safety methods and policies. But the serious and thorough application of accident prevention systems would reduce net earnings and decrease profits. So employers rest content with paying modest sums for workmen's compensation insurance and continue the slaughter and mutilation, not of the stockholders and bond owners, but of the men and women who produce the wealth without which both stocks and bonds would not be worth the paper on which they are printed.

Telegraph Industry Indicted

One of the most blistering indictments ever made of an industry was that of President Frank B. Powers of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union against the telegraph communications industry. Powers showed by the industry's own figures, as collected by Government agencies, that its management has been inefficient to an almost incredible degree.

While business was declining, the big telegraph companies, heedless of danger signals, increased plant and equipment investment not far from 100 per cent. At the same time, telegraph business was steadily declining. Automatic equipment was constantly installed, though the cost of operation increased almost in step with the increase in automatic machines. Big salaries were paid officials, who apparently did little to earn them, while employes were paid starvation wages. These were some of the points made by Mr. Powers, at an NRA hearing on a proposed code for the telegraph companies.

Mr. Powers' testimony was a black eye for private ownership and management of the telegraph industry. Plainly, the present managements have not made good. If a demand arises for Government ownership and management of the industry, the managements will have themselves to blame.

Trouble for Hitler

Signs multiply that Herr Hitler and his Nazi followers are running into a peck of trouble. The church in Germany, both Catholic and Protestant, doesn't like the Nazi attitude toward religion and some other things and is showing a rebellious spirit. Just at present the Catholic church is taking the lead in opposition to Nazi policies and the Vatican has promised full support to Catholic young organizations which are resisting compulsory amalgamation with the Hitler youth movement, as planned by the Nazi regime.

The Catholic church has been in existence a long time and it is hardly possible the Hitler upstarts will change it greatly. In the end, the Nazis will probably be beaten.

The conflict with the church people is not the only thing troubling the Nazi regime. German exports have fallen to a low point because of the boycott in nearly all countries, the Government's gold reserve is shrinking and the country is in the grip of the severest economic crisis the Nazis have had to face.

All in all, it does not look so good for the German dictatorship and its attempt to make all Germans think and act alike. The Nazi course is an insult to intelligence and in the long run this never pays.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

Signing of the new wage and hour agreement for the Appalachian soft coal field and imposition of the agreement by the NRA on the entire bituminous industry were events which, in their bearing upon general industrial trends, may prove equal in significance to the auto strike settlement, although the daily newspapers did not give the coal agreement equal prominence.

The coal agreement has a 35-hour week, 7-hour day, $5.00 a day base wage, check-off, no company union, no works council, no exception to the collective bargaining clause of the recovery act as in the automobile code, and no "list of union members" provision.

The auto strike settlement was held to have some bearing upon future labor adjustments. The coal agreement upsets that theory completely. All of the brakes upon collective bargaining set up in the auto settlement are ignored. Labor spokesmen feel that those brakes will be largely ignored in other industries, at least in those industries where labor is strongly organized.

A factor that may greatly influence the trend toward a shorter work week as desired by the president is the 35-hour week, because it pushes the hours below the 36-hour standard which is now the objective of NRA.

The coal agreement's effect upon the Wagner bill must not be overlooked. It will strengthen the proponents of that measure. Congress has been flooded with propaganda against the Wagner bill; the auto strike settlement is now being used as the wedge of the present drive by manufacturers' and business men's associations.

It is admitted in administration circles that the national labor board is essential to the NRA setup. It won't be abolished. But it must be strengthened if it is to function. Ergo, it will be strengthened.

The coal agreement has now offset the auto strike settlement in public reaction to the bill. Furthermore, the attack of the National Association of Manufacturers upon the "influence of labor" is not as impressive to the administration as it was after 1919 because its success at that time in keeping up hours and forcing down wages has been generally regarded as a factor in causing the depression. Since the arguments have not changed, they are largely discounted, and it is likely the administration will proceed in its own good time to get what it wants.

A contractor goes to jail for working men more than forty hours a week. If you don't believe that's something new under the sun, ask the United States Steel corporation which, just a few years ago, worked men so long that they went in circles from beds to work.

In those very recent days of the 12-hour day it was considered nobody's business how long an employer compelled workers to toil. And the employer could compel it, too, for there were men waiting to take the jobs of those who might quit, of those who became burned out, of those who got killed.

Those who remember Castle Garden will understand about that. Today there are many who never heard of Castle Garden.

Times change and today it is the business of the nation, a matter of social and political concern, to see that men do not work beyond a decent limit, even though the limit is still too long in many industries.

But there are other things to consider today. A year ago employers were a mighty sick lot. They were willing for any kind of state help.

The state has helped and business is looking up. So, "the devil a monk is he." Short of memory and weak of understanding, business now wants to be allowed to go its own way. It is putting up a lot of money for propaganda to induce the government to "leave it alone."

The worst of it is, business has created a lot of support for itself through its propaganda, because business men are not the only ones who think little about matters of social concern.

The nation made a beginning in the direction of democratic control of industry. There were a lot of mistakes and the structure hasn't been so very democratic, but it was headed that way and still is. Business, of course, doesn't like it.

Business knows that such control means a limit on exhorbitant profits, that it is a menace to compound interest and that there will be more to distribute among the working people.

If the working people of America allow the good work to be undone, if they allow the old profit institution to return to its old ways, then they will indeed be foolish—just poor saps.

But they probably will not permit any such thing.

And if they do the next crash will be a lot bigger than the last one and that will be the end of capitalism.

The modern industrial machine cannot any longer function and hold together under the old rules of 1929. Some think it can, but they are mistaken.

The one sound thing remaining is the principle of democracy. If we can save that we can go on, as we should, to build the world's finest civilization.

The fact that a contractor can be put in jail for working men too many hours a day is a bit of a straw in the wind, showing that we are trying to hold to the course. There are many other straws.

The ideas of the people are pretty sound, if only special interests do not turn their steps backward.

The best insurance Americans can have against going backward is a strong American Federation of Labor—not just a lot of unions, but a great network of unions knit together within the American Federation of Labor.

If employers and some others can keep unions apart they can check progress. No worker should be fooled about that. A united labor movement is the one thing that America needs above everything else. With that we shall go forward steadily and fast.

Industrial Relations Boards Established

Johnson Orders Labor Disputes Tribunal for Every Industry Coming Under NRA Codes.

Washington, April 12.—Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, recovery administrator, issued an order calling for the immediate creation of industrial relations boards to handle labor disputes arising in industries operating under codes of fair competition. Such boards already exist in the cotton textile, bituminous coal and other industries. It was suggested that the boards follow the pattern previously established and have equal numbers ofrepresentatives of the two employes and employers, with both sides choosing a chairman.

The industrial relations board principle was recognized by organizations in the case of wage-earners injured in industry. To place responsibility for security of workers in large part upon the consuming public, as these measures would do, would seem to be in the interest of all.

UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

Prof. Tippetts Urges Child Labor Amendment Ratification

Buffalo, N. Y., April 12.—Because of the evident inability of the individual states to abolish child labor it is necessary to lodge that power with the federal government, declared Charles S. Tippetts, professor of economics at the University of Buffalo, in a strong statement urging the legislature of New York to ratify the child labor amendment to the constitution of the United States, and thus confer upon congress the authority to regulate the labor of children under 18 years of age.

Implying that the virulent opposition to the amendment is probably stimulated by employers who coin the labor of children into profits, Prof. Tippetts punctured the two farovite contentions of the child labor advocates that the amendment would result in unjustifiable interference by the government with the authority of parents and constitutes an unwarranted interference with the rights of the various states. Answering these two claims, Prof. Tippetts said:

"There are some matters upon which legislation must be national in scope if it is to be effective. Child labor is one of these. Thirty states might regulate child labor, but if the industrial states permit it to remain, the evil continues to exist. Anyone who has studied the history of child labor realizes what a blot it has been upon social conditions in various parts of this country. The exploitation of children constitutes a sordid record—one that we now have it in our power to remedy.

"The same arguments that were used against the introduction of the public school system are now being advanced against the abolition of child labor. We were told that the public school system would interfere with the authority of parents and destroy the home. Would you now be willing to abolish the public school system? A student of economic history is impressed by the similarity of the opposition against every movement in the direction of the improvement of labor and social conditions.

"If the state of New York refuses to join those states which have already approved the child labor amendment, it will be something to be very much ashamed of in the years to come."

Charts Picture Heavy Toll of Death in Slums

New York Survey Reveals Low-Rent Areas as Centers of Disease, Accident and Juvenile Delinquency.

New York City, April 12.—Charts prepared after a four months' survey of slum conditions here reveal the slums as accident, disease, juvenile delinquency and infant death centers.

The charts, prepared by the slum clearance committee with the aid of CWA workers, were shown at a luncheon attended by the municipal housing authority and many of the leading housing experts of the city. They were explained by R. H. Shreve, director of the slum clearance committee.

Shreve said that the cost of the city services, such as street cleaning and lighting and sewage disposal, and the added costs of disease, delinquency and crime for slum areas, made it cheaper to wipe them out entirely and replace them with modern dwellings even at the cost of putting up money without interest, granting tax exemptions and in general usbsidizing slum removal.

The committee's suggestions as presented by Shreve went, in some instances, further than the mere replacement of outmoded dwellings. He cited one chart in which were shown areas of vehicular accident deaths of children under 16 in Manhattan, alongside a chart showing areas of lowest rents.

"There are," he said, "certain evident concentrations of death locations which are quite markedly paralleled by the areas of lowest rents, as along the lower West Side, the entire East Side and in the whole of Harlem. Evidently there is an identity between areas of low rent and the locations of fatal accidents to children."

Noting that a third chart in this group showed vehicular deaths of adults distributed over the whole area irrespective of rents, Shreve suggested the need of more recreation space for children in the slum areas "and perhaps, too, an opportunity to improve conditions by a rearrangement of street pattern and a rerouting of traffic."

Another series of charts showed a similar relation between low rents and the addresses of juvenile delinquents. He pointed out that the cause seems to be the type of housing, since, for example, the West Side from Seventy-second to One Hundred Twenty-fifth street has dense population, high rents and little delinquency. He showed the value of social agencies in another series which pictured how infant mortality was lower in the lower East Side than in the equally crowded Harlem section, and how the former has many more social agencies at work. Another group showed higher incidence of tuberculosis deaths in the low-rent areas, but even in these a bettering of conditions where social agencies are at work.

NORTH CAROLINA TEXTILE WORKERS MAKE BIG GAINS

Concord, N. C., April 12.—Over 1,500 working men and women attended a public mass meeting here at the county courthouse to point out the advantages which the United Textile Workers' union offers to textile workers. G. J. Kendall, of Charlotte, organizer of the textile workers in this section, declared that nearly forty locals of the union had been organized in the last four months in Mecklenburg and Gaston counties.

T. A. Wilson, of Raleigh, a member of the state industrial commission, proclaimed the advantages of the North Carolina workmen's compensation act. He said that since the law became effective four years ago more than $4,000,000 have been paid to around 110,000 persons injured in industrial accidents. He pointed out that under the compensation law victims of industrial accidents were sure to receive benefits while the former policy of obtaining damages through the courts was slow and uncertain.

U. S. Workers Suggest Johnson Quiz Farley on Re-employment

Washington, April 12.—The following self-explanatory letter was sent, by representatives of the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks and the Railway Mail association, to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, national recovery administrator:

Dear General Johnson:

You are quoted in the press as having sent letters to all industries under the various codes calling upon them to report how many more workers they can employ with a 10 per cent increase in weekly pay and, if not in a position to employ more workers, to explain "Why not?"

It is suggested that you send similar inquiries to Postmaster-General James A. Farley. It is true that the postoffice department is not under a code. However, the policies of the department so conspicuously clash with those of the president and your administration as to furnish obvious argument and advantage to those who are opposing or evading your efforts for industrial recovery.

Under a recent "furlough" order, the postmaster-general drastically reduced the compensation of the entire postal field personnel. With respect to some 26,000 substitute employes, this order throws them out of employment after several starvation years.

In another important particular, the furlough order of the postoffice department deserves attention in the light of your request that the various industries furnish information as to employment of more workers at higher wages. The postmaster-general's order specifically sanctions drastic curtailments of accustomed and necessary public service in order to make possible these transgressions of the spirit of your orders to private industry.

That this very peculiar situation has been generally noted is proven by the floods of newspaper and other comment which immediately followed the issuance of the furlough order.

Sincerely and respectfully,
GILBERT E. HYATT,
Legislative Representative, National Federation of Postoffice Clerks.
WILLIAM M. COLLINS,
President, Railway Mail Association.

Go to your Union Meetings

Don't say you are too tired; the weather is bad; or there is too much quibbling and "hot air" to interest me.

Every time you miss a meeting and leave it to the other fellow to look out for your interest, you are doing an injustice both to yourself and your organization.

Your views on especially vital subjects should be represented in discussion and by vote, and the only way for this to be done is for you to be at your union meeting.

You are responsible for the good and welfare of your organization, and non-attendance of union meetings on your part is not excuse enough for you to voice your opinion after a measure has been passed. It is then time for you to concur in what has been done and work in harmony with the officers and other members of your union.

Go to your union meetings regularly and induce others to do the same, because one important thing to remember is the meaning of the slogan:

ALL BIDDERS FOR FEDERAL CONTRACTS MUST NOW CERTIFY TO COMPLIANCE WITH CODE

Washington, April 12.—Comptroller-General McCarl has ruled that under the president's recent executive order, all sellers and manufacturers bidding for government contracts must file certificates of compliance with their respective codes before their offers can be considered.

The decision is the most sweeping ruling yet rendered to strengthen code compliance, and provides that huge expenditures of the federal government, as well as federal funds being allocated to state and local governments, or expended through private enterprise, must be made upon certificates of code compliance.

The ruling has an important bearing on the recent controversy between National Recovery Administrator Johnson and Henry Ford, and indicates that mere compliance is no longer adequate for the Ford Motor company. Heretofore Ford dealers signifying compliance with dealers' codes could enter bids; now their bids must be accompanied by manufacturers' certificate of compliance or affirmative commitment as well.

Prior to the president's order, McCarl in a ruling disallowed Johnson's contention that code signing was a necessary prerequisite to bidding for government business. McCarl said then that it was not intent of the act to require such affirmation to a code, but when a contractor accepted a contract, he must abide by the code of his industry. In the new ruling, McCarl takes the position that the president's order has the force of law, and while "signing of codes" still is not necessary, bidders for business involving direct or indirect expenditure of federal funds must file affirmative certificate of compliance.

McCarl's ruling disposes of the question also whether the president's order conflicts with federal statute governing letting of contracts to the lowest responsible bidders. Now a certificate of compliance is made a necessary factor in determining a lowest responsible bidder.

Green Criticizes Sex and Section Pay Differentials

Differences in Wages Unjust, He Tells Women's Trade Union League — Stresses Need of Economic Balance.

New York City, April 12.—Opposition to lower pay for women doing the same work as men and to code differentials between different sections of the nation was voiced by President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, in speaking at a dinner given here by the New York Women's Trade Union league in honor of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"We have ever present that indefensible standard which, through the traditions of centuries, has been maintained," President Green said. "It has always seemed unjust to me that women workers should receive less pay for doing the same work and rendering the same service as that performed by men. We of the trade union movement have always vigorously contended that equal rates of pay should be paid women workers when they did the same work performed by men. We must continue the fight against this injustice until we win.

"While there may be some justification for the establishment of varying rates of pay in remote sections where standards of living differ—and I question the economic soundness of such a position—nevertheless there does not seem to be any good argument which can be offered or sound reason advanced for the payment of differing rates of pay to different women workers employed in cities closely related in practically the same territory. This is a part of the common problem we are trying to solve and one in which I know the National Women's Trade Union league is deeply interested."

Pays Tribute to League.

Mr. Green paid tribute to Mrs. Roosevelt and to the National Women's Trade Union league. He said that the league had "blended into an effective organization those who work for wages in manufacturing and mercantile establishments and those noble women outside of wage-earning classes who are interested in the promotion of social justice and human welfare."

The labor head emphasized the need of balance between production and consumption of manufactured goods and added:

"It is only when produced wealth is widely diffused, when the earnings of industry are equitably distributed, when purchasing power is widespread and established upon a high level, that we can expect to maintain progress and promote universal prosperity."

Skilled Workers In Federal Services Win 40-Hour Week

Washington, April 12.—Skilled workers in the government printing office, the bureau of engraving and printing, the navy yards, the arsenals, the Panama canal and the lighthouse service and some other government services are to go on the 40-hour week as a result of the Thomas amendment to the independent offices bill. The shorter week has already gone into effect in some of the services.

Establishment of the 40-hour week in the government printing- office, effective April 7, is estimated by Public Printer Carter to be providing regular employment to from 400 to 500 additional persons. Of the more than 4,000 workers in the plant, only about 200 are exempted from the short week.

About 5,300 skilled workers at the navy yard here went from the 44-hour week to the 40-hour basis.

The 40-hour law covers those classes of employes whose wages are fixed by boards or other authorities. The independent offices bill is not effective as a whole until July 1, but Controller-General McCarl and Atty.-Gen. Cummings ruled that the 40-hour provision was to apply now. Workers affected by the shorter week get the same pay as when they worked 44 or 48 hours.

WALKOUT AT DALTON MILL IS EFFECTIVE

Hosiery Workers Foresee Complete Victory.

REAL SILK BRANCH CLOSED BY STRIKE

Citizens of North Georgia Metropolis Solidly Behind Union Workers.

Advices from Dalton to The Labor World indicate that the walkout of workers at the branch of the Real Silk Hosiery mills in that city, which occurred on Monday of this week following demands of several hundred employes for wage increases and other concessions, is completely effective. After a few days of bluff about operating, the mill was closed entirely Friday.

Trades unionists who visited the North Georgia metropolis this week declared that the spirit of the strikers is wonderful, and that seldom is such determination shown by workers in their efforts to improve their conditions.

"A most encouraging feature of the affair," one local union man told The Labor World, "is that the merchants and business people of Dalton are practically 100 per cent behind the workers. The spirit of unionism has been growing in this thriving city for many weeks, and it appears that people from all walks of life are 100 per cent behind the strikers in their demands for a square deal from the Indianapolis branch of the Real Silk concern.

"The union is well officered, and there is no question in the minds of these people that victory will crown their efforts."

REAL SILK WORKERS CLOSE INDIANA MILLS

Indianapolis, Ind., April 19.—The Real Silk mill of this city and its two subsidiaries, the National and the Fulton, were closed down by an effective strike which started last Friday morning.

More than 2,500 workers constituting virtually all of the hosiery—as distinct from the lingerie—workers in the three mills are participating in the strike.

Less than fifteen knitters in the three mills are acting as strikebreakers.

The Real Silk workers, themselves, and the whole labor movement here are almost overwhelmed with enthusiasm at the success of the strike, which for the past ten years had been regarded as impossible in this town.

The workers are mass picketing the three plants and are demonstrating absolute confidence in their ability to achieve a complete victory.

Recognition of the right of collective bargaining, the payment of the national union wage scale and the elimination of the so-called "efficiency system" of computing wages are the principal and very modest demands of the strikers.

That the sentiment of the community is with the strikers was demonstrated when the Real Silkers with sympathizers from the local labor movements paraded through the city Wednesday. Sensing that public opinion is with the strikers and that the workers are determined and are under capable leadership, the police are reversing former policies and are not interfering with the strikers.

LENOIR CITY WORKERS ALSO HAVE TROUBLES

The Bacon interests are determined to prevent the spread of unionism in their plants and are using every customary tactic of intimidation and coercion in their fight. Organizer Fred Held has charged the mill management with violations of Strikers Spurn Offer of Bread By Colonial Co.

"Not Hungry Enough Yet" to Accept Truck Load, Say Dalton Unionists.

What was described as an attempt by representatives of the Colonial bakery to "pull a fast one" on the strikers at the Real Silk Mills at Dalton was frustrated by refusal of the unionists to accept a gift of a truckload of the staff of life, according to a story telephoned The Labor World from the Georgia city Thursday night.

The Colonial, as is well known to local working people—also to those at Dalton—has not received the organization of bakers with any great enthusiasm. In fact, it is recalled, although Colonial bakers were first to sign a charter for a union, for some reason never satisfactorily explained, the signers "reneged" and not one single member of the union is now employed at the local plant of the Colonial. Efforts have been made from time to time to adjust the matter, but without success.

Dalton trades unionists, although "new in the business," were well aware of the situation, representative of the Colonial appeared on the scene of the strike and offered to deliver, gratis, a truckload of the product, he was politely but firmly told that the strikers were "not yet hungry enough" to accept the offer, unless a satisfactory explanation of the reason why Colonial bakers were not organized was forthcoming.

"We prefer to eat bread baked by union bakers," a spokesman for the strikers said.

Non-Union Brewery Gets a Bad "Start"

The non-union Southeastern Brewing company, subsidiary of the Atlantic Ice & Coal corporation, chain concern operating over several states, got off to a bad "start" this week, when plans to brew beer at the local plant, where employment of non-union workmen caused a disagreement with local labor, were halted by some sort of a mishap, according to reports.

It was said that beginning of operations would probably be delayed several weeks. Exact nature of the trouble could not be learned, union men, of course, not being let in on the "secrets" of the chain corporation's subsidiary.

Plans for a renewed campaign of publicity in the Atlantic-Southeastern affair have already begun under direction of Central Body, and workers in all the territory where the Atlantic operates will be advised of the situation and asked to add their protests to the attitude of the officials toward labor.

It is not known whether the Southeastern brewery will retain the trade name of Lions Pilsener for its local product.

Shoe Repairers Sign All But One

Local 620, Shoe Repairers, announce that all downtown shops with the exception of the Model, on East Eighth street, have signed the new agreement submitted by the union a short time ago.

The Model shop is a chain organization, with headquarters in Nashville. It has been the center of considerable controversy, and has been almost continuously picketed as "unfair to the N. R. A."

Local union officials are hoping, however, to obtain the signature of the Model proprietor within a short time, it is announced.

From "The Union Postal Clerk"

Both Sides of the Story—The Inside and the Outside

FARLEY REVOKES P. O. FURLOUGH ORDER

Washington, April 19.—Confronted by a rising tide of protest from the public and organized postal employes, Postmaster-General Farley has announced revocation of his order of March 2, requiring payless furloughs for postal employes and curtailing service until June 30.

Farley explained that the increase in the volume of mail had made the economies contemplated in that action no longer necessary. He interpreted the increase in the volume of mail as "an accurate barometer of improved business conditions throughout the country."

The revocation of the order will be effective as of May 1. In addition to its effect on the pay of thousands of postal employes, it will result in increased deliveries, employment of larger distribution crews and relief in the form of more work for the postal substitutes. The order aroused widespread complaint among federal employes, especially among the substitutes, who protested bitterly against their plight from lack of work and inability to get CWA or PWA relief jobs while remaining on the rolls.

The only part of the order remaining in effect, it was pointed out, is that vacations must be put off until the new fiscal year, which begins July 1.

A direct appeal to Farley to discontinue his economy order was made in March in a letter signed jointly by the National Association of Letter Carriers, the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks and the Railway Mail association. They declared that economies at the expense of employes would inflict "harsh and unwarrantable burdens" on them.

Commenting on the postmaster-general's order, the National Federation of Postoffice Clerks said:

"No doubt can exist as to the forces which brought about this repeal. It was the amazing response to the public to the inconvenience and loss suffered by them and their rising indignation because of a consistent transgression of the principles of the NRA by postal employment policies."

The furlough section is still in the law, as it applies to the fiscal year beginning next July 1. Postal employes are fighting the section and are supporting the Sweeney bill, designed to eliminate the furlough provision.

Tennessee Solons Deny Giving Aid To Coal Operators

Both Declare Item Quoting Mine Owners' Representative Without Foundation.

Senator Nathan L. Bachman and Congressman Sam D. McReynolds have both unqualifiedly denied an alleged statement of one of the representatives of southern mine operators, quoted in the News of April 12, to the effect that the former gentlemen were supporting the coal operators in their fight for differentials in wage scales and hours for mine workers in this section, and were attempting to enlist the interest of Secretary of State Cordell Hull in behalf of the employers.

The only part played by the senator and congressman, according to letters received by Secretary Cuthbert, of Central Body, was to extend the courtesy of arranging a hearing for the employers. Neither of the Tennesseans had heard anything whatever with reference to the statement about Judge Hull.

Mr. Cuthbert's letter, together with the replies furnish rather interesting reading, and indicate that the mine owners' spokesman either was misquoted or let his enthusiasm get the better of his judgment.

Mr. Cuthbert wrote identical letters to Senator Bachman and Congressman McReynolds, as follows:

April 12, 1934

Hon. Nathan Bachman,

Washington, D. C.
Dear Senator Bachman:

Today's News carried a story concerning the fight being made by southern coal mine owners on the wage differential. In it one paragraph has caused a bit of concern, which says "Senator Nathan Bachman and Congress-

TAKES MILD RAP AT TAXPAYERS' LEAGUE

Newly-Elected Officers Local 246 Optimistic as to Future for Members.

Chattanooga and Hamilton County Teachers' Federation, Local 246, is set to "go places" within the coming year, according to Stanton E. Smith, re-elected president of the federation at its regular meeting in the University of Chattanooga chapel last Saturday morning.

According to the spirit of an interview prepared for The Labor World Friday by Prof. Smith, the local teachers feel that "much has been accomplished, there remains much to do, but we are on our way."

President Smith, in discussing the work of the federation, takes a mild poke at the report of the so-called Hamilton County Taxpayers' league, recently released, and intimates in connection with this, that "insidious propaganda" is endangering the future of education.

The local union of teachers was chartered some eighteen months ago, and despite almost insurmountable handicaps brought about mainly by depression conditions and the machinations of enemies of education, who have taken and are taking full advantage of the economic crisis to destroy

NRA Label Denied Tennessee Firms Violating Codes

Fair Practices Insignia Withheld from Cotton Garment Men Who "Chisel."

Certain garment factories in the state of Tennessee will be denied the use of the NRA label which will be placed on all such products where the manufacturer is complying with the code for this industry, according to news this week from Hugh Humphreys, state compliance director, who describes such situation in this state as "unfortunate."

Mr. Humphreys declares these manufacturers are in the position of having filed against them complaints of their violating wages and hours prescribed under their code, and he has therefore requested proper authorities to withhold the fair-practices label from these firms.

The state director's statement, issued in the form of a press release Thursday, follows:

"The products in all factories covered by the cotton garment code manufactured after May 1 are to have NRA labels attached to each article. This information is furnished by E. E. Little, temporary director of observance of the cotton garment code authority located in New York. Mr. Little further states that they are now issuing labels to members of this industry under NRA regulations. I am requested to wire Mr. Little promptly the names of firms covered by the cotton garment code against whom we have prima facie cases of violation so that these violators will not be supplied with the labels pending adjustment.

"It is unfortunate that certain garment factories in the state of Tennessee are in the position of having filed against them complaints of their violating the hours and wages prescribed under their code and it becomes my duty to inform Mr. Little to withhold these labels. Under these circumstances it is very desirable that each manufacturer under the cotton garment code communicate with me at once that I may have full assurance that they are complying with the terms of their code."

Record Attendance Indicated for Meet State Federation

Reports from All Sections Presage One of Largest Gatherings in History.

One of the largest gatherings in the history of the Tennessee Federation of Labor is indicated in reports going into the office of Secretary W. E. Cheek at Nashville, according to information received from the state official this week.

The meeting will convene in Memphis on Monday, May 7, and will last probably the usual three days, although there is a possibility that due to the many important matters to be discussed the rule may be broken and the business continued over into the fourth day.

Economic conditions made advisable abandonment of the annual convention last year, and this fact, together with the unquestioned vast improvement in general business affairs, is pointed to as one reason for the probable record attendance.

Certain it is that the largest number of delegates ever to represent Chattanooga in the state body will trek to the Bluff City for the meeting, as already more than a score have been selected to represent the local workers, and several local unions which have not yet acted will name their representatives within the next two weeks.

President Aymon and Secretary Cheek early issued an appeal to all unions to recognize the unusual importance of this year's sessions, and the response has been very gratifying, according to the officials.

Local unions are requested to phone or send in to The Labor World names of those who will represent them at the meeting.

The following, under the heading, "How One Candidate Spent His Time," was sent in to me, and I am passing it on to Labor World readers for what it is worth:

"Lost four months and twenty days canvassing, lost 1,360 hours of sleep thinking about the election, lost 40 acres of corn and a whole lot of sweet potatoes, lost two front teeth and a lot of hair in personal encounter with an opponent; donated one beef, four shoats and five sheep to barbeques; gave away three pairs of suspenders, five calico dresses, five dolls and thirteen baby rattles, kissed 126 babies, kindled fourteen kitchen fires; put up eight stoves, cut fourteen cords of wood, carried 24 buckets of water, gathered seven wagon loads of corn, pulled 470 bundles of fodder, walked 4,060 miles, shook hands 9,080 times, told 10,001 lies and talked enough to make 10,000 volumes; attended 26 revival services, was baptized four times by immersion, and twice some other ways, contributed $50 to foreign missions, made love to nine grass widows, got dog-bit thirty-nine times and got defeated."

Mrs. O'Brien had been a resident of Chattanooga for thirty years. She was a member of the Highland Park M. E. church, south. Besides the one son named, she is survived by a daughter, Miss Florine, and three grandsons, John, Jr., Robert E. and Billy, all of Chattanooga.

The Labor World offers heartfelt condolences to the surviving relatives of the deceased lady.

RUMORED ALL IS NOT WELL AT 'HOME STORES'

"Individualist" Said to Be Having Troubles.

PRINTER(?) DEMOTED FOR DARING TO KICK

Retail Stores "Sold Back" to McDonald When Code Is Revised.

Continued rumors of code violations come from headquarters of the so-called Home Stores, where are located the bakery, dairy, wholesale grocery, printing plant, tire business, etc., the latest story declaring that when one employe in the printing department of the concern made bold to protest against an alleged code violation he was "demoted."

Local printers are wondering just how far the grocer, baker, dairyman, druggist, tire dealer, etc., would have to go to demote anyone in that department, in view of the "princely" wages paid printers (?) and the fact that McDonald indicated to a committee that scrubbing floors, cleaning cuspidors or anything else the merchant prince might desire, might become a part of the "printer's" duties at the option of the employer.

It was recalled that McDonald once offered a local craftsman $15 per week for his services "from can till can't," although the worker was encouraged with the further advice that he might even work himself up eventually to $25 per week.

Another interesting item coming from the headquarters of the cheap-labor institution was to the effect that the retail stores, which had been "sold" to the individual managers when the code provided a wage scale of $35 per week for executives, have now been "rebought" by McDonald, and the boys are once again mere working men. The new code for groceries is said to approve a scale of wages for executives considerably below the above figure.

Chattanooga Typographical union, which has carried on a campaign of publicity regarding the unprecedented attitude of Roy McDonald, president of the "Home Stores" company, is planning a renewed program along these lines, and a committee from that body has been busily engaged during the past week assembling new data and preparing to put it properly before local working people and their friends, and particular attention will be given to surrounding communities.

McDonald continues to print his weekly throw-sheet, for which he originally employed an out-of-town operator when numbers of local craftsmen were unemployed, but parties who have been able to locate a copy of the sheet declare it is still composed entirely of advertising for the stores and their affiliated businesses. In this connection it was recalled that the so-called Don Cherry Tire company has long ago been declared "unfair" by Chattanooga Trades and Labor council, along with the wholesale and retail groceries, bakery, dairy, etc., operated under the name "Home Stores."

Labor World readers will remember that McDonald told a committee which called upon him that he was an individualist, and that anyone who works for him will come to work at such time as he orders, and will quit by the same sign.

President Hoover, he said, made a grave mistake in 1929 when he exacted a pledge from the nation's industrial leaders to keep wages up as an aid to prosperity. Had wages been cut in half at that time, the grocer-baker-dairyman - printer - publisher-individualist averred, we would now be out of the depression, and further, he held, we will never be out until wages are further and further cut.

But How About the Cannon Fodder?

Mine owners of the Tennessee-Alabama district are reported to have talked about "civil war" and "secession" in their protest against government recovery orders. For all of which these gentlemen should be—and probably later will be—ashamed of themselves. If such a thing had occurred in a meeting of workingmen (which could not have happened, at least in this section of our beloved country) these same industrialists would have howled to the high heavens about treason, communism, etc., and would have demanded the perpetrators be shot at sunrise, or at least deported.

However, the incident gives rise to conjecture as to what might happen if a mine-owner-controlled civil war or secession movement should chance to bloom. For one thing, it might give the J. Harvey Wilsons another opportunity to nonchalantly toss five-thousand dollar checks on the tables to make up deficits in the funds necessary for the event, and maybe some of them would get their pictures printed in the papers. And many of the old flags of 1917, carefully folded away by lip-service patriots of those hectic days, would be resurrected by the coupon-clippers for the purpose of spurring the boys on to again make the world safe for democracy.

But where would they get the cannon fodder? Working people, as a rule, while sometimes despairing of justice in this land of troubles, are fairly well satisfied to take their chances on a fair deal in the long run. And without the workers, most any war would assume a comic-opera aspect.

Go ahead and start your war, gentlemen, but you'll have to do your own fighting. We're not going along.

Dr. Wirt's Brainstorm

Dr. William A. Wirt, Gary, Ind., educator, got into the limelight of publicity by claiming that he had discovered a plot on the part of certain government officials and others to overthrow the form of government or social order of the United States. In his statement before the special committee of the house of representatives appointed to investigate the charge, Dr. Wirt revealed that the "plot" consisted of the advocacy of national economic planning, and that the main "plotter" was Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Tugwell, who for some time has sponsored economic planning as a means to restore prosperity to the farmers in particular and to the people generally.

Economic planning in itself is not new. The new element is the purpose of economic planning. In the past, and to a large extent in the present, economic "planning" has been the monopoly of capitalists, bankers and large investors with unlimited profits for those who own and control industry as its sole object. The logical result of this "planning" was the depression which began in 1929 and which produced an unemployed army running from 3,216,000 in January, 1930, to 13,689,000 in March, 1933, and now standing at about 11,000,000. In addition, the old "planning" ruined thousands of banks, millions of farmers, and threw our entire economic and social order to the verge of chaos.

The new economic planning is designed to use our immense capacities for the production of wealth for the real benefit of the people, who do most of the useful work in both production and distribution.

The Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor has properly visioned this idea. In a report to the annual convention of the federation, after stating that the "fundamental difficulty" with our economic system is the lack of equal sharing in those things which make up the welfare of our people, the council said:

> "With co-ordinated planning we may endeavor to make the things people want, assure distribution by planning for adequate consuming power, thereby making it possible for all to enjoy the benefits of social progress."

Economic planning, national in scope, designed to secure prosperity for the masses of the people, is the underlying purpose of the new deal. It is the underlying purpose of the national industrial recovery act. Moreover, it is in thorough accord with the constitution of the United States, which confers upon congress the power "to promote the general welfare."

Of course using the constitution and the power of congress to promote the interests of the masses of the people arouses the opposition of those subversive groups who have hitherto used the government to advance the interests of the profiteers. It is quite natural that they should see in economic planning for the public interest a direct assault on the form of government as they and their courts have shaped it. But real economic planning for the welfare of the people, instead of overthrowing the form of government outlined in the constitution, will make it the servant of the people, and that is what it should be.

Victims of Usury

Startling revelations of the victimizing of poor people by small loan companies came to the surface in the hearing held by the District of Columbia committee of the United States senate in Washington on the usury bill sponsored by Senator King, of Utah.

William A. Roberts, corporation counsel for the district, advocated fixing the legal rate of interest at 8 per cent per annum with authorization for additional charges, strictly limited by law, for investigation, commissions and other things, the borrower being further protected by the provision that even these charges must be reasonable with the burden of proof on the lender. Agents of the small loan companies demanded a much higher rate than that approved by the district's counsel.

In the course of the hearing an attorney representing certain victims of usurious lenders gave a number of cases of borrowers who were penalized by monstrous charges when compelled by circumstances to default.

He cited a case of a railroad fireman who had borrowed $25, signing a note for $30, of which $15 was due in five days and $15 due in twenty days. Immediately he defaulted he was sued in the name of a woman to whom his note was said to have been sold and he ultimately had to pay $52.50. A loan of $75 cost another borrower $100, he said. A newspaper employe borrowed $100 on his automobile for eight months, but missed a payment. His car was "snatched" and he had to pay $154 a month after he had borrowed.

Another witness testified that a "Wall Street combination" owns most of the small loan companies, and that the banks are financing these companies in the drive for higher interest rates.

It is a fundamental criticism of our money loaning system that the poor, who are least able to pay usurious rates for loans to tide them over periods of necessity, are the very ones who are mulcted by the highest charges. In this age of subsidies for air mail contractors and ocean mail contractors and banks and railroads it might not be a bad plan to consider the advisability of subsidizing interest rates charged the poor.

"Life Lines" Not Wanted—Now

It is becoming more and more a question whether the big basic industries are going to insist upon renewal of their codes at the next expiration dates. Big industrialists individually, as they get more out of the depression, are expressing opposition to making NRA permanent, or to enactment of such measures as the Wagner bill which would have to do with its permanency. There is frequent expression from within industry that NIRA was only a temporary expedient to combat depression. In other words, industry is getting on its feet, and not so enthusiastic (until the next jam) about "life lines" thrown from Washington.

The Passing Show

Note and Comment on Things Doing in the March of Events

The federal emergency relief administration is faced with the prize dilemma of the whole recovery program. Here are ten million unemployed, which means thirty to forty million dependents. CWA took care of the worst of it this winter. Now what—?

If the administration continues gestures of employment, at more or less make-believe occupations—since the PWA falters and actual industrial operations probably never will absorb them—that means more bond issues and more taxes. With these millions out of production, not carrying themselves very much, that puts some real burden on the economic set-up.

Comes now the self-help movement, along with barter-and-exchange, and all of that last-resort stuff of those disconnected from the main works. Most of these folks are capable—can do things. But if they go to making things to sell, they are "interfering with regular business!" FERA is a "relief" institution, and "it won't do for the government to be putting people into business"—in competition with folks under the codes. That might be "unfair."

Well, these self-help people are becoming vocal. At Washington a little conference, representing some of the most successful and significant of the self-help co-operatives and co-operative communities, is getting together to try to find out what they are permitted to attempt under FERA assistance, along with subsistence homesteads, etc. They are from Boulder and Denver, Salt Lake City, Richmond, Louisiana, Baltimore, Worcester, Mass. They are asking intelligent questions, born of experience. Some of them represent others who have cashed in their insurance policies to help put over some self-help co-operative concern, until the government could get around to help. And the government didn't! Some sore spots.

These folks talk about the rioting in Minneapolis by CWA workers—and shake their heads. Too bad! They tell of clashes with code authorities. They want to mine coal and sell it to the relief administration. They are tanning leather—and wish they had a shoe factory. Louisiana offers a co-operative colony with 15,000 acres of land, and a couple of sawmills, but cannot finance the housing and necessary subsistence until some hundreds of families could get in their crops. And what can they do with their lumber—under the the codes?

FERA has some problems, along with Gen. Johnson and his automobile factories. How to carry the load without rocking the boat? Private enterprise cannot pay any attention to absorbing these ten million workers. But somebody must pay attention to it. How?

An example of the fantastic lengths to which the Austrian reactionaries are proceeding in their thirst for revenge is given in a message to the London Daily Herald from its Vienna correspondent.

A boy of 16 saw a man delivering leaflets which bore the title, "Patriotic Association of House Tenants."

The boy laughed. He was arrested and sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment.

This is symptomatic of a furtive reign of terror in which scores of men, and women, temporarily set free during the short period when Dollfuss was making a parade of clemency, have been arrested, tortured and imprisoned. Oppression, misery and want are likely to be the lot of the Austrian workers for some time to come as far as the fascist dictators are concerned.

The Wirt episode isn't wirt all the newspaper space it's getting, but nevertheless here's where it gets a bit more.

The nation hasn't seen so good a show in many moons—and yet—and yet—

It isn't all just a laughing matter, funny as the Gary professor has been on the stand and in the public prints.

For example, he has blown up a tempest in a teapot. The next time charges of red machinations are made there'll be many who will say, "oh, oh, just another Wirt fiasco—just more hooey."

That's the damage this vaudeville stunt has done.

As for Wirt himself, how many remember the Gary school propaganda back in 1915, or thereabouts?

A great many persons thought it a good idea at the time and there was a tremendous effort to have it installed in New York.

Labor had a lot to do with defeating the proposition. It didn't like the fact that it came from Gary, steel trust seat; and it didn't like what looked like a lot of Rockefeller influence.

So the Gary plan went back to Gary and nothing much has been heard of Dr. Wirt from that day to this, when he emerges with a bang.

And it's all so funny. A few folks, having varying views, gather at a party and jabber. How they can jabber! But they say Wirt did most of the jabbering.

The serious point to it all is this: In that party there wasn't one person qualified to speak for the administration or for any real part of it. They could have promised "the revolution" tomorrow morning and it wouldn't have meant anything.

There was Lawrence Todd. He's a queer combination of social registerite and communist newspaper reporter. He represents the official soviet press service in Washington. He's not a competent prophet of American operations or actions. His predictions would be precisely meaningless.

There were some government bureau employes. They may be good employes, but they cannot speak with authority. None can be said to be closer to the president than that possibly one or two might be "a friend of a friend of a friend" of some professional bureau chief.

It's all very funny and it looks as if Dr. Wirt, of Gary, had been taken for a swell buggy ride.

Whereupon congress went dizzy and the high hats on the hill got just about as foolish as Dr. Wirt.

If the whole thing had been engineered to take people's minds from real issues, if it had all been built to create a smoke screen, it couldn't have been better timed.

So, with Dr. Wirt making a monkey of himself, with congressmen making monkeys of themselves, perhaps "we the people" are the biggest monkeys of all for providing an audience that eats up columns of stuff about the silliest thing Washington has seen under the new deal. Let's call it a day on freak shows.

MARYVILLE BARBERS WIN THREE SHOPS FOR UNION

Maryville, Tenn.—Three more Maryville barber shops have signed agreements to recognize the Journeymen Barbers International union and in the future will employ only union barbers, pay the union scale, and observe union rules and regulations. There are now six union barber shops here. The three additional recruits to union hours and wages were secured through conferences held by H. Clay Ammons, president, and O. L. UNION LABEL

What is the objection to union-labeled products?

There would appear to be some objection or else there would be greater general demand for them.

Why not go into this matter now? The time was never more propitious for cooperative effort to popularize union-labeled products. Unionists are usually willing enough to lend aid to efforts to create demand for the label representative of their own craft. Why neglect union-made products of other crafts? Other organized craftsmen are asked to see that your label is on what they purchase. Isn't it only fair to see that their labels are on what you buy?

The union label on products of any description is indisputable evidence the goods were made by union workers, in a union shop and under union conditions. This is the main point in their favor.

By purchasing union-made products with union-earned money unionists are aiding each other. If all union-earned money were spent only for union-made products there would be no enforced idleness among members of organized labor.

Argument is heard that union-labeled products are not easy to obtain. Why aren't they? It is idle to assert that dealers will refuse to stock union-made products if shown sufficient demand exists. Why not create that demand?

Once in a while unionists declare this or that nonunion product is better suited to their taste than union-made goods of a similar kind. Is taste a matter of principle? Isn't it a cultivated sense? Did the founders of organized labor consider taste when formulating the principles upon which the movement is predicated?

No unionist can justify his attitude of noncompliance or indifference unless and until he has exhausted all reasonable efforts to obtain for himself and his home products that bear the symbol of fair labor. There are, perhaps, times when a certain article is unobtainable, but a quest for it may arouse sufficient interest among dealers to make it easy to find the second time inquiry is made.

Labeled hats, shoes, cigarets and other goods are easily obtained in most sections simply because demand for them has been so great dealers have realized the wisdom of stocking them. The average merchant has slight regard for sentiment in business. He wants to handle goods that move. Move the first consignment for him and he will order the second at once.

A demand must first be created. And if organized labor does not create the demand for union-made products, who will?

United and consistent effort to create and maintain a demand for union-made products will lessen unemployment, increase wages and decrease working hours to the glory of the organized labor movement.

ENDING OF CWA "TRAGEDY," GOTHAM OFFICIAL ASSERTS

Washington, April 19.—Abandonment of the civil works program was characterized as a "tragedy" by William Hodson, commissioner of the department of public welfare of New York City, in speaking before the Red Cross convention here.

"I do not wish to appear to be criticizing the new system, or any one," Hodson said, "but the fact remains that it was a tragedy indeed that we suddenly had to take action April 1 which reversed the sound principles which had been set up under CWA. If funds were no longer available, it was nevertheless a tragedy that had to be done with such suddenness. The transfer from federal funds back to state and local funds should have been more gradual.

"It should have taught us a lesson—and that is, that we cannot deal with the needy and distressed, whose numbers mount into the millions, by mass action. We must still continue to consider industrial problems—no man's distress is quite similar to his neighbor's. And we must be prepared when we launch a program to follow through or permit time to make essential adjustments."

MORE ABOUT COAL OPERATORS

man Sam McReynolds offered aid to the operators and a conference was being arranged with Cordell Hull to enlist his support . . . "

Does this mean that you are helping the coal mine owners to destroy the wage scales set up under the NRA, and that you are siding against the workers in their defense of their living?

Because the story in the paper is not clear to us, we ask that you inform us if you are taking a stand on the matter, and if so, what your stand is.

Yours truly,
T. R. CUTHBERT, Secy.

Under date of April 14, Mr. McReynolds wrote:

Mr. T. R. Cuthbert,
3611 South Terrace,
Chattanooga, Tenn.

My dear Mr. Cuthbert:

I am just in receipt of your letter of the 12th inst. in which you state that the News carried a story in one paragraph which stated that Senator Bachman and myself offered aid to the operators and a conference was being arranged with Cordell Hull to enlist his support.

I do not know what the News had, but all Senator Bachman and myself did was to assist in arranging hearings for the coal operators with the administrator of the NRA, and this hearing was had as you no doubt know this last week. This is all I know about it.

As to any conference with Judge Hull I know nothing about that. In other words, we merely undertook to see that the coal operators got a hearing before the code authorities. We know nothing about the facts at all.

Yours most respectfully,
S. D. McREYNOLDS.

Judge Bachman said:

April 16, 1934.

Mr. T. R. Cuthbert, Secy.,
Chattanooga Trades and Labor Council,

My dear Mr. Cuthbert:

I have yours of the 12th with reference to an article in the News concerning the wage differential in the southern coal mine situation.

In view of my consistent record in favor of the interests of labor, I am somewhat surprised that you should make inquiry as to my attitude with reference to my siding against the workers.

I attended the hearing with some of the operators and felt, of course, as representing my constituency, they were entitled to an opportunity for a hearing. I have taken no position inimicable to labor.

With my kind regards, I am,
Very truly yours,
N. A. BACHMAN.

Verbal Pacts the Bunk, Strike-breakers Learn

London, Ontario.—Printers are on strike against two local dailies which refused a signed agreement but offered a verbal one. The papers are being printed by strikebreakers.

In the Advertiser one day, sandwiched in a story, there appeared the following:

"Us non-union rats are making more money than the union printers ever did."

But soon the same paper carried another unauthorized paragraph, reading:

"These verbal agreements are the bunk, we've been cut in pay already."

Hubby (absent-minded) — Where are my glasses, honey?

MORE ABOUT DALTON STRIKE

Section 7 of the national recovery act in discharging workers for union membership and forcing workers to tear up their cards before securing jobs in the mill.

Richard Edge, general manager of the Bacon plants, makes speeches to his employes in which he demands that the workers "don't join a damned union."

Organizer Held is pushing this question with the state compliance director and the textile industrial relations board which has jurisdiction over the cotton mill.

One firm is actually terrorizing them into tearing up affidavits, alleging discrimination they have made for the industrial relations board and the compliance officers.

Re-Elected

STANTON E. SMITH
Named President of Local 246, American Federation of Teachers, for Second Time.

MORE ABOUT TEACHERS

the schools, much good has been accomplished and it has been proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that with anything like a fair break the teachers' organization will be able to advance the cause of education immeasurably, as well as to correct obvious abuses in the conditions under which the members work.

A feature of the meeting last Saturday was an address by Miss Ruth Borchardt, national legislative chairman of the American Federation of Teachers, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. A luncheon following the session, a courtesy to the organization's guest, was enjoyed by the local executive board and a few invited guests.

President Smith's statement follows:

One year and a half finds the Teachers' union moving steadily forward, consolidating its position, broadening its program and urging many reforms which we feel will add greatly to the effectiveness and efficiency of the educational processes in our community.

Local 246 at this time is putting its efforts into three major channels: Higher standards for teachers, security of position (tenure) for efficient teachers, and a salary schedule which shall be both just and adequate. Underlying all of these and absolutely essential to their achievement is an informed public opinion as a result of which shall come sufficient financial support to put our public schools on a par with those in other sections of the country.

One of the most insidious forms of propaganda is brought to mind by the recently released report of the Hamilton County Taxpayers League in which it is stated that Hamilton county's schools are more expensive than any other comparable county of the state. This fact should be a source of pride rather than regret. It is only necessary to point out that the state of Tennessee ranks about forty-fourth among the states of the union in educational matters to illustrate that after all it may not be anything to brag about to say that we have the most expensive schools of any county in Tennessee. The teachers' union stands firmly on the position that the schools must go forward, not backward.

It seems to me that it is particularly regretful that the report of the Taxpayers' league has failed to mention the two basic causes for the pressure of taxation: (1) The inherent injustices of the property-tax system, and (2) the failure to equalize assessments. That this latter is not a figment of the imagination it is only necessary to refer to a statement to that effect by Mr. T. Pope Shepherd, former chairman of the equalization board, and at that time chairman at a citizens' meeting in the North Chattanooga junior high school last year.

The teachers' union stands for fairness in taxation. For that reason we are opposed to the imposition of a sales tax, but rather we favor (1) equalization of assessments to properly distribute the tax burden within the limitations of the property-tax, and (2) constitutional reform to permit the adoption of a state income tax. I often wonder why those who cry loudest for curtailment of education seldom raise their voices in favor of the two steps mentioned above.

The Federation of Teachers is building on a broad social program. We are trying to proceed with sanity and good judgment. We know that reforms come slowly. But we also know that if never initiated these reforms will never come about.

As president I am particularly grateful for the splendid group of officers elected to serve with me for the coming term. They are: G. M. Swingley, first vice-president; Lassie Munsey, second vice-president; Jean Pettitt, recording secretary; C. P. Parsons, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Stewart Rogers, financial secretary; Sam Harris, treasurer; Paul Morris, sergeant-at-arms. I am confident that these able teachers will guide Local 246 along a path of social vision and professional solidarity.

In addition to the above the following were elected delegates to the Trades and Labor council: W. P. Bales, C. C. Burgner, Lassie Munsey, Virginia Munsey, Mrs. Milton McCafferty, F. H. Trotter, Stanton E. Smith, Jeanette Edwards, Hazel Holland and George Bond.

Jean Jettit, Lassie Munsey and Stanton Smith, with G. Leslie Poe, alternate, were elected delegates to the convention of the American Federation of Teachers, to be held in Chicago in June.

The teachers' union is looking to the future. A year from today we hope to be able to point to many worthwhile advances.

Label Drive Big Opportunity For Trade Unionists

Washington, April 19.—"During the April union label campaign a great opportunity is afforded to all organizations to make their union emblems familiar to the buying public," John J. Manning, secretary-treasurer of the Union Label Trades Department, American Federation of Labor, told International Labor News Service.

"A victorious battle was fought to establish these union emblems," Mr. Manning continued, "and a constant watch must be kept so that none of them are unfamiliar to the purchasers of merchandise or services.

"Organizations that allow their union emblems to pass into disuse, betray a sacred trust and retard their members immeasurably. Such organizations become less militant and are prone to depend on the good offices of those outside their ranks to cure their industrial ills.
